them in the transaction, viz., a Phillip, and a Gainsborough. It appears that the defender was a collector of pictures, and had a number hung in his house in Troon, and that upon a day in December 1901 a gentleman called Bailie Watt brought the pursuer to the defender's house to see the collection; that when there the pursuer proposed to buy two of them, which, he says, were represented to him as being works of Phillip, and of Gainsborough, and that the defender was willing to sell them to him. The pursuer bought the two pictures, the Phillip at the price of £235, and the Gainsborough at the price of £50. The pursuer says, that the defender described them as "genuine works of art." Such words cannot in my opinion be held as amounting to a warranty that they were painted by the artists named; and that they were not, if used, intended to be a warranty, is made plain by what occurred in regard to the Gainsborough, to which I shall refer later on. The pursuer's evidence as to the interview is not at all satisfactory, and he himself admits that he has "no distinct recollection of what took place," which is scarcely compatible with anything distinct of the nature of warranty being either asked for or given. If anything distinct had been said on that matter, it is scarcely to be conceived that the pursuer should not remember it. But it is not a little strange to find that the pursuer's evidence in chief is limited entirely to the bare fact that when he paid the money for these two pictures, he received a receipt which is in these terms:—"Received from William Hyslop, Esq., Bank House, New Cumnock, Ayrshire, the sum of £285 by cheque for two pictures by John Phillip, R.A., and Thomas Gainsborough, R.A." It is only in the defender's cross-examination of the pursuer that any question is asked as to the way in which the transaction was gone into, and the above phrase "genuine works of art" is the only expression out of which any suggestion of warranty can be spelled from the pursuer's deposition. But that the expression could not have been understood, or have been intended to be understood, as a warranty, is made plain by Bailie Watt's evidence, from which it appears very distinctly that, as regards the Gainsborough, the defender not only did not warrant it as genuine, but spoke of it in terms inconsistent with any such warranty. For his evidence is quite clear to the effect that as regards the Gainsborough the defender spoke of it as a picture that was "a probable or a possible Gainsborough," which the defender bought for £45, and would let the pursuer have at £50, and he says he has no recollection of the "pursuer asking for a warranty, or of the defender volunteering it." This is very much against the pursuer's case as regards both pictures, for the pursuer's case is that the one was as much warranted as the other.

As regards the Phillip, nothing importing a warranty is stated by the pursuer. As in the case of the Gainsborough, his evidence is limited to proving the receipt. And here again it never occurred to Bailie Watt that any warranty was being asked or given, and he declares that none was given in his hearing. All that he heard was that it was spoken of as a Phillip, and was sold as such. That certainly is stronger than the case of the Gainsborough, but it seems to come far short of a warranty, where nothing definite pointing to a warranty was said, and all that was uttered may be held to be only an expression of belief.

But then it is said that the terms of the receipt are sufficient to constitute a warranty. The transaction was by that time complete. The terms on which it was entered into were not then settled, but were settled at the interview at which the purchase was made, and it would, I think, be an extreme stretch in interpretation to hold that words of description, necessary for identification of the articles, constituted a binding written warranty. As regards the Gainsborough the receipt must be taken along with the parole evidence, and if this is done, the receipt could not have been intended or received as a warranty. And this strikes at the whole contention that warranty was given by the receipts. I am of opinion that the pursuer's case fails both as regards the Phillip and the Gainsborough.

No. 155.
June 29, 1905.
Hyslop v. Shirlaw.

Shortly after this transaction it appears from the evidence that a dealer in London sent down two pictures to the defender, one said to be by Verbockhoeven, and the other by Tenkate, and that the defender not wishing to buy them, but thinking them good pictures, gave the pursuer the opportunity of buying them, which he did. That the defender praised these pictures and spoke of them as being in his belief genuine, there can be no doubt, but as regards these pictures the difficulty in the pursuer's way is, that the evidence indicates that the pictures never belonged to the defender, and that therefore when the pursuer puts his case on a sale by the defender to him he puts it on a ground which is not supported by the evidence. I think it is proved that the pursuer knew that they came from a London dealer, and that the defender was only acting between him and the dealer in the transaction. So clearly is this the case that it comes out that the dealer sent a small picture said to be a Vicat Cole to the defender as a commission in kind on the sale of the two pictures, and that the defender—as the transaction was with a friend—threw in the picture by Cole with the others, on the footing that in the circumstances he would not take a commission. If this is a sound view of the transaction, as I think it is, then the pursuer's case must fail.

It only remains to say that even if there had been a warranty as regards any of the pictures, there is ground for holding that the pursuer has lost his remedy by keeping the pictures for a year and a half. He could have found out all he knows now had he thought of taking reasonable diligence at the time. It is not a case in which positive proof is or can be expected. The genuineness is to be determined by expert opinion. Such opinion was open to him from the first, and I am unable to hold that when he kept the pictures without objection for so long he can be held to have timeously rejected them.

I am therefore of opinion on these grounds that the interlocutors appealed against should be recalled, and the defender assoilzied.

Lord Kyllachy.—The pursuer in this action seeks to rescind a contract, or, rather, two contracts, by which he bought from the defender certain pictures so far back as the months of January and February 1901. His case is that there was in each case a warranty—that is to say, a representation forming part of the contract—to the effect that the pictures were respectively genuine examples of Gainsborough, Verbockhoeven, John Phillip, and Tenkate; whereas the fact, as he alleges, was that the pictures were not genuine examples of those artists and were therefore disconform to contract. On that ground he claims to have validly rejected them in July 1902, and to be now entitled to rescind the contracts, and to recover from the defender the prices which he paid in 1901. And I suppose he would be entitled to that remedy, provided (1) that the representations were really made—made as matter of fact, and not merely as matter of belief; (2) that being so made, they were made parts of the contract—that is to say, amounted to warranties, or, speaking more correctly, to conditions of the contract; and (3) that the pursuer, having thus the right to reject and rescind, intimated his rejection within a reasonable time, as required both at common law and by the provisions of sec. 35 of the Sale of Goods Act of 1893.

As to the first two questions, which, between them, raise what may (for convenience) be called an issue of warranty, I confess I have had, up to a certain point, no great difficulty. I do not, I own, see how it is possible, upon the evidence, to hold that anything of the nature of warranty passed with reference to the "Gainsborough." The evidence of Bailie Watt—the friend of both parties—makes it, I think, clear (apart from the very moderate price) that the Gainsborough was represented simply as "a probable or possible Gainsborough of an early date." Again, as regards the two Dutch pictures, I think it is equally clear upon the correspondence that the pictures were recommended by the defender to the pursuer, not as pictures which he was himself selling, but simply as pictures which had been offered to him by a London dealer at certain prices, and the offer of which he passed on to the pursuer, not as matter of business or profit, but as matter of friendly obligement. It seems to me that the very nature of such a transaction excluded as between the parties any idea of warranty. Nor does it appear material, either as to these pictures or as to the Gainsborough, that the receipts granted to the pursuer described the pictures by the names of the supposed painters. That was, it seems to me, no more than a mode of identification, convenient and quite natural in the circumstances. So far, therefore, I have no particular difficulty.

But with respect to what is called the Phillip picture, there is, I think, a good deal of difficulty. I cannot, I confess, accept the pursuer's argument, that in this case, as in that of the other pictures, there was a warranty constituted by the terms of the receipts. As already explained, I think that in this matter the terms of the receipts have no particular significance. Neither am I able to agree with the Sheriff-principal in what seems to me to be the somewhat strained construction which he puts upon the correspondence between the parties which preceded the action. As to that I agree with the defender's argument founded on the explicit terms of the earlier letters. But, on the other hand, where a contract of sale has been, as here, made verbally, a warranty or condition may of course be constituted verbally, and proved like any other part of the contract. And to constitute a warranty no voces signatæ are necessary. A representation may be a warranty if it appears that it was so intended and understood; the question whether it was so or not being always a jury question depending upon the evidence. Therefore, looking to Mr Watt's evidence, I should have, I must say, difficulty in holding otherwise than that (in contradistinction to what passed as to the Gainsborough picture), the Phillip picture was represented and sold as a genuine Phillip, and was so in circumstances which made the representation a warranty. I do not say that the point is clear, but if it were necessary to decide it, I should incline to decide it in that way.

No. 155. June 29, 1905. Hyslop v. Shirlaw.

It is not, however, in my opinion necessary to decide whether as to this picture, or as to the others, there was or was not a warranty. For it seems to me sufficient to exclude the pursuer's case that he has failed to shew that his rejection of the several pictures was timeous, that is to say, made within a reasonable time. Prima facie a delay of eighteen months is unreasonable. That, I think, is conceded. Nor is it enough for the pursuer to say that he was entitled so long as he pleased to rely on the seller's description of the goods, and so to delay as long as he pleased the acceptance or rejection of the goods delivered under the contract. Such a doctrine, as applied either to the sale of specific goods or to a sale by description, would render nugatory the rule of law expressed in the 35th section of the Sale of Goods Act. Accordingly, it seems to me that the onus is on the pursuer to shew that he could not, by any examination reasonably possible, have discovered earlier the disconformity on which his rejection proceeded. And that onus I think the pursuer has failed to discharge. When he did reject—more than eighteen months after delivery—he did so as the result of an examination by experts, whom he might equally have consulted a week after his purchase. He is not, therefore, in the position of a person who has by accident discovered, perhaps years afterwards, something justifying rescission which could only have been discovered by accident. That is, of course, a different case altogether. The pursuer's rejection is founded, and his action is brought, on information which was available from the first; and in such circumstances it appears to me that he must be held to have accepted the pictures as satisfying the contract, and so to be barred from the remedy of rescission for which he concludes.

Lord Kincairney.—This is a case of interest and difficulty. The pursuer, Hyslop, sues for repayment of £285 and £172 paid by him to the defender, Shirlaw, for four pictures purporting to be by Gainsborough, Phillip, Verbockhoeven, and Tenkate, all of them artists of high repute. The sales were made by Shirlaw and the pictures delivered to Hyslop in January and February 1901. The pursuer, Hyslop, states that about July 1902 he discovered that the pictures sold to him were not the genuine works of these artists, and he has raised this action for repayment of the prices which he paid. I do not gather how he made that discovery.

The case of the Verbockhoeven was for reasons of convenience taken separately and first in the Sheriff Court, and by interlocutor of 2d August 1904 the Sheriff-substitute found, as the result of the proof, that the painting ascribed to Verbockhoeven was not painted by him, and that the pursuer, Hyslop, was therefore entitled to repayment of the price which he paid.

The parties came to an agreement that the case should be decided as if it had been ascertained that the pictures ascribed to Gainsborough, Phillip,

No. 155.

June 29, 1905.

Hyslop v. Shirlaw.

and Tenkate were not painted by them, and decree for payment of the sums concluded for was pronounced by the Sheriff.

I do not find it essential to decide any question of warranty.

The defender, Shirlaw, has appealed the whole case, and it has come before the Court on the footing that the pictures sold were not painted by the artists to whom they were ascribed. I think that amounts to an admission that the seller, Shirlaw, had in that particular failed to perform a material part of the contract, and that the buyer is therefore, as provided by section 2 of the Sale of Goods Act, entitled to reject the goods and treat the contract as repudiated if, but only if, he has rejected the goods within a reasonable time after delivery—in this case a period of a year and a half. The seller's right of rejection, and the limitation of that right, is expressed more fully in section 35. The case is peculiar in this respect, that it does not appear clearly how Hyslop's change of view as regards the pictures has come about, or that anything new has been discovered about the pictures since they were sold. It is not said that the painters who were their true authors are now known, nor that the pictures from which they have been copied (if they are copies) have been discovered. Only the reputation of the pictures appears to have altered. At one time the pictures were thought authentic; but their authenticity is now doubted or denied. The question is after all, so far as the proof shews, one of mere opinion and connoisseurship, and the one opinion might be as plausible as the other. But then the opinion that they are authentic has been for the purposes of this action abandoned, and they are to be taken as not being the pictures of the artists named. The matter amounts, so far as the proof which has been led discloses, only to this, that within the year and a half Mr Hyslop has changed his mind about the pictures, but not that he has got any new information about them. If that be the true state of the facts, and it seems all that the proof discloses, then I am inclined to think that it could not be said to be reasonable that the pursuer, Hyslop, should remain in this state of vacillation of mind for a year and a half and should then, without any new facts to go on, be allowed to go back on his bargain.

The case is troublesome certainly, but it does not seem necessary or indeed reasonable to impute dishonesty to either side, and I am of opinion on the whole that the pursuer has shewn no sufficient ground for getting rid of his bargain.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—I concur in the main ground of judgment, viz., that the pursuer's rejection of the pictures was non-timeous. But I am also disposed to agree in the view that there was no warranty as regards any of the pictures.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Lords having heard counsel for the parties on the defender's appeal, sustain the same, and recall, &c. . . . Find in fact (1) that the defender sold to the pursuer on 13th January 1901 two pictures which the pursuer alleges the defender warranted as the works of John Phillip, R.A., and Thomas Gainsborough respectively, at the sum of £235 for the former and £50 for the latter; (2) that the defender sold to the pursuer in February 1901 three other pictures which the pursuer alleges the defender warranted as the works of E. Verbockhoeven, H. Tenkate, and one signed 'V. C.,' for the price of £172 in all; (3) that in or about the beginning of July 1902 the pursuer, being satisfied that the said pictures were not in truth the works of the artists by whom it is alleged the defender warranted the pictures were painted, called upon the defender to repay the said sums of £285 and £172 respectively; (4) that the pursuer has failed to prove that the defender warranted the said pictures as the genuine works of the said artists; and (5) that the pursuer continued to possess the said pictures without making any complaint from the dates when the same were purchased until the month of July 1902: Therefore sustain the second and third pleas in law for the defender, and assoilzie him from the conclusions of the action, and decern: Find the pursuer liable in expenses in this and in the inferior Court, and remit the same to the Auditor to tax and to report."

No. 155.

June 29, 1905. Hyslop v. Shirlaw.

A. R. STEEDMAN, Solicitor—F. J. MARTIN, W.S.—Agents.

No. 156.

June 29, 1905. Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

PARISH COUNCIL OF THE PARISH OF GREENOCK, Pursuers (Respondents).—Younger, K.C.—Spens.

PARISH COUNCIL OF THE GOVAN COMBINATION, Defenders (Appellants).—Sol.-Gen. Salvesen—Deas.

Poor—Settlement—Derivative Settlement—Illegitimate Minor—Mother with Derivative Settlement.—Andrew M., an illegitimate child, was born in the parish of Govan. A year after the child's birth the mother married, and through her husband acquired a settlement in the parish of Greenock. When the child was eight years old the mother died. Down to the date of the mother's death the child had lived in the parish of Greenock with his mother and her husband, but after her death the child ceased to live with the husband. Two years after attaining puberty the child became chargeable.

In a question between Greenock and Govan, held that the mother having died while the child was still in pupillarity, and the child not having become chargeable until after attaining puberty, the settlement in Greenock possessed by the mother at her death, being a settlement acquired by her through marriage, and not by her own residence, did not enure to the child when he attained puberty; and consequently that the child's settlement was in Govan, the parish of his birth.

Hay v. Thomson, 18 D. 510; St Cuthbert's v. Cramond, 1 R. 174; Caldwell v. Dempster, 10 R. 1263; Primrose v. Milne, 17 R. 512; Wallace v. Caldwell, 22 R. 43, distinguished.

Poor—Pauperisation—Maintenance by School Board of child in Blind Asylum—Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. cap. 43).—The maintenance of a child in a blind asylum by a school board, under the Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890, has not the effect of pauperising the child.

2D DIVISION. Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

IN November 1904 the Parish Council of the Parish of Greenock brought an action in the Sheriff Court at Glasgow against the Parish Council of the Govan Combination for decree ordaining the defenders to relieve the pursuers of advances made by the pursuers on account of a pauper named Andrew M'Ilwraith M'Alpine.

The facts are set forth in the following joint minute of admissions:—

"1. That Andrew M'Ilwraith M'Alpine was born on 21st June

No. 156.

June 29, 1905.

Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

1887 at 410 Mathieson Street, Glasgow, in defenders' parish, and is the illegitimate son of Elizabeth M'Ilwraith, who was born at Cullibacky, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1862, and on 31st August 1888 married John M'Alpine, a carpenter, residing in Cardwell Bay, Gourock.

"2. That the said Elizabeth M'Ilwraith or M'Alpine and the said John M'Alpine resided as man and wife in Greenock down till 1895, and that in September of that year the said Elizabeth M'Ilwraith or M'Alpine died in Greenock Infirmary, having through her husband, the stepfather of the pauper, a residential settlement in pursuers' parish.

"3. That the said Andrew M'Ilwraith or M'Alpine resided in family with his mother and stepfather down till the date of his mother's death, thereafter in Tignabruaich for one year and ten months, and thereafter in his grandmother's house in Drumfrochar Road, Greenock, for two years and six months.

"4. That in January 1900 Andrew M'Ilwraith M'Alpine was admitted to the Glasgow Blind Asylum, and was maintained there by the Greenock School Board in terms of the Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890,* until June 1903, when he reached sixteen years of age.

"5. That the advances specified in pursuers' account produced are for subsequent maintenance, and are correct, and that pauper was at time of relief a suitable object."

The pursuers pleaded;—The pursuers having made said advances on behalf of the pauper, and the defenders' parish being the pauper's parish of settlement, the defenders are bound to relieve the pursuers of said advances, and decree should therefore be granted as craved, with expenses.

---

* The Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. cap. 43), enacts:—

Sec. 3. "If the parent of a blind or deaf-mute child between five and sixteen years of age is from poverty unable to pay for the education of such child as hereinafter mentioned, it shall be the duty of the school board of the parish or burgh in which such parent resides to provide out of the school fund, at rates to be approved by the Scotch Education Department, for the efficient elementary education of such child in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and for his industrial training either in a school belonging to such school board or in some other school or institution approved by the Scotch Education Department; and where necessary the school board shall be bound to provide for the boarding of the child at some place approved by the school board, and for the transit of such child to and from such school or institution or place, at rates to be approved of by the Scotch Education Department.

"Provided that" inter alia,

"(1) Where a school board making any payment in pursuance of this section is not the school board of the parish in which the parent of any such child as aforesaid has his legal settlement in terms of the" Poor-Law (Scotland) Act, 1845, "it shall be entitled to relief in respect of any such payment against the school board of the parish in which such parent has his legal settlement as aforesaid."

Sec. 7. "(1) The parent of a blind or deaf-mute child shall not by reason of any payment made under this Act in respect of the child be deprived of any franchise, right, or privilege, or be subject to any disability or disqualification."

No. 156.

June 29, 1905. Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

The defenders pleaded;—(1) The pauper's settlement not being in the defenders' parish, they are not liable for relief, and are entitled to be assoilzied, with expenses. (2) The pauper having a derivative residential settlement in the pursuers' parish by virtue of his mother's settlement in that parish, and they being accordingly liable for his maintenance, the defenders are entitled to be assoilzied, with expenses.

On 18th January 1905 the Sheriff-substitute (Davidson) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds that Andrew M'Ilwraith M'Alpine was born on 21st June 1887 in the parish of Govan; that he was the illegitimate son of Elizabeth M'Ilwraith; that the said Elizabeth M'Ilwraith married on 31st August 1888 John M'Alpine; that she and her son resided with the said John M'Alpine in Greenock thenceforward until 1895, when she died; that the said Andrew M'Ilwraith had become chargeable to the pursuers' parish, and that the sum sued for had been expended by them for his maintenance: Finds that the settlement of the said pauper is the parish of Govan, and that the defenders are liable to repay to the pursuers the said disbursements: Therefore finds the defenders liable in the sum sued for."

Govan appealed, and argued;—(1) In the matter of poor-law settlement an illegitimate child stood towards its mother in the same position as a legitimate child stood towards its father. A legitimate pupil child took its father's settlement and it retained that settlement, being the father's residential settlement, after reaching puberty, until it lost it in terms of the Poor-Law Acts.[1] The rule was the same with reference to illegitimate children, the settlement of the mother being substituted for that of the father.[2] Craig v. Greig and Macdonald[3] did not lay it down as a general rule that a child took its own birth settlement if its father had died while it was in pupillarity; all that Craig v. Greig and Macdonald[3] decided was that where a father died while his child was in pupillarity, and the father had not at the time of his death a residential settlement, the child on attaining puberty took its own birth settlement, not its father's birth settlement. Greig v. Ross,[4] which related to the settlement of an illegitimate child, appeared to sanction the view that Craig v. Greig and Macdonald[3] decided that a legitimate child took its own birth settlement on attaining puberty if only its father was then dead, but if that was the meaning of Greig v. Ross,[4] it was not supported by Craig v. Greig and Macdonald,[3] and was inconsistent with the cases on which the defenders founded, particularly St Cuthbert's v. Cramond,[5] which did not appear to have been cited in Greig v. Ross,[4] and was in terms repeated in Simpson v. Miles and Auld.[6] Greig v. Adamson and Craig[7] did not decide anything as to the

---

[1] St Cuthbert's v. Cramond, Nov. 12, 1873. 1 R. 174; Simpson v. Miles and Auld, June 6, 1883, 10 R. 928.

[2] Hay v. Thomson, Feb. 6, 1856, 18 D. 510, 28 Scot. Jur. 191; Greig v. Young, June 21, 1878, 5 R. 977; Caldwell v. Dempster, July 20, 1883, 10 R. 1263; Primrose v. Milne, Feb. 27, 1890, 17 R. 512; Wallace v. Caldwell, Nov. 7, 1894, 22 R. 43.

[3] July 18, 1863, 1 Macph. 1172, 35 Scot. Jur. 670.

[4] Feb. 10, 1877, 4 R. 465.

[5] 1 R. 174.

[6] 10 R. 928.

[7] March 2, 1865, 3 Macph. 575, 37 Scot. Jur. 203.

No. 156.

June 29, 1905.

Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

settlement of the children there.[1] On a consideration of the authorities as a whole, the settlement of the pauper here was in Greenock, the parish of his mother's settlement, not in Govan, the parish of his birth.

(2) Payments on account of a child under the Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890, were payments of parochial relief.[2] Sec. 7 of the Act saved the parent from disqualification, but did not save the child, and as the child here had been received into the asylum under the Act when he was still in pupillarity, and when, consequently, his settlement was undoubtedly his mother's derivative settlement, that settlement, in any view, remained its settlement after it reached puberty.

Argued for Greenock;—(1) Prima facie a pauper's settlement was in the parish of his birth. The policy of keeping the members of a family together had introduced the doctrine of derivative settlements, in accordance with which children while in pupillarity, if legitimate, had the settlement of their father, and if illegitimate, that of their mother; but when a child emerged from pupillarity it became a poor-law persona with a capacity for acquiring a settlement for itself, and where the parent had died while the child was in pupillarity in dubio the primary rule applied, and the child on reaching puberty reverted to its own birth settlement.[4] It had no doubt been held that a derivative settlement which a pupil had at the date of his father's death in the parish of the father's residence was not lost in consequence of the child reaching puberty.[5] The reason of that rule was that a father acquired a residential settlement not only for himself but for his family. Perhaps the same rule applied where the mother of an illegitimate pupil had herself acquired a residential settlement, although she died before the child attained puberty;[6] but there was neither principle nor authority for extending the rule to a case like the present where the mother's settlement had been acquired not by her own residence but through her marriage, and she had died when the child was only eight years old. The husband of a woman acquired a settlement only for himself and his own family, and not for her children, whether by a former marriage or illegitimate.[7] Doubtless, while the children in such cases were in pupillarity their mother's settlement, although derived from her husband, would be their settlement, but the reasons for the exception to the primary rule in favour of the birth settle-

---

[1] Parish Council of Shotts v. Parish Councils of Bothwell and Rutherglen, Nov. 24, 1896, 24 R. 169, per Lord Adam at p. 171.

[2] Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. cap. 43), sec. 2; Education (Scotland) Act, 1872 (35 and 36 Vict. cap. 62), secs. 43 and 44; Poor-Law (Scotland) Act, 1898 (61 and 62 Vict. cap. 21), sec. 1.

[3] Adamson v. Barbour, May 30, 1853, 1 Macq. 376.

[4] Craig v. Greig and Macdonald, 1 Macph. 1172; Greig v. Adamson and Craig, 3 Macph. 575; M'Lennan v. Waite, June 28, 1872, 10 Macph. 908, 44 Scot. Jur. 496; Ferrier v. Kennedy, Feb. 8, 1873, 11 Macph. 402, 45 Scot. Jur. 274; Greig v. Ross, 4 R. 465.

[5] St Cuthbert's v. Cramond, 1 R. 174; Simpson v. Miles and Auld, 10 R. 928.

[6] Wallace v. Caldwell, 22 R. 43.

[7] Beattie v. Mackenna and Wallace, March 8, 1878, 5 R. 737; Parish Council of Shotts v. Parish Councils of Bothwell and Rutherglen, 24 R. 169.

No. 156.

June 29, 1905.

Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

ment entirely failed in the case of an illegitimate child whose mother had died while it was in pupillarity and it had reached puberty.

(2) Maintenance of a child in an asylum under the Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890, did not pauperise either the parent or the child. The maintenance was given out of the school-rates, not out of the poor-rates; and poverty in the sense of the Poor Law was not the ground on which the maintenance was given.

At advising,—

LORD KYLLACHY.—The pauper in this case was born in the parish of Govan in the year 1887. He was the illegitimate child of a woman who died when he was eight years old. At the time of her death she had no residential settlement—that is to say, no settlement obtained by her own residence. But she had a derivative settlement in the parish of Greenock, obtained by her marriage subsequent to the pauper's birth to a man who had a residential settlement in Greenock. The pauper himself in January 1900, while still a pupil, was admitted into the Glasgow Blind Asylum, and was maintained there for some years by the Greenock School Board under the provisions of the Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890. But (apart from that circumstance, as to which a question arises,) it is common ground that he did not become an object of parochial relief until September 1903, when, being then a minor, he applied for relief to the parish of Greenock.

The present question arises between Govan as the pauper's parish of birth, and Greenock the parish of his mother's derivative settlement. It is not suggested that he had acquired any residential settlement for himself.

The first point to be determined is whether the pauper's admission to the Blind Asylum while still a pupil amounted to receipt of parochial relief. If it did, there is no doubt that, having become chargeable during pupillarity, and having since continued chargeable, his mother's settlement, although derivative and acquired simply by marriage, was his parish of settlement. For during pupillarity an illegitimate child takes its mother's settlement however acquired; and parochial relief having been once obtained, there can be no change of settlement while it continues.

It is not, however, in my opinion possible to hold that the reception of this pupil child into the Blind Asylum made him a pauper. That question depends on the construction of the Blind and Deaf-Mute Children Act of 1890; and it does not appear to me that payments out of the school fund, such as are there provided, had the effect of pauperising either the child or its parent.

It must therefore be taken that the pauper attained puberty without having become chargeable under the Poor Law. And therefore the question is, what settlement did he take when he attained puberty? Did he retain his mother's derivative settlement? or did he, on attaining puberty, take a settlement in his own parish of birth?

The authorities on this branch of the Poor Law are not perhaps quite harmonious, but there are some propositions which are I think clear,—(1) An illegitimate child stands towards his mother's settlement in the same relation as a legitimate child stands towards his father's settlement. (2) Up to puberty a legitimate child takes his father's settlement whatever it is, and however constituted. (3) Similarly an illegitimate child takes up to puberty his mother's settlement, whatever it is and however constituted; whether by residence, or birth, or marriage. (4) On the other hand, at puberty a legitimate child takes his father's residential settlement—that is to say, the settlement, if any, acquired by his father's own residence, and retains that settlement until it is lost in the manner provided by the 76th section of the statute. (5) Similarly an illegitimate child takes at puberty any residential settlement acquired by its mother—that is to say, any settlement acquired by its mother's own residence, and retains that settlement until lost in terms of the statute.

The first of these propositions has never been questioned. The second and third have at least been long settled, particularly by the cases of Hay v. Thomson,[1] Caldwell v. Dempster,[2] and Primrose v. Milne.[3] The fourth and fifth propositions have been the subject of controversy; but may be held as now firmly established as regards legitimate children by the case of St Cuthbert's v. Cramond,[4] and as regards illegitimate children by the case of Wallace v. Caldwell.[5]

The appellant in the present case seeks to deduce from the principles thus established a further proposition which they certainly do not cover, and which is this—that an illegitimate child not merely takes, before puberty, his mother's settlement whatever it is, and, after puberty, his mother's residential settlement if acquired by herself, but also takes, even after puberty, his mother's settlement however acquired, including, as in the present case, a derivative settlement acquired by her through marriage. In other words, the suggestion is that an illegitimate child takes after puberty his mother's settlement whatever it is, just as he would have done if he had become chargeable before puberty.

Now, I am of opinion that there are no grounds in principle or social expediency to justify such an extension of the doctrine of St Cuthbert's v. Cramond,[4] and of Wallace v. Caldwell,[5] or (if it is preferred to put it) of the doctrine of Hay v. Thomson,[1] Caldwell v. Dempster,[2] and Primrose v. Milne.[3] These cases are all themselves exceptional. They all involve modifications on grounds of social expediency of what is I think the undoubted primary rule, viz., that expressed by Lord Barcaple in the case of Craig v. Greig, where he says,—"The primary rule or rather principle in this matter is, that every pauper, in the widest sense of that word, in which it means every person, old or young, who must be supported by a parish, ought to be supported by his own parish—that is, the parish of his birth or of his own residential settlement." That is the undoubted primary rule, as I have said; and although, as Lord Barcaple goes on to point out, there have been modifications made upon it by way of exception, no one has yet, so far as I know, proposed to make the further modification, the further exception which is suggested here—an exception and modification to the

[1] 18 D. 510.
[2] 10 R. 1263.
[3] 17 R. 512.
[4] 1 R. 174.
[5] 22 R. 43.
[6] 1 Macph. 1172, at p. 1191.

No. 156.
June 29, 1905.
Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

effect that after his mother's death and after his own puberty an illegitimate child takes the settlement of his stepfather—the settlement of his stepfather as possessed at his mother's death.

I am not myself prepared to sanction such a result, and therefore I am on the whole matter of opinion that the pauper takes his own birth settlement, and that the interlocutor of the Sheriff should be affirmed.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—I agree. I am of opinion that the settlement of this pauper is in the parish of his birth.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—The case for Govan Combination involves the rather startling proposition that when a lad of sixteen, eight years after his mother's death, becomes a proper object of parochial relief, the burden of maintaining him falls not on the parish of his birth, but on the parish in which his mother had at the time of her death acquired a residential settlement through marriage.

The primary ground of liability, as explained by Lord Barcaple in Craig v. Greig,[1] is that every pauper entitled to relief ought to be supported by his own parish, i.e., the parish of his birth or the parish of his own residential settlement. But the course of decision—mainly induced by certain considerations of social duty and humanity—has superimposed upon that primary ground of liability certain modifications, which are now quite as firmly fixed as the original rule itself. Thus, the wife of a living husband and the pupil (or unemancipated) lawful children of a living father follow his settlement. Nay, more, a settlement thus acquired through a father is not lost by a pupil child after the father's death by the child's attainment of puberty, but is retained in his own right until he loses it by his own failure to fulfil the statutory conditions—St Cuthbert's v. Cramond.[2] In the case of a bastard similar considerations have led to the rule being fixed that during pupillarity the child's settlement is that of its mother to the exclusion even of the parish of its own birth—Caldwell v. Dempster,[3] and that that settlement, however derived, is not lost even by the death of the mother, the child being still a pupil at the date of chargeability—Primrose v. Milne.[4] The only case cited to us in which a residential settlement derived from the mother was held to be still available to the bastard after pupillarity was that of Wallace v. Caldwell,[5] but that was a case in which the settlement had been not merely acquired by the mother's own residence (as distinguished from a settlement derived through marriage), but the residence had been continued in the same parish by both mother and son for some years after the bastard's attainment of puberty.

The argument for Govan has for its foundation the theory that in the case of a bastard a settlement derived from the mother is attended by the same consequences as the settlement derived by a legitimate child from its father, and in particular that it may continue after the child's attainment of puberty, even when it was derived through the mother's marriage and the

[1] 1 Macph. 1172, at p. 1191.
[2] 1 R. 174.
[3] 10 R. 1263.
[4] 17 R. 512.
[5] 22 R. 43.

No. 156.

June 29, 1905.
Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council.

mother herself is dead. I think this is an unwarrantable extension of the doctrine applied in Primrose v. Milne [1] and Wallace v. Caldwell.[2] The analogy seems to me to fail when the settlement attributed to the bastard after puberty is not the mother's own settlement, but is a settlement derived from a husband with whom, of course, the bastard never had any connection. There is no decision which requires us to carry the theory of derivative settlement so far, and the reasons which have induced the Court to adopt it do not apply to the present case.

I would only add that I do not think that the education afforded to M'Alpine at and after January 1900 under the Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890, had the effect of making him a pauper while he was still a pupil.

I am therefore of opinion, with the Sheriff-substitute and your Lordships, that Govan is liable.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—The case for Govan is that the rule, applied in the case of legitimate children, whereby the residential settlement of the father rules, even after puberty, till the children acquire another settlement, must logically be applied to the settlement of the mother in the case of a bastard where she is dead and had at her death a derivative settlement through her marriage. I do not think that there is any ground for so holding. The rules in regard to such cases are rules of policy modifying the law of birth settlement.

I agree that there is no ground for carrying the modification to the extreme that would be the result of giving effect to the contention of Govan parish.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Dismiss the appeal, and affirm the interlocutor" [of 18th January 1905] "appealed against; of new find that the settlement of the pauper is in the parish of Govan, and that the defenders are liable" as sued for.

CADELL, WILSON, & MORTON, W.S.—MACKENZIE, INNES, & LOGAN, W.S.—Agents.

No. 157.

July 1, 1905.
Green v. Reid & Co.

GEORGE ALEXANDER OAG GREEN, Pursuer (Respondent).—Watt, K.C.—D. Anderson.
PETER REID & COMPANY, Defenders (Reclaimers).—Sol.-Gen. Salvesen—Hunter.

Reparation—Slander—Newspaper—Innuendo—Criticism of Management of Hospital Funds—Action of damages by Secretary.—A newspaper published in Wick contained an anonymous letter to the editor to the following effect:—"Is there any way by which the public can ascertain how the money is spent in the management of the B. Hospital? So long as Sir A. B. was paying the whole bill himself some people argued that he had a perfect right to squander a lot of it on the retainers who form his Bridge Street bodyguard . . . The position is now somewhat different. The public are now being appealed to for assistance. . . . Appeals have been made by the secretary to all the churches in town and county. . . . As there has been such a very strong flavour of jobbery about the institution . . . would it not be fair . . . that a statement should be produced

[1] 17 R. 512. [2] 22 R. 43.

No. 157.

July 1, 1905.
Green v. Reid & Co.

shewing how the money is being spent on the hospital? How are the church collections being disposed of?"

Sir A. B., mentioned in the letter, was member for the Northern Burghs, of which Wick was one. He had founded the B. Hospital, and had for a time supported it entirely out of his own means. The secretary and treasurer of the hospital was G., a solicitor in Wick, who was also Sir A. B.'s political agent, with an office in Bridge Street, Wick.

G. brought an action against the publishers of the newspaper for damages for slander alleged to be contained in the letter. He innuendoed the letter to mean that he was guilty of dishonest conduct in the application of the funds of the hospital, and was a person unfit to be entrusted with the management of public funds.

Held (rev. judgment of Lord Ardwall) that the letter would not support the innuendo, and issue disallowed.

2D DIVISION.
Lord Ardwall.

IN the issue for 24th February 1905 of the John o' Groat Journal newspaper, Wick, there appeared a letter to the editor in the following terms:—

"The Bignold Hospital Management.

"Sir,—Is there any way by which the public can ascertain how the money is spent in the management of the Bignold Hospital? So long as Sir Arthur Bignold was paying the whole bill himself some people argued that he had a perfect right to squander a lot of it on the retainers who form his Bridge Street bodyguard, although others maintained that, as he represented all the electors equally, there should be an equal division of the spoil among them.

"But whatever might be said about that, the position is now somewhat different. The public are now being appealed to for assistance. Although the hospital has been named after the gentleman, who is thereby advertising himself so assiduously in his own newspaper and elsewhere, an attempt is being made to save his pocket. Appeals have been made by the secretary to all the churches in town and county to raise money for it, while concerts and other means are being used to raise money for such a good object.

"Church-goers and others have already subscribed. A good object will always raise money. But as there has been such a very strong flavour of jobbery about the institution from the beginning, would it not be fair and right, seeing that the public are being called on to assist, that a statement should be produced shewing how the money is being spent on the hospital? How are the church collections being disposed of? The public surely has a right to know that. Such a statement is, I think, necessary to gain the confidence of the subscribing public.—I am, &c. A SUBSCRIBER."

Sir Arthur Bignold, mentioned in this letter, was member of Parliament for the Northern District of Burghs, of which Wick was one.

In March 1905 George Alexander Oag Green, solicitor, Wick, and secretary and treasurer of the Bignold Cottage Hospital, Wick, brought an action against Peter Reid & Company, proprietors and publishers of the John o' Groat Journal, and against Ernest Buik, sole partner of the firm, concluding for decree for £1000 as damages for slander alleged to be contained in the above letter.

The pursuer set forth the letter, and also referred to a leading article in the issue of the John o' Groat Journal for 3d March 1905—(Cond. 3) " . . . In said leading article the defenders take pains to exonerate from blame both the board of managers and the medical and nursing staff. As the pursuer is the only other official connected with the hospital, and the management and care of the funds are practically under his charge, the said leading article makes it most plain and pointed that the charges of jobbery and dishonesty and dishonourable conduct contained in said letter are meant to apply only to the pursuer. The pursuer's office is situated in Bridge Street, Wick, and the reference in the letter of 24th February to Sir Arthur Bignold's retainer forming his Bridge Street bodyguard clearly applies to the pursuer, who is the only person in Bridge Street who is closely associated with Sir Arthur Bignold, and is Sir Arthur's agent in Wick."

(Cond. 4) The said letter and leading article "were written of and concerning the pursuer, and falsely, maliciously, and calumniously represent that the funds of the Bignold Cottage Hospital have been diverted from their proper purpose, and improperly applied for the personal benefit of the pursuer, that the pursuer has been concerned in perpetrating jobbery in connection with the affairs of the said hospital, whereby he has been personally benefited at the expense of the funds of the hospital." The said letter and leading article "further represent that the pursuer has improperly appropriated to his own uses the funds of said hospital, and that, while subscriptions have been canvassed for and received from the public ostensibly for a public object, these have been applied for the personal gain of the pursuer." The said letter and leading article "also represent that no regular or proper accounts have been kept, and that, for the purpose of concealing the personal benefits accruing to himself therefrom, the true state of the funds and their application have been improperly withheld by the pursuer from the public or those who have a right or interest to know, and that the appropriation of the funds to his own uses has thereby been facilitated." By said letter and leading article "the defenders have represented the pursuer as guilty of dishonest and dishonourable conduct, and as one who is unworthy to be entrusted with the management of public funds, and who improperly and dishonourably uses the funds of a public charitable institution, and also funds subscribed by the public for its objects, for his own personal aggrandisement and pecuniary benefit."

(Cond. 6) "The said statements published by the defenders are of and concerning the pursuer, and were understood by the whole community to refer to him. They have obtained wide currency in the district in which the pursuer lives and carries on business as a solicitor, and they have caused great injury to his character and reputation." The statements in the said letter and leading article, "which was one of a long series of articles reflecting on pursuer, were maliciously made by the defenders for the purpose of holding the pursuer up to public contempt and ridicule, and were calculated to do so, and had that effect." (Cond. 7) "The said statements . . . are entirely false, and there is not, nor ever has been, the least ground for the unfounded charges made against the pursuer. The defenders were well aware in making said charges that they were without foundation. . . ." (Cond. 8) "The Bignold Cottage Hospital was gifted to trustees for behoof of the community of Wick and district by Sir Arthur Bignold, M.P. for the Northern Burghs, by deed of trust and gift, dated 28th August 1900. . . . By said deed of trust and gift it was provided that the pursuer should be appointed clerk to the trustees at such salary as they may fix, and that it should be the duty of the clerk to keep the minutes of the trustees and also to keep

No. 157.
July 1, 1905.
Green v. Reid & Co.

a correct account of all moneys received and disbursed, and at the annual meeting in December that he should submit his accounts" to the trustees for audit. "On said accounts being passed and certified, it was further provided that the clerk should deliver an abstract thereof to the editor or publisher of each newspaper in Wick or Pulteneytown, and that he should give access to the book of annual accounts to any of the public desiring to see the same at reasonable hours and free of charge. . . . Under said appointment the pursuer, in terms of the deed of gift, combines the offices both of clerk and treasurer." The pursuer then averred that he had hitherto not received any remuneration for his services. "Since the institution of the hospital a report of the managers has been annually printed and circulated among the public. This annual report has appended to it a printed abstract of the treasurer's accounts as audited. In terms of the directions of the trust-deed these reports and abstracts of accounts have been sent annually to the publishers of the newspapers in Wick and Pulteneytown, including the defenders. The foregoing facts were all within the knowledge of the defenders, but they have, in pursuance of their malicious design to injure the pursuer, wilfully ignored them." The pursuer further averred that the defenders had refused to disclose the name of the writer of the letter. (Cond. 9) "The letter . . . is only one of a series in which the defenders have sought to injure the pursuer's reputation, and it is believed and averred that it is not a bona fide letter received by them from a member of the public, but was composed and written by the said Ernest Buik, or by some member of his staff, or by some other person specially instructed by him to do so."

The defenders replied;—(Ans. 4) "Explained that said letter deals with a matter of public interest. It correctly sets forth what is matter of fact, and the observations and questions about the hospital constitute perfectly fair and legitimate comment and inquiry. No reflection upon the personal character of the pursuer is made or intended to be made."

The pursuer pleaded, inter alia;—(2) The defender having slandered the pursuer as condescended on, the pursuer is entitled to damages.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) No relevant case. (2) The statements contained in the letter complained of not being of and concerning the pursuer, and not bearing or being capable of bearing the innuendo proposed by the pursuer, the action ought to be dismissed. (3) The defenders ought to be assoilzied in respect that the letter complained of deals with a matter of public interest, and contains only fair criticism of what had occurred in connection therewith.

On 1st June 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Ardwall) pronounced an interlocutor allowing an issue founded on the letter of 24th February 1905, and disallowing an issue founded on the leading article of 3d March 1905.*

---

* "OPINION.—I must say that I have difficulty in allowing an issue in this case, and I am clear that the pursuer is not entitled to an issue upon the article complained of, and therefore I disallow the second issue.

"With regard to the letter, were it not for the statements in the opening paragraph I do not think I would be disposed to grant an issue on it either. But the letter commences with a statement that, at a former period when the Bignold Hospital funds were all provided by Sir Arthur Bignold, these

No. 157.

July 1, 1905.

Green v. Reid & Co.

As the pursuer acquiesced in the Lord Ordinary's judgment disallowing the second issue, it is unnecessary here to notice that issue further.

The issue allowed by the Lord Ordinary was in the following terms:—"Whether the defenders printed and published in the John o' Groat Journal newspaper of 24th February 1905 the letter signed 'A Subscriber,' printed in Schedule I. hereto annexed, and whether the said letter or part thereof is of and concerning the pursuer, and falsely and calumniously represents that the pursuer had been guilty of dishonest conduct in having improperly applied the funds of a public charitable institution for his own personal benefit, and is thus a person who is unfit to be entrusted with the management of public funds—to the loss, injury, and damage of the pursuer? Damages laid at £1,000."

The defenders reclaimed.

After the hearing on the reclaiming note had proceeded some length, Watt, K.C., for the pursuer, stated that he did not maintain that the letter of 24th February would support the innuendo that the pursuer had been guilty of personal dishonesty by appropriating to his own uses funds belonging to the Hospital, and as the issue as it stood was ambiguous he moved for leave to lodge an amended issue. The hearing was accordingly adjourned.

Thereafter the pursuer lodged the following amended issue:—"Whether," &c., "falsely and calumniously represents that the pursuer was guilty of dishonest conduct in the application of the funds of the Bignold Cottage Hospital, and is a person who is unfit to be entrusted with the management of public funds, to the loss, injury, and damage of the pursuer?"

Argued for the defenders and reclaimers;—The pursuer's case was that the letter of 24th February meant that he had been guilty of personal dishonesty in the management of the Hospital funds; there were suggestions on record that the defenders had in their newspaper been persistently holding the pursuer up to public ridicule and contempt, but the pursuer did not ask for an issue on that ground. The letter of 24th February did not make, or imply, a charge of dishonesty against anyone, and certainly not against the pursuer. The only direct reference to the pursuer was that, as the secretary of the Hospital, he had sent out appeals to the Churches for subscriptions; funds were squandered upon the Bridge Street bodyguard (Bridge Street being the site of the pursuer's office, which is the headquarters of the Unionist party in Wick); and further, that this bodyguard divided the 'spoil' amongst themselves without communicating any of it to the other electors; then the letter goes on to say that that was the state of matters then, but that now it is different, and the letter may be so construed as to suggest that instead of only Sir Arthur Bignold's money being squandered, it is the money of the public that is now being treated in that way and possibly is forming part of the spoil of the Bridge Street bodyguard. Accordingly, the writer of the letter calls for a statement shewing 'how the money is spent on the Hospital,' and 'how the church collections are being disposed of.' Of course calling for a full statement of the accounts of a charity is quite a proper and reasonable thing to do, but when we look into the reason why the statement is being called for, I think that the letter may be viewed as libellous. The innuendo proposed by the pursuer may be a little strained, but he undertakes to satisfy a jury that it sets forth the meaning of the letter, and I do not see my way to refuse an issue."

---

No. 157.
July 1, 1904.
Green v. Reid & Co.

but there was nothing dishonest about that; the pursuer in sending out the appeals was simply obeying the instructions of the Hospital trustees. The Bridge Street bodyguard was the Liberal Unionist Club, whose clubhouse was in Bridge Street, and the "squandering" referred to at the beginning of the letter meant, as everybody in Wick would understand, that the contracts in connection with the building of the Hospital had been given to Sir Arthur Bignold's political supporters exclusively. The writer of the letter went on to say that while the public might have no right to complain of that so long as it was Sir Arthur's money that was being spent, it was a different matter now that the Hospital was supported by public subscriptions. That was a perfectly legitimate line of criticism to take in a matter of public interest in the locality.

Argued for the pursuer;—The letter was capable of bearing the innuendo proposed, viz., that the pursuer was guilty of dishonesty in the application of the Hospital funds, and was a person who was unfit to be entrusted with the management of public funds—not, that was to say, of dishonesty in the sense of dishonestly appropriating to himself funds belonging to the Hospital, but of (in the language of the letter itself) "jobbery," which meant official corruption—using a public office to gain some private end. The fair meaning of the letter was that the writer intended to accuse someone of dishonesty in this sense. The first paragraph plainly meant—the defenders did not dispute it—that the funds of the Hospital had, at first, at all events, been used to advance Sir Arthur Bignold's political influence in the burgh, and the writer proceeded to suggest that the money was being used in the same way now. No doubt it was put as a question, but a question might, and here did, mean a slander. It was, at all events, for a jury to determine whether the question was a bona fide one. It was said that there was nothing to shew that the writer had the pursuer specially in view. That also was a matter for a jury. The pursuer was Sir Arthur's political agent in the burgh, and he was also the secretary and treasurer of the Hospital. He certainly therefore was the person through whom the "squandering" on the Bridge Street bodyguard alleged in the first paragraph of the letter took place; and if the latter part of the letter meant that this squandering was being continued, but with public funds and not with Sir Arthur's only, that simply meant that the pursuer was using his public official position as secretary and treasurer of the Hospital to advance his private ends as Sir Arthur's agent. The whole tenor of the letter, and especially the reference to the appeals to the churches sent out by "the secretary," followed by the question as to how the church collections were being disposed of, would make it plain to anyone in Wick that it was the pursuer and no one else who was attacked. Indeed the defenders themselves had made that plain, for in their leading article of 3d March they had exonerated everybody connected with the management of the Hospital except the pursuer. The defenders argued that the letter did not go beyond the limits of fair criticism, but if the pursuer's averments were well founded the letter was really a part of a systematic attack on the pursuer personally under the cover of a criticism of the Hospital management.

Lord Kyllachy.—I do not think it necessary to say much in proposing to your Lordships that this issue should be refused. The innuendo now submitted to us does not appear to differ at all materially from that which we considered the other day. It rests, like the latter, on the theory that the letter complained of imputes dishonesty to the pursuer in connection with the application of these Hospital funds. Now, it does not appear to me that the letter can reasonably be read as imputing such dishonesty to the pursuer. I cannot so read it; nor can I conceive a jury doing so. At least I should not consider they acted reasonably if they did.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—I concur. I cannot read any part of this letter as imputing dishonesty to the pursuer.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—Actions of reparation for slander or libel exist in order to clear character, and do not exist for the mere purpose of stirring up dirty water which had better be allowed to remain stagnant. They are not meant to encourage mere recrimination. The whole object of such actions is to clear character and nothing else, and if character is not seriously attacked the action should not be allowed to proceed. Here the pursuer is not even named in the letter of which he complains, and unless we can fairly read that letter as imputing personal dishonesty to the pursuer, I do not think that an issue should be allowed either with the innuendo which the Lord Ordinary with great difficulty passed or with the innuendo now proposed. I cannot find any charge of, or any implication of, personal dishonesty against the pursuer in this letter, and I therefore concur with your Lordships.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—Mr Watt took the opportunity of improving his issue, but I do not think that he has succeeded in doing so. The new innuendo is not satisfactory. It sets forth that the letter "falsely and calumniously represents that the pursuer was guilty of dishonest conduct in the application of the funds of the Bignold Cottage Hospital, and is a person who is unfit to be entrusted with the management of public funds." Now, I should have expected that the issue would have gone on to say, after the words "Bignold Cottage Hospital," "by doing" so and so, giving the mode by which he was said to have acted dishonestly. Mr Watt when asked said that he could not say in what particular way the writer of the letter represented that the pursuer had acted dishonestly. I find it difficult to see that the pursuer is intended to be attacked at all in the letter. The only reference to the pursuer is in relation to the sending out of appeals which are said to have been made "by the secretary." If the words "by the secretary" are left out, there is nothing to connect the pursuer with the letter, and it is, I suppose, matter of course that circulars should be signed by the secretary. I am unable to see that this mere reference to the secretary as an official can be innuendoed to mean that the pursuer was guilty of personal dishonesty. I therefore agree with your Lordships.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor reclaimed against and disallowed the issue.

S. F. SUTHERLAND, S.S.C.—MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 158. CHARLES SIMON ROMANES (Ferguson's Curator Bonis), Petitioner.—A. M. Anderson.

July 4, 1905.

Ferguson's Curator Bonis.

Administration of Justice—Inner-House—Junior Lord Ordinary—Judicial Factor—Curator Bonis—Enforcement of Decree to deliver document—Warrant to open lockfast places.—The curator bonis of an incapax obtained a decree in absence against the wife of his ward, ordaining her to deliver to the curator a certain policy of insurance on his ward's life. A charge upon this decree having expired without result, the curator, being in a difficulty, presented a note to the Junior Lord Ordinary, in which, on the narrative that he believed that the execution of a warrant to imprison would not be effectual to enforce production, he craved for a warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places.

The Junior Lord Ordinary having reported the matter to the Inner-House, the Court granted the warrant asked for.

1ST DIVISION. THE JUNIOR LORD ORDINARY (Lord Johnston) reported orally to the First Division a note presented to him by a curator bonis, which set forth that the curator had found it necessary to obtain delivery of a policy of assurance, part of the property of the ward. The policy was in the possession of the wife of the ward, and she had refused to deliver it. In these circumstances the curator had raised an action against the ward's wife to ordain her to deliver to him the policy, and decree had been pronounced in absence against her. A charge had followed on the decree, but the days of charge had expired without the decree being obtempered. The curator had obtained warrant to imprison on the expiry of the charge, but was of opinion, from his experience in the curatory, that personal diligence against the wife without power to institute a search would not lead to the recovery of the document.

In these circumstances, the curator brought the matter before the Junior Lord Ordinary, and asked that warrant should be granted to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and, if necessary for that purpose, to open lockfast places.

LORD PRESIDENT.—(After narrating the circumstances above set forth) —Lord Johnston has had the matter before him, and reports that if the order is to be obeyed other means than imprisonment must be used to get the document. I am of opinion that the order of the Court must be obeyed, and the document produced. Imprisonment in such cases is not only in modum pœnæ; its object is to compel performance, and here, if, as we are informed, it would fail in that object, and the document would not be forthcoming, we must have recourse to other means. I am of opinion, therefore, that we should grant warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for the policy, and, if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places.

LORD ADAM and LORD KINNEAR concurred.

LORD M'LAREN was absent.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Lords, on the verbal report of Lord Johnston, Ordinary, and having considered the note for the curator bonis, with relative statement by the curator bonis, grant warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for, recover, and take possession of the policy of assurance for £300 . . . and if necessary for that purpose, to open all shut and lockfast places, and to deliver the said policy of assurance to the petitioner, Charles Simon Romanes, as curator bonis to the said John Scotland Ferguson." No. 158. July 4, 1905. Ferguson's Curator Bonis.

BALFOUR & MANSON, S.S.C., Agents.

BARON DE BILDT, Petitioner.—MacRobert. No. 159.

Process—Proof—Commission—Evidence to be laid before a foreign Court—Appointment of Commissioner—Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. cap. 113), sec. 1.—Held that the Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856, in authorising a Court to pronounce an order for the examination of witnesses on oath at the request of a foreign tribunal does not authorise an order for their examination before a Court, but only before a Commissioner. July 4, 1905. Baron de Bildt.

BARON DE BILDT, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway to the Court of St James, presented a petition to the First Division under the Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856,* in which he set forth, inter alia:—"That in an action in regard to a civil or commercial matter presently 1ST DIVISION.

* The Act 19 and 20 Vict. cap. 113, enacts, sec. 1, that, "Where upon an application for this purpose, it is made to appear to any Court or Judge having authority under this Act, that any Court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction in a foreign country before which any civil or commercial matter is pending is desirous of obtaining the testimony in relation to such matter of any witness or witnesses within the jurisdiction of such first-mentioned Court, or of the Court to which such Judge belongs, or of such Judge, it shall be lawful for such Court or Judge to order the examination upon oath upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any person or persons named in such order, of such witness or witnesses accordingly, and it shall be lawful for the said Court or Judge by the same order, or for such Court or Judge, or any other Judge having authority under this Act, by any subsequent order, to command the attendance of any person to be named in such order, for the purpose of being examined, or the production of any writings or other documents to be mentioned in such order, and to give such directions as to the time, place, and manner of such examination, and all other matters connected therewith, as may appear reasonable and just, and any such order may be enforced, in like manner, as an order made by such Court or Judge in a cause depending in such Court or before such Judge."

Section 2 enacts that "A certificate under the hand of the ambassador, minister, or other diplomatic agent of any foreign power, received as such by Her Majesty, or, in case there be no such diplomatic agent, then of the Consul General, or consul of any such foreign power in London, received and admitted as such by Her Majesty, that any matter in relation to which an application is made under this Act is a civil or commercial matter pending before a Court or tribunal in the country of which he is diplomatic agent or consul having jurisdiction in the matter so pending, and that such Court or tribunal is desirous of obtaining the testimony of the witness or witnesses to whom the application relates, shall be evidence of the matter so certified; but where no such certificate is produced, other evidence to that effect shall be produced."

By the 6th section the Court of Session is declared to be a Court having authority under the Act.

No. 159.
July 4, 1905.
Baron de Bildt.

pending in the Town Court of Halmstad in the kingdom of Sweden, being a Court of competent jurisdiction, between James Stiven of Dundee,—Plaintiff; and Alfred Johansson of Halmstad aforesaid,—Defendant; the said Court is desirous of obtaining for use in such action the testimony upon oath of the following persons, viz.:—John Sorby of Millhouse, Tayport, Fife, and David Ferguson of Ogilvy Street, Tayport, Fife."

"That the petitioner makes the present application for authority to examine the said witnesses before the Sheriff-substitute at Dundee, whom failing, such other person as your Lordships may appoint, and for an order commanding their attendance."

The prayer of the petition was in these terms:—"May it therefore please your Lordships to order the examination of the said John Sorby and David Ferguson, upon oath, before the said Sheriff-substitute, whom failing, such other person as your Lordships shall appoint; and further, to appoint the said Sheriff-substitute or such other person to examine the said witnesses upon the questions contained in the letter of request by said Town Court of Halmstad, and translation thereof, Nos. 7 and 8 of process, and to command the attendance of the said witnesses at such place and at such time or times, and at such hour or hours as the said Sheriff-substitute may fix, upon giving the said witnesses forty-eight hours' previous notice of the day and hour fixed, to give evidence in the said suit, and also to bring with them, exhibit, and produce before the said Sheriff-substitute, upon oath, all such writings and documents as they may have in their hands, custody, or keeping, which they may be required so to exhibit and produce in evidence of any of the matters at issue, and to declare where and in whose hands, custody, or keeping all or any of said writings and documents are, or may be; and further, to dispense with the adjustment of interrogatories, and to grant authority to messengers-at-arms to cite the said witnesses to appear at the place and date so fixed and give evidence in the said suit; or to do further or otherwise in the premises as to your Lordships may seem proper."

The necessary certificate under sec. 2 of the said Act, signed by the petitioner as the minister of the foreign power received by His Majesty, was produced to the Court.

The prayer of the petition was framed in accordance with the terms of the letter of request from the foreign Court, in which it was asked that the examination should take place before the Sheriff-substitute[1] at Dundee, whom failing, such other person as the Court should appoint.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This petition raises a question of practice which I think ought to be dealt with, because it involves a proceeding which might be appealed to as a precedent for the practice to be followed in similar cases. The petition is presented by the Baron de Bildt, who is Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of his Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway to the Court of St James, and the object of it is to obtain the testimony of two witnesses, who appear to be Scotsmen, and who

[1] For the previous practice in such matters see the cases of Blair, July 14, 1883, 10 R. 1223; Stemrich, July 14, 1886, 13 R. 1156; and Reid, May 23, 1890, 17 R. 790, in the First Division; and the case of Robinow, July 19, 1883, 10 R. 1246, in the Second Division, and the unreported cases therein referred to.

No. 159.
July 4, 1905.
Baron de Bildt.

are easily available at Dundee. Their testimony is required for a civil action which is at present in dependence in the Town Court of Halmstad, a Court of competent jurisdiction. The application is made under the 1st section of the Foreign Tribunals Act, 1856, which provides that where the testimony of witnesses is required in relation to civil and commercial matters pending before foreign tribunals, and an application is made to a Court having authority under the Act, it shall be lawful for such Court "to order the examination upon oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any person or persons named in such order, of such witness or witnesses," and then follow appropriate provisions for securing the attendance of such witnesses. Now, the criterion for determining whether the application is in relation to a civil or commercial matter is provided in section 2, which enacts that the certificate of the ambassador, minister, or other diplomatic agent of the foreign power to this effect shall be evidence of the matter so certified. We have that evidence here, for we have a certificate from Baron de Bildt, who, as your Lordships are judicially aware, is the Minister of the King of Sweden, requesting the Court to grant this application, and testifying that the evidence is required in a civil or commercial matter pending in a tribunal having competent jurisdiction.

So far then this application is competent and in order, and I am sure that I am expressing the feelings of your Lordships when I say that we should always be anxious, in accordance with the comity of nations, to do all in our power to facilitate the granting of an application presented by the minister of a friendly power. But there is a small point of practice raised here by the fact that the prayer of the petition asks that the examination should take place before the Sheriff-substitute at Dundee, and we are informed that this is done because the Foreign Court has specially desired it. I have here a translation of the application by the Foreign Court, and an examination of that document makes it plain that the Foreign Court have made this particular request under a misapprehension. They seem to have thought that they were entitled to apply to this Court, or to any inferior Court, to examine these witnesses before them as a Court. Now that is, of course, a misapprehension, because this examination has to be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Foreign Tribunals Act, and that Act does not provide for any such procedure. So we are not doing any discourtesy to the Foreign Court by not carrying out that part of this application which requests that this inquiry should proceed before a particular individual. We must treat the application as a good application, and the only question we have to consider is to whom this inquiry is to be remitted. I do not treat the request that it should be sent to the Sheriff-substitute as part of the prayer, but merely as a suggestion. I do not think it is a suggestion that we can follow, for, in my view, it is not in accordance with the provisions of the Foreign Tribunals Act. It would have been easy for that Act to say, had such been the intention, that these inquiries should take place before this Court or before the Judge Ordinary of the bounds, but it does not do so. It seems to me then that such an inquiry is just like an ordinary commission, and, as some questions of evidence may arise in the course of this examination, I think it would be proper to remit it in the usual way to a member of the bar.

No. 159.

July 4, 1905.
Baron de Bildt.

pending in the Town Court of Halmstad in the kingdom of Sweden, being a Court of competent jurisdiction, between James Stiven of Dundee,—Plaintiff; and Alfred Johansson of Halmstad aforesaid,—Defendant; the said Court is desirous of obtaining for use in such action the testimony upon oath of the following persons, viz.:—John Sorby of Millhouse, Tayport, Fife, and David Ferguson of Ogilvy Street, Tayport, Fife."

"That the petitioner makes the present application for authority to examine the said witnesses before the Sheriff-substitute at Dundee, whom failing, such other person as your Lordships may appoint, and for an order commanding their attendance."

The prayer of the petition was in these terms:—"May it therefore please your Lordships to order the examination of the said John Sorby and David Ferguson, upon oath, before the said Sheriff-substitute, whom failing, such other person as your Lordships shall appoint; and further, to appoint the said Sheriff-substitute or such other person to examine the said witnesses upon the questions contained in the letter of request by said Town Court of Halmstad, and translation thereof, Nos. 7 and 8 of process, and to command the attendance of the said witnesses at such place and at such time or times, and at such hour or hours as the said Sheriff-substitute may fix, upon giving the said witnesses forty-eight hours' previous notice of the day and hour fixed, to give evidence in the said suit, and also to bring with them, exhibit, and produce before the said Sheriff-substitute, upon oath, all such writings and documents as they may have in their hands, custody, or keeping, which they may be required so to exhibit and produce in evidence of any of the matters at issue, and to declare where and in whose hands, custody, or keeping all or any of said writings and documents are, or may be; and further, to dispense with the adjustment of interrogatories, and to grant authority to messengers-at-arms to cite the said witnesses to appear at the place and date so fixed and give evidence in the said suit; or to do further or otherwise in the premises as to your Lordships may seem proper."

The necessary certificate under sec. 2 of the said Act, signed by the petitioner as the minister of the foreign power received by His Majesty, was produced to the Court.

The prayer of the petition was framed in accordance with the terms of the letter of request from the foreign Court, in which it was asked that the examination should take place before the Sheriff-substitute[1] at Dundee, whom failing, such other person as the Court should appoint.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This petition raises a question of practice which I think ought to be dealt with, because it involves a proceeding which might be appealed to as a precedent for the practice to be followed in similar cases. The petition is presented by the Baron de Bildt, who is Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of his Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway to the Court of St James, and the object of it is to obtain the testimony of two witnesses, who appear to be Scotsmen, and who

[1] For the previous practice in such matters see the cases of Blair, July 14, 1883, 10 R. 1223; Stemrich, July 14, 1886, 13 R. 1156; and Reid, May 23, 1890, 17 R. 790, in the First Division; and the case of Robinow, July 19, 1883, 10 R. 1246, in the Second Division, and the unreported cases therein referred to.

No. 159.
July 4, 1905.
Baron de Bildt.

are easily available at Dundee. Their testimony is required for a civil action which is at present in dependence in the Town Court of Halmstad, a Court of competent jurisdiction. The application is made under the 1st section of the Foreign Tribunals Act, 1856, which provides that where the testimony of witnesses is required in relation to civil and commercial matters pending before foreign tribunals, and an application is made to a Court having authority under the Act, it shall be lawful for such Court "to order the examination upon oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any person or persons named in such order, of such witness or witnesses," and then follow appropriate provisions for securing the attendance of such witnesses. Now, the criterion for determining whether the application is in relation to a civil or commercial matter is provided in section 2, which enacts that the certificate of the ambassador, minister, or other diplomatic agent of the foreign power to this effect shall be evidence of the matter so certified. We have that evidence here, for we have a certificate from Baron de Bildt, who, as your Lordships are judicially aware, is the Minister of the King of Sweden, requesting the Court to grant this application, and testifying that the evidence is required in a civil or commercial matter pending in a tribunal having competent jurisdiction.

So far then this application is competent and in order, and I am sure that I am expressing the feelings of your Lordships when I say that we should always be anxious, in accordance with the comity of nations, to do all in our power to facilitate the granting of an application presented by the minister of a friendly power. But there is a small point of practice raised here by the fact that the prayer of the petition asks that the examination should take place before the Sheriff-substitute at Dundee, and we are informed that this is done because the Foreign Court has specially desired it. I have here a translation of the application by the Foreign Court, and an examination of that document makes it plain that the Foreign Court have made this particular request under a misapprehension. They seem to have thought that they were entitled to apply to this Court, or to any inferior Court, to examine these witnesses before them as a Court. Now that is, of course, a misapprehension, because this examination has to be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Foreign Tribunals Act, and that Act does not provide for any such procedure. So we are not doing any discourtesy to the Foreign Court by not carrying out that part of this application which requests that this inquiry should proceed before a particular individual. We must treat the application as a good application, and the only question we have to consider is to whom this inquiry is to be remitted. I do not treat the request that it should be sent to the Sheriff-substitute as part of the prayer, but merely as a suggestion. I do not think it is a suggestion that we can follow, for, in my view, it is not in accordance with the provisions of the Foreign Tribunals Act. It would have been easy for that Act to say, had such been the intention, that these inquiries should take place before this Court or before the Judge Ordinary of the bounds, but it does not do so. It seems to me then that such an inquiry is just like an ordinary commission, and, as some questions of evidence may arise in the course of this examination, I think it would be proper to remit it in the usual way to a member of the bar.

No. 159. LORD ADAM and LORD KINNEAR concurred.

July 4, 1905. Baron de Bildt. LORD M'LAREN was absent.

THE COURT pronounced an interlocutor ordering the examination to proceed before Mr R. A. Lee, advocate, and granting commission to the said R. A. Lee for said examination.

HOPE, TODD, & KIRK, W.S., Agents.

No. 160. FERME, FERME, & WILLIAMSON, Claimants (Reclaimers).—Hunter—T. B. Morison.

July 6, 1905. Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee. J. CAMPBELL DEWAR (Trustee in Stephenson's Sequestration), (Respondent).—A. M. Anderson—J. A. Christie.

Trust—Testamentary Trust—Agent and Client—Expenses—Bankruptcy—Liability of trust-estate to law-agents for expense of unsuccessfully defending an action.—In an action against the sole trustee under a testamentary trust, the final interlocutor decerned against the trustee for payment of a sum of money, and found "that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate." The trust-estate having subsequently been sequestrated on the petition of the successful pursuer of the action, the law-agents who had acted for the testamentary trustee claimed to be ranked on the sequestrated estate for their expenses.

Held that as the law-agents for the trustee were presumably acquainted with the whole circumstances of the trust, they were not entitled to rank for their account.

Bill-Chamber. 2D DIVISION. Lord Low. IN an action for payment of a sum of money at the instance of the executor of Miss Margaret Somerville against Cornelius Smith, sole testamentary trustee of William Stephenson, farmer, Samuelston, Loanhead, Haddingtonshire, the Second Division of the Court on 3d February 1904 pronounced an interlocutor granting decree as concluded for in favour of the pursuer, Miss Somerville's executor, and containing, inter alia, the following finding:—"Find that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate of the deceased William Stephenson: Quoad ultra reserve the defender's right of relief against said estate and decern."

On 22d June 1904, on the petition of Miss Somerville's executor, William Stephenson's testamentary trust-estate was sequestrated under the Bankruptcy Acts. J. Campbell Dewar, C.A., Edinburgh, was appointed trustee in the sequestration.

A claim was lodged in the sequestration by Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson, solicitors, Haddington, who claimed to be ranked preferably (1) for their business account as agents for Stephenson's testamentary trustee in the action with Miss Somerville's executor above mentioned; and (2) for their general business account as agents for Stephenson's testamentary trustee. It is with the former branch of the claim alone that this report is directly concerned.

The trustee in Stephenson's sequestration having rejected the claim, Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson appealed to the Lord Ordinary on the Bills.

On 11th May 1905, the Lord Ordinary on the Bills (Low) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds that the appellants are not

No. 160.
July 6, 1905.
Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee.

entitled to make a claim against the sequestrated estates of the deceased William Stephenson in respect of professional services rendered or expenses incurred by them as law-agents for Cornelius Smith, sole testamentary trustee of the said William Stephenson, in connection with the action against the said Cornelius Smith at the instance of the executor of the deceased Miss M. Somerville, and that to that extent and effect the appeal falls to be dismissed, and the deliverance appealed against affirmed; with that finding appoints the cause to be enrolled for further procedure." *

The claimants, Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson, reclaimed, and argued;—The claimants had acted on the employment of the testamentary trust, and not on the employment of the testamentary trustee, and their claim therefore was a direct claim against the testamentary trust-estate.[1] The English authorities on this question were altogether inapplicable, a trust being a separate persona according to the theory of Scots law. The interlocutor of 3d February 1904 did not affect the present claimants, who were not parties to that litigation. The fact that they were the law-agents of the testamentary trustee did not make them eadem persona with him.

Argued for the respondent, the trustee in the sequestration;—The present claim, if it had been made by the testamentary trustee, would have been barred by the interlocutor of 3d February 1904, and the claimants, who were his law-agents in the litigation, could have no higher right than he had. They had not a direct claim against the trust-estate.[2] Being the law-agents of the trust, they must be held to

---

* "NOTE.—I am of opinion that the deliverance of the trustee is right in so far as regards that part of the appellants' account which relates to the expenses of the litigation with the representatives of Miss Margaret Somerville. It is plain that the appellants' client (the defender in that action) could not, in view of the interlocutor of the Second Division, have claimed these expenses, and the appellants cannot be in any better position.

"The claim of the appellants in respect of their professional services in managing the testamentary trust apart from the Somerville claim, and before that claim was known or intimated, may be in a different position. I do not think it can be affirmed as an absolute rule that the claim of the law-agent in a testamentary trust for remuneration for his professional services lies only against the trustees who employed him, and in no case directly against the trust-estate. I think that the result of the Scotch authorities is correctly stated by Lord M'Laren in his work upon 'Wills and Succession' (volume 2, p. 1233), where he says:—'The presumption is that he (the law-agent of the trust) is employed as agent for the estate, and not on the personal responsibility of the trustees or trustee.'

"The question is no doubt very much one of circumstances, but I think that where, as here, the law-agents in the trust had also been the law-agents of the truster, and were therefore fully conversant with the position of the trust-estate, the case is a favourable one for the presumption to which Lord M'Laren refers." (His Lordship then explained why the appellants' claim to rank for their general business account ought to be enrolled for further procedure.)

[1] M'Laren on Wills and Succession, 3d ed., p. 1234; Cullen v. Baillie, Feb. 20, 1846, 8 D. 511, 18 Scot. Jur. 231; Shepherd v. Hutton's Trustees, Feb. 24, 1855, 17 D. 516, 27 Scot. Jur. 219.

[2] Pelly v. Wathen, 1851, 1 De G. Mac. and G. 16; Worrall v. Harford, 1802, 8 Vesey Jun. 4; Hall v. Laver, 1842, 1 Hare, 571; Staniar v. Evans, 1886, L. R., 34 Ch. Div. 470; Lewin on Trusts, 11th ed., p. 779; M'Laren on Wills and Succession, p. 1235.

No. 160.

July 6, 1905. Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee.

have been in full knowledge of its circumstances, and consequently to have taken the risk of not getting payment of their business account.

At advising the following were the opinions delivered in so far as bearing on the question now reported:—

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—This Division in the interlocutor of 3d February 1904, in the case of Somerville against Smith (Stephenson's Trustee) found "that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate of the deceased William Stephenson."

Sequestration has now taken the place of the testamentary trust, and in that sequestration the law-agents in the litigation to which the above finding refers demand a ranking on the ground that the trustee had power to employ agents, and that their costs form a charge against the estate. The position they take up is that they are entitled to their charges, just as any tradesman who did work for the trust, such as repairing buildings, or painting, or similar work, would be entitled preferably to be paid. I agree with the Lord Ordinary in holding that the contention of these law-agents is unsound. They are, I think, plainly not in the position of persons so employed. Such persons do not know, and cannot know, the affairs of the trust. They are not employed to serve the trust, but simply to do work in their own business as ordinary tradesmen, such work being presumably to the advantage of the estate, and ordered for that reason. But law-agents are in a totally different position. The whole facts in connection with the estate are patent to them. They can judge whether as matter of prudence they should accept the employment as for the trust. It is not in their power to maintain that they did not look into matters for themselves, and were entitled to take it for granted that when the trustee asked them to act for the trust they thereby tacitly got a guarantee of there being funds to meet the expense. It appears to me that this is already well established in the law, and if so, it is conclusive of the whole question in the present case, and debars the law-agents from the ranking which they seek. There is no right in them to a ranking. I would propose to your Lordships that the interlocutor under review be affirmed so far as relates to the suit against Stephenson's trustee and the deliverance of the trustee in the sequestration thereanent.

LORD KYLLACHY.—In this case it is common ground that by the interlocutor of the Court of 3d February 1904, in the action at the instance of Somerville's executor, the trustee in this testamentary trust was effectually debarred from including in the expenses of his administration the expenses incurred by him in that litigation. The question which has now to be decided is whether the law-agents of the trust, who were not parties to the action, are similarly debarred from ranking for these expenses in the sequestration which has now displaced the testamentary trust. The law-agents maintain the negative, on the ground that ostensibly the trustee had power to employ them as in other matters of trust management, and to pledge the credit of the trust-estate for their proper charges, and that they were not bound, any more than tradesmen employed (say) to make repairs on the trust property, to go behind the trustee's apparent authority, or to investigate the limitations, actual or possible, of his powers.

No. 160.

July 6, 1905.
Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee.

The Lord Ordinary has held that the law-agents have in this matter no higher rights than the trustee himself, and that, as the trustee is debarred from charging the expenses in question as against the estate, the law-agents are in the same position. I do not know that I should be prepared to state the principle quite so barely as the Lord Ordinary, but I agree with his conclusion, and do so upon a ground which I think must have been present to his Lordship's mind, being indeed indicated by the authorities cited in the passage in M'Laren on Wills (pp. 1233-37) to which he refers.

The ground I refer to is this,—that, whatever may be the rights of ordinary persons contracting with a trustee without notice of any limitation of his (the trustee's) powers to pledge the credit of the trust-estate, the law-agents of the trust are, and are necessarily, in an exceptional position. For they have notice of everything. They are, or are presumed to be, conversant not only with the terms of the trust-deed, but with the whole circumstances of the trust-estate, its amount, the claims upon it, actual or anticipated, and the results, probable or possible, of unsuccessful litigations. They are not, therefore, in the position of tradesmen or other persons employed in the ordinary course of the trust management. Unlike such ordinary employees, they cannot, if the trust funds prove inadequate, proceed against the trustee personally on the ground of his implied warranty of the adequacy of the trust funds. On the contrary, knowing all that the trustee knows, they are held, with respect to their charges, to take their chance of recovering from the trust-estate. That, I think, must be held as settled by the authorities mentioned. And that being so, it seems to me to follow by parity of reasoning that if employed, as here, to conduct and advise as to a litigation which may or or may not be successful, they take their risk of such contingencies as may be involved; including, in particular, the contingency that as the result of the litigation the trust-estate, or a large part of it, may not be available for their costs.

I therefore consider that the appellants have in the circumstances no claim to be ranked for the expenses in question—no claim to be ranked either preferably or at all. And accordingly I agree with the Lord Ordinary as to the only matter really in controversy. Our interlocutor will, I suppose, be to affirm the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and the deliverance of the trustee in the sequestration in so far as relating to the expenses of the litigation with Somerville's executor.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—I have found this case one of extreme difficulty, but I assent to the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary and am prepared to affirm it.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING concurred.

THE COURT adhered.

A. C. D. VERT, S.S.C.—WATSON & MATHERS, W.S.—Agents

No. 161.

July 6, 1905. Sir Wm. Arrol & Co., Limited, v. Kelly.

SIR WILLIAM ARROL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Appellants.—Younger, K.C.—C. D. Murray.
JAMES KELLY, Respondent.—Watt, K.C.—C. A. Macpherson.

Master and Servant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. cap. 37), sec. 7 (2)—Dependants—"In part dependent upon the earnings of the workman."—The father of a workman who died from injuries sustained in the course of his employment claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The son's average weekly earnings from his employment were £1, 4s. 1d. He also practised a systematic course of betting, which brought him a substantial profit. The father, who was a widower, 54 years of age, and without dependants, suffered from bronchitis and rheumatism, and his capacity for work was consequently precarious, but his average weekly earnings during a period of forty weeks were £1, 4s. 11d. The son made payments to his father which averaged 10s. per week. Father and son did not live together.

Held that the father was not in part dependent upon the earnings of his son within the meaning of section 7 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Legget & Sons v. Burke, 4 F. 693, distinguished.

2D DIVISION. Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

IN an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, brought in the Sheriff Court of Lanarkshire at Glasgow, James Kelly, boltmaker, 9 South William Street, Perth, claimed compensation under the Act from Sir William Arrol & Company, Limited, Glasgow, in respect of the death of his son.

The Sheriff-substitute (Boyd), having awarded compensation, Sir William Arrol & Company, Limited, appealed.

In the stated case the Sheriff-substitute stated as follows:—

"The following facts were established:—(1) That the respondent is the father of the deceased Edward Kelly, labourer, who was, at the time of his death, in the employment of the appellants at Provanmill Gas Works, Glasgow. (2) That on 19th April 1904 the deceased was engaged in the erection of the upright columns of a gasometer, when he fell from the top of one of the columns, and was so injured that he died. (3) That the average weekly wage of the deceased was £1, 4s. 1d. (4) That besides his ordinary employment the deceased practised a systematic course of betting, which brought him a substantial profit. (5) That the respondent, whose wife had died on 25th March 1902, for the past three years has suffered from bronchitis and rheumatism, which prevented him engaging in steady work, but for a period of forty weeks, from 18th July 1903 to 23d April 1904, immediately prior to his son's death, he earned an average wage of £1, 4s. 11d. in the employment of the Locomotive Department of the Caledonian Railway Company at Perth. That during the said period of forty weeks his work was irregular by reason of his bronchitis and rheumatism, and the wages earned by him fortnightly for the said period were as follows:—(Then followed a table shewing the wages earned by the respondent in each fortnight. These sums varied between a maximum of £3 earned upon four occasions and a minimum of £1, 3s. 6d.) (6) That his capacity for work is still precarious owing to his attacks of bronchitis and rheumatism. (7) That the deceased was in the habit of making payments to him which amounted on an average to 10s. per week.

"On these facts, I found in law that the deceased was fatally injured while in the employment of the appellants by an accident

No. 161.

July 6, 1905.
Sir Wm. Arrol & Co., Limited, v. Kelly.

arising out of and in the course of his employment at an engineering work of which the appellants were the undertakers in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that the respondent was partially dependent on the earnings of the deceased, and that he was entitled to compensation therefor from the appellants.

"I therefore awarded the respondent the sum of £78, with expenses."

The question of law was:—"Was the respondent in part dependent on his son the deceased Edward Kelly at the date of the latter's death within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897?"*

It appeared from statements made at the bar that the respondent was 54 years of age and had no dependants.

Argued for the appellants;—The respondent was not either wholly or in part dependent on the earnings of the deceased. Receipt of money from the deceased was not enough. Dependence for the necessaries of life was essential.[1] The money paid must be required for the support of the recipient. One of two single men earning the same wage could not be dependent on the other. The payment made by the deceased must also have been made out of his earnings as a workman. Here that was not the case. The legitimate inference from the facts was that the payments were made from the deceased's earnings as a bookmaker, and not from his earnings as a workman. The cases of Barrett v. North British Railway Company,[2] and Legget & Sons v. Burke,[3] were distinguished. This was not a case of a payment into a family fund for the support of the family.

Argued for the respondent;—This was a question of fact. The Court could only interfere with the finding of the arbitrator if there was no sufficient evidence to support it.[4] Here there was sufficient evidence to justify the arbitrator's finding. The ability of the father to maintain himself was not conclusive against his being a dependant.[5] The Act said "dependent upon the earnings of the workman." It did not say "dependent for maintenance upon the earnings of the workman as workman." The additional words were required to support the appellants' contentions. Further, there was here no specific finding as to the amount earned by the deceased from betting. No legitimate inference could be drawn that the deceased's payments to the respondent came from that source.

---

* The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. cap. 37), enacts, as follows, sec. 7 (2),—"In this Act—. . . 'Dependants' means . . . (b) in Scotland, such of the persons entitled according to the law of Scotland to sue the employer for damages or solatium in respect of the death of the workman, as were wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death."

[1] Simmons v. White Brothers, L. R. [1899], 1 Q. B. 1005; Main Colliery Company v. Davies, L. R. [1900], A. C. 358; Robert Addie & Sons' Collieries, Limited, v. Trainer, Nov. 22, 1904, ante, p. 115; Moyes v. William Dixon, Limited, Jan. 13, 1905, ante, p. 386.

[2] July 11, 1899, 1 F. 1139.

[3] March 18, 1902, 4 F. 693.

[4] Legget & Sons v. Burke, 4 F. 693, at p. 697; Main Colliery Company v. Davies, L. R. [1900], A. C. 358.

[5] Main Colliery Company v. Davies, L. R. [1900], A. C. 358, per Lord Halsbury, L. C., at p. 362; Howells v. Vivian & Sons, 1901, 18 T. L. R. 36.

No. 161. At advising,—

July 6, 1905. Sir Wm. Arrol & Co., Limited, v. Kelly.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—The facts in this case are that the respondent is a workman who is a widower and has no dependants; that he is occasionally off work from bronchitis and rheumatism, but that he is able to earn an average weekly wage amounting to £1, 4s. 11d., and has done so continuously for years up to the time of the petition being raised. His son, in consequence of whose death the claim is made, was a workman whose average wages amounted to £1, 4s. 1d. He was addicted to betting, and was successful, the case stating that he made a substantial profit. He gave his father sums which amounted to 10s. a week on an average.

These being the facts, the Sheriff acting as arbitrator has found that the respondent was partially dependent upon the earnings of the deceased, and has awarded compensation accordingly.

I am unable to agree with the learned Sheriff. There is, as I think, no ground for saying that at the time of the son's death the respondent was in any way dependent upon the earnings of the deceased. Each of the two persons, father and son, were earning wages quite sufficient for their maintenance respectively, and the father having no dependants cannot be said not to have had by his own earnings fully provided for his necessities as a working man. He was in fact earning a little more per week than the son was doing. It is difficult to see how, if it is a question of earnings, the father should have been dependent on the son, seeing that whatever the son might give to the father out of earnings would necessarily bring what he had for his own maintenance far below what ex hypothesi was necessary for the father's maintenance. If, as it appears from the case, the son made money by betting, and chose to give his father a share of his illgotten gains, I cannot see how that can affect the present question, which is, whether the respondent made a loss by the death of his son, in consequence of there no longer being a source of assistance to him from his son's earnings in the work at which he was killed, and on which source, from his own inability to earn wages himself, he was wholly or partially dependent. The father and son were making earnings for themselves of similar amount in each case. To say that in these circumstances the one was dependent on the other, to the effect of making a substantial inequality in favour of the father, seems to me to be an untenable proposition. I say this with full consideration of the case of Legget.[1] That case decided nothing as regards the position here, in which the father stands in no special circumstances as regards other members of the family. He is a lone man with no burdens, legal or moral.

I therefore am of opinion that the question should be answered in the negative.

LORD KYLLACHY.—In this case we do not, I think, require to lay down or adopt any general rule as to what constitutes dependence or partial dependence in the sense of the statute. The facts are, it appears to me, such that, applying any rule or test or standard which has yet been suggested, the claim here is outside the statute.

[1] 4 F. 693.

No. 161.

July 6, 1905.

Sir Wm. Arrol & Co., Limited, v. Kelly.

It is not necessary to go into particulars. But I may say this, that, for myself, I cannot conceive of a man of fifty-four, without wife or family, and earning a wage of 25s. a week, being in any reasonable sense dependent on a son residing in a different town and earning 24s. a week. Exceptional cases may of course always be figured. But in any ordinary circumstances I do not, I confess, see how, as between a father and son, placed as the father and son were placed here, there could be as regards maintenance, or even comfortable maintenance, either need of help on the one hand, or obligation—legal or moral—to give help on the other. It may be true, as found by the Sheriff, that the son did, for some purpose, and from some source, send his father from time to time sums amounting, it is said, on the average to 10s. a week. But a parent who has a wage which is sufficient for his support is not, I think, in any reasonable sense dependent upon his family merely because they, or some of them, may have from time to time been in the way of making him presents, larger or smaller.

Moreover, in this connection it is impossible to overlook what is found by the Sheriff, that this unfortunate "deceased practised a systematic course of betting, which brought him a substantial profit." It is at least probable that the 10s. a week referred to was in whole or in part derived from that source—a source which I do not suppose can be taken into account in a question of dependence on earnings.

I have not, I should add, overlooked that the respondent (the father) has for some years been subject to attacks of rheumatism and bronchitis, and that his power of wage-earning may be to some extent thereby impaired. That may be so. But still, with all his disabilities, he has, on an average of forty weeks, been earning 25s. a week—and, so far as appears, there is in present circumstances no prospect of any change for the worse.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—The question of law stated in this case is whether the applicant was, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, in part dependent on his son who has been killed. The admitted facts are that the father and his son have earned for a considerable period nearly the same weekly wage, which was about £1, 4s. per week, and may be held to have been sufficient for the maintenance of each of them. But it is said that the applicant's capacity for work is precarious owing to bronchitis and rheumatism. The applicant has no dependant living with him. The somewhat singular averment is made that the deceased made a substantial profit by a systematic course of betting. It is further stated that the deceased was in the habit of paying his father 10s. per week, but whether that payment was made out of his earnings or out of the profits of his betting does not appear.

The applicant referred to various cases decided in England, among which may be noticed in particular Howell v. Vivian,[1] and to Legget & Sons v. Burke,[2] which is somewhat closely in point. In that case a father was found entitled to a compensation for the death of his son. But in that case there were resident in family with the father the deceased himself, a cripple brother unable to earn anything, and a sister of this father's. That was

[1] (1901) 18 T. L. R. 36.

[2] 4 F. 693.

No. 161.

July 6, 1905.

Sir Wm. Arrol & Co., Limited, v. Kelly.

the family to the support of which the deceased had contributed. It was held, apparently with some hesitation, that the award should be confirmed. I do not think the cases should be carried further than in that case, and am prepared to hold that there is no relevant averment of dependence in this case.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING was absent at the hearing.

THE COURT answered the question of law in the negative, recalled the award of the arbitrator, and remitted to him to dismiss the claim.

MORTON, SMART, MACDONALD, & PROSSER, W.S.—COUTTS & PALFREY, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 162.

July 6, 1905.

Lawrie's Trustees v. Lawrie.

REV. JOHN METHVEN ROBERTSON AND ANOTHER (Lawrie's Trustees), First Parties.—Younger, K.C.—Hunter.
JOHN FULTON LAWRIE, Second Party.—Sandeman—W. J. Robertson.

Succession—Vesting—Express provision as to vesting—Vesting on youngest child attaining twenty-five—Claim by sole surviving child at age of twenty-three.—A testator directed his trustees to hold the residue for behoof of his children equally, payable on the youngest attaining the age of twenty-five, the lawful issue of children dying before that period being entitled to the share which their parent would have taken, and the share of children dying without issue being divisible among the survivors jointly with the issue of predeceasers. He also directed that until the period of division the income of each child's share should be applied for its education and to paying their mother for their maintenance between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. It was declared that the period of vesting should be as at the date when the youngest child should attain twenty-five. The testator was predeceased by his wife, but survived by two children, one of whom died without issue before the period of payment. The surviving child when twenty-three years of age demanded payment of the residue from the trustees.

Held that on a true construction of the settlement the clause of vesting was still applicable although only one child survived, and that consequently the residue had not yet vested in him.

Maitland's Trustees v. M'Dermaid, 23 D. 732, distinguished.

2D DIVISION.

JOHN WILLIAM LAWRIE, grocer and wine-merchant, Edinburgh, died on 10th June 1891, leaving a trust-disposition and settlement dated 31st July 1883, by which he conveyed his whole means and estate, heritable and moveable, to trustees for the purposes therein mentioned.

By his trust-disposition and settlement, after certain provisions for his wife, and directing his trustees to make payment of annuities to certain annuitants, the testator directed as follows:—"Eleventh, that my said trustees shall hold, apply, pay, and convey the whole rest, residue, and remainder of my means and estate, and the interest and other annual produce thereof . . . to and for behoof of my children equally among them, payable to them on the youngest attaining the age of twenty-five years complete, and in the event of any of my children dying before the said period of division, leaving lawful issue, such issue shall be entitled equally among them to the share to which their parent would have been entitled if in life, and in the event of any of my children dying before the said period of

No. 162.

July 6, 1905.

Lawrie's Trustees v. Lawrie.

division without leaving lawful issue, the share of such deceaser shall fall to and be divided equally among the survivors and survivor of my said children jointly with the lawful issue of any of them who may have deceased, leaving lawful issue, such issue succeeding equally among them to the share to which their parent would have been entitled if in life: Declaring that until the said period of division my said trustees shall apply so much of the income of each child's share as they may see fit, first, in defraying the cost of his or her education, which I desire to be of a high class; and second, in paying to their mother such a moderate annual allowance as to my said trustees shall seem proper for his or her maintenance, clothing, and upbringing from the period between the dates when my children respectively attain the age of fifteen and the period when they respectively attain the age of twenty-five, when my said children shall be entitled to the whole income of their respective shares: Declaring that the period of vesting of my said children's provisions under these presents shall be as at the date when my youngest child shall attain the age of twenty-five years as aforesaid, but that notwithstanding, my said trustees shall, in addition to paying for their education and maintenance, have power, should they see fit, to advance to one or more of my said children out of their prospective share or shares such sum or sums as they may deem advisable in the case of sons for the purpose of educating them for a profession or setting them up in business, and in the case of daughters, for moderately fitting them out in the event of their being married."

The testator was predeceased by his wife. He was survived by two children, a son (John Fulton Lawrie) and a daughter. The daughter died in 1898. The son was born in 1881.

The son, when twenty-three years of age, having called upon the trustees to denude in his favour, and the trustees having refused, the present special case was presented for the opinion and judgment of the Court.

The parties to the special case were—(1) the trustees, and (2) the testator's son.

The first parties contended that upon a sound construction of the trust-disposition and settlement the second party was not entitled to receive payment of the trust-estate until he attained the age of twenty-five years.

The second party contended that he had a vested interest in the trust-estate, and that he was now entitled to call upon the first parties to denude in his favour, after making provision for the sole remaining annuity. He maintained that the clauses in the trust-disposition and settlement postponing vesting and payment, and the clauses conditionally instituting the issue of a predeceasing child, were not applicable to the case of there being only one child of the testator surviving.

The questions of law were:—"(1) Are the first parties bound now to pay and convey to the second party the trust-estate, with the exception of such part thereof" as was necessary to secure an annuity of £10? or "(2) Are they bound to retain and administer the same until the second party attains the age of twenty-five years?"

Argued for the first parties;—Vesting was postponed until the second party attained the age of twenty-five. This appeared (1) from the special clause as to vesting, and also (2) from the whole tenour of the eleventh purpose. The conditional institution of issue, apart from the special provision as to vesting, postponed vesting until

No. 162.
July 6, 1905.
Lawrie's Trustees v. Lawrie.

the second party was twenty-five.[1] Whether the conditional institution of issue operated as a suspensive or a resolutive condition, it was at least an ulterior trust purpose which prevented the rule laid down in Miller's Trustees v. Miller[2] from applying here. In Maitland's Trustees v. M'Dermaid,[3] there was no express clause as to the period of vesting. In that case the ground of decision was that there was vesting a morte in the class, and when there was only one survivor of the class vesting in him. But here vesting a morte was expressly excluded. Maitland[3] proceeded upon a view as to the effect on vesting of a conditional institution of children which was at variance with the more recent authorities.[1]

Argued for the second party;—A conditional institution of children or issue might postpone vesting, but it could only have that effect if there was a postponed period of payment. Here in the event which had happened there was no postponed period of payment, because whenever there came to be only one child, the provision as to payment on the youngest child attaining twenty-five became inapplicable and inoperative,[3] and vesting took place at latest when the artificial period of payment became inapplicable. The express clause declaring the period of vesting became also inoperative whenever there came to be only one child. The reasoning which formed the ground of judgment in Maitland's Trustees[3] applied directly here, and that decision was binding upon the Court as an authority in favour of the second party.

Lord Kyllachy.—It is not necessary in this case to lay down or refer to general rules, or to do more than express shortly what in our opinion is the true construction of this trust-disposition and settlement. All I need say is that I am unable to hold, on the just construction of this settlement, that the second party, who is the last survivor of the truster's children, but is not yet twenty-five years of age, is in the position of having a vested interest in the trust-estate—a vested interest sufficient to bring his claim to immediate possession within the principle of the case of Miller.[2] It is, I think, quite unnecessary to consider what would have been the result in the absence of the express declaration as to vesting which the deed contains. In that case the question must have depended simply on the effect of the postponed term of payment taken along with the destination over to grandchildren, and failing grandchildren to the surviving children. And I am far from saying either (1) that the survivorship clause could have operated to suspend vesting when the survivors had been reduced to one, or (2) that the destination over to grandchildren could have suspended vesting, or done more at most than make the vesting subject to defeasance, as explained in recent decisions. But the position in fact is that we have here an express clause fixing the time of vesting—fixing it like the term of

[1] Bowman v. Bowman, July 25, 1899, 1 F. (H. L.) 69; Thompson's Trustees v. Jamieson, Jan. 26, 1900, 2 F. 470; Forrest's Trustees v. Mitchell's Trustees, March 17, 1904, 6 F. 616; Wylie's Trustees v. Wylie, Nov. 29, 1902, 10 S. L. T. 397 (O.-H.); Parlane's Trustees v. Parlane, May 17, 1902, 4 F. 805; Snell's Trustees v. Morrison, March 20, 1877, 4 R. 709 (O.-H.).

[2] Dec. 19, 1890, 18 R. 301.

[3] Maitland's Trustees v. M'Dermaid, March 15, 1861, 23 D. 732, 33 Scot. Jur. 372.

No. 162.

July 6, 1905.
Lawrie's Trustees v. Lawrie.

payment at the date when the youngest child of the truster reaches twenty-five years of age—and so fixing it quite generally with respect to the interest of each child, and without, so far as appears, any reference to the question whether there were ultimately more children than one. I am not, I confess, prepared to expunge and read out of the settlement this express clause, and the clauses which form its context. And, standing these clauses, they appear to me conclusive against the claim now made. It may be true that the expression "youngest child" is not strictly appropriate where only one child survives. The same might be said where only two children survive. But the expression is in a quite intelligible sense applicable to a youngest surviving child—a child, that is to say, who has ceased to have any brother or sister younger than himself. At all events it seems to me that that is the sense in which the term is used in this settlement.

Reference was made to the case of Maitland,[1] where it was said that a different view had been expressed as to the construction in a similar deed. Now, I am sure we should all be unwilling to treat, or appear to treat, that judgment with any want of respect. But it does not appear to me that anything of that kind is involved. In the first place, there has been no suggestion that the actual decision in that case is open to doubt. The only suggestion has been that if the case were to be decided now it would probably be so upon a simpler ground, viz., this, that there was there no express postponement of vesting,—that the destination over to survivors had become inoperative,—and that the destination over to issue involved, as is now settled, only a resolutive condition. But apart from that, and with respect even to the assigned grounds of judgment, we do not require or propose to express any adverse opinion. As applied to the particular deed those grounds may have been quite right. But it does not of course follow that they are applicable to a deed such as that which we have here—a deed which differs from the deed in Maitland's[1] case, amongst others, in the important particular, that it contains, as I have pointed out, an express clause regulative of vesting, with a context, before and after, which has at least considerable significance.

On the whole matter I am of opinion that we should answer the first query in the negative and the second in the affirmative.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—I am of the same opinion as Lord Kyllachy. We must look at the deed as it stands. Vesting is postponed till the youngest child is twenty-five. There is now only one child. In that state of affairs I concur in the opinion that vesting does not take place until this sole survivor is twenty-five. It is not necessary to say what would happen if the second party died without issue.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—I concur. The argument for the second party goes so far as to say that because there is now only one child surviving we must read out the whole of the elaborate provisions for the benefit of grandchildren, and for the maintenance and education of children until the youngest attains twenty-five. I cannot assent to that. I think the clause

[1] 23 D. 732.

No. 162.
July 6, 1905.
Lawrie's Trustees v. Lawrie.

postponing vesting till the youngest child is twenty-five is of binding force, although there is now only one child.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK concurred.

THE COURT answered the first question in the negative and the second question in the affirmative.

J. & J. MILLIGAN, W.S.—J. S. & J. L. MACK, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 163.
July 6, 1905.
Clippens Oil Co., Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

THE CLIPPENS OIL COMPANY, LIMITED, Pursuers.—Clyde, K.C.—Pitman—T. B. Morison.

THE EDINBURGH AND DISTRICT WATER TRUSTEES, Defenders.—Cooper, K.C.—Macphail.

Process—Expenses—Amendment of Record—Court of Session Act, 1868 (31 and 32 Vict. cap. 100), sec. 29.—In an action for damages raised by the Clippens Oil Company, Limited, against the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees a proof was led and judgment given in favour of the pursuers. Reclaiming notes having been lodged by both parties, the defenders craved leave to amend their record by adding a plea in law, founded on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, which, if sustained, would have rendered the action incompetent. The pursuers objected to the amendment being allowed except on condition of payment of expenses since the closing of the record.

The Court allowed the amendment, reserving all questions of expenses.

1ST DIVISION. Lord Pearson.

THE CLIPPENS OIL COMPANY, LIMITED, raised an action against the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees concluding for £137,000 in name of damages for wrongous interdict. The Lord Ordinary, after a proof which lasted fourteen days, pronounced an interlocutor decerning the defenders to pay to the pursuers the sum of £15,000.

Against this interlocutor reclaiming notes were lodged for both parties, and thereafter the defenders lodged in Court a note craving leave to amend the record by the addition of this plea in law:—"The present action is excluded by section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 and 57 Vict. cap. 61)." That section provides that no action shall lie against any person for any act done in pursuance of any public duty or authority unless the action is commenced within six months.

The pursuers objected to the amendment being allowed except on the condition of the payment of all expenses since the closing of the record, and argued;—The Court, in the exercise of the discretion conferred upon it by section 29 of the Court of Session Act, 1868,* had never, so far as appeared from the reported cases, allowed such an amendment as this, which if successful would exclude the action, except on the condition of payment of expenses.[1] Here the great

* Section 29 of the Court of Session Act, 1868 (31 and 32 Vict. cap. 100), enacts,—"The Court or the Lord Ordinary may at any time amend any error or defect in the record or issues in any action or proceeding in the Court of Session upon such terms as to expenses and otherwise as to the Court or Lord Ordinary shall seem proper; and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing action or proceeding the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made. . . ."

[1] Keith v. Outram & Co., June 27, 1877, 4 R. 958 (Lord President Inglis, p. 959); Gray v. The Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty

No. 163.

July 6, 1905. Clippens Oil Co., Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

expense of an extremely long proof had been incurred, which, if this plea had been timeously stated, might have been avoided.

Argued for the defenders;—The question of expenses should be reserved, for it was impossible to ascertain until the final determination of the action what expenses, if any, had been needlessly incurred. If the new plea were sustained then no doubt the defenders would have to pay to the pursuers the expenses of their proof; but if the plea were repelled the defenders might yet be successful on the merits, and it would be most inequitable if they had now to pay to the pursuers the expenses of the very proof by which they might eventually succeed in maintaining their defence.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is an action of damages by the Clippens Oil Company against the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees in respect of a wrongous interdict obtained against the Company. The matter was the subject of a proof, and the Lord Ordinary decerned against the defenders for £15,000. A reclaiming note has been lodged against this interlocutor, but before the case comes on for discussion the reclaimers ask leave to amend their record by adding a plea founded on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. The effect of such a plea, if sustained, is to render the action incompetent, and the respondents in this case, while admitting that the amendment is competent, ask for the payment of full expenses up to date as a condition of its being received. A considerable number of authorities were quoted to us by Mr Clyde, who contended that in no case where the result of a new plea if successful would be to put an end to the action, had the amendment been allowed without the payment of the whole expenses up to date. I think Mr Clyde's statement on the authorities is correct. But a generalisation may be true of all cases up to date, and yet not found a proposition universally applicable to all cases, and in looking into the matter I have come to the conclusion that it does not apply here. I think this observation may be made, that if the Legislature had intended that these late amendments should be allowed only on condition of the payment of all expenses up to date, it would have said so. But the matter is left entirely to the discretion of the Court. There are amendments and amendments. Some are only amendments to the effect of bringing to a clearer issue points already pleaded on record; others cut deep into the substance of the action. Each one must be dealt with as it arises. The cases quoted were nearly all cases in which the amendment was made by the pursuer introducing a new ground of action changing the complexion of facts on the old record. Apart from authority I should hold that the judgments in these cases were right. The case of Keith v. Outram & Company[1] is nearest to the present case. That was an amendment by the defenders, and consisted in adding an averment and plea of veritas after an issue had been adjusted and notice of trial given in an action of damages for slander. Lord President Inglis in imposing as a condition of allowing the to Animals, May 22, 1890, 17 R. 789; Morgan, Gellibrand, & Co. v. Dundee Gem Line Steam Shipping Company, Limited, Dec. 9, 1890, 18 R. 205; Gallagher v. Pattison, Nov. 10, 1891, 19 R. 79; Murdison v. Scottish Football Union, Jan. 30, 1896, 23 R. 449.

[1] 4 R. 958.

No. 163.
July 6, 1905.
Clippens Oil Co., Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

amendment the payment of all expenses since the closing of the record, said, "All that the pursuer has since done may be thrown away if he is now induced to abandon the action. This rule is not confined to this defence, but applies to all defences which put it upon the pursuer to consider whether or not he will go on with his action. When we allow such an amendment the payment of all expenses incurred since the defence ought to have been stated must be imposed upon the defender." These words carry Mr Clyde all the way he wishes, but the Lord President, with great prescience, adds—"At the same time, the particular circumstances of any case will always fall to be taken into consideration." So it is clear that the Lord President is laying down a general and not a universal rule. The general principle is well stated by Lord Adam in the case of Murdison[1]—"The true principle is that the expenses caused by amendments should be put upon the party desiring to make these amendments." In some cases it is easy to apply this principle, in some not. If the amendment is allowed and is successful, then I concede Mr Clyde is entitled to the whole expenses, because if the plea had been timeously stated the proof which has been led would have been unnecessary. So we are deciding nothing which will prevent the pursuers getting expenses if the plea is successful. If the plea is unsuccessful then the case must be decided on the merits, and in the event of our deciding to reverse the judgment of the Lord Ordinary, then, if we had at this stage allowed all expenses against the reclaimers, we should be allowing expenses in modum pœnæ, and not merely with a view to seeing that the person against whom the amendment is made should not have been put to unnecessary expense. I am therefore of opinion that the amendment should be allowed, and the question of expenses reserved.

Lord Adam.—I have also read all the cases quoted by Mr Clyde. I cannot find anything in them to the effect that, where a plea is proposed to be added to the record which goes to exclude the action, it can only be allowed on condition of payment of the whole expenses irrespective of the circumstances of the particular case. There is nothing in the cases to fetter the discretion of the Court in dealing with each case on its own merits. Accordingly in the special circumstances of the present case I concur in the judgment your Lordship has expressed.

Lord Kinnear.—I agree. The most general rule in these cases—and they form a consistent and harmonious series of decisions—is the rule laid down by the Lord President in the case of Keith v. Outram & Company,[2] that where a plea of this kind is brought forward by a defender at a late stage of the process, it is the duty of the Court in allowing it to place the pursuer in the same position with regard to expenses as if the plea had been stated at the proper time. In many cases the practical application of this rule will be, as it was in the case of Keith,[2] to allow the amendment only on condition of the payment of all expenses, except the expense of actually bringing the action into Court. This proceeds on the view that the expense incurred previous to the amendment must be thrown away if the plea is a [1] 23 R. 449. [2] 4 R. 958.

No. 163.
July 6, 1905.
Clippens Oil Co., Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

good one, since the action must have been thrown out if it had not been abandoned without further proceedings. This creates the one difficulty in the application of the rule to particular cases, which is that we must know what expense has in fact been uselessly incurred; and in this case we cannot know what the expense is that has been rendered nugatory by the new plea until we have considered the proof. If the pursuers had maintained that all expenses incurred in the proof were unnecessary, because this proposed plea would have excluded the proof, and may now be sustained without considering it, they would have had a good claim for such expenses. But they are not disposed to admit that, and therefore we must wait to see the result of this amendment before we can say how the expenses are affected by it. In my opinion it is clear that sooner or later the expense created by bringing forward this plea must be borne by the party who should have stated it earlier. But we must know what expense was incurred by the absence of the plea.

LORD M'LAREN was absent.

THE COURT allowed the amendment, "reserving all questions of expenses in connection with said amendment."

DRUMMOND & REID, W.S.—MILLAR, ROBSON, & M'LEAN, W.S.—Agents.

No. 164.
July 6, 1905.
Buchan v. Grimaldi.

JEANNIE BUCHAN, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Watt, K.C.—Gunn.
GEORGE FREDERICK GRIMALDI, Defender (Respondent).—Sol.-Gen. Salvesen—Mackenzie Stuart.

Jurisdiction—Forty days' residence in Scotland.—Jurisdiction constituted over a foreigner by his residence in Scotland for over forty days ceases when he leaves Scotland; it does not continue for forty days after he has left.

Jurisdiction—Ownership of heritage in Scotland—Sale of the heritage.—A foreigner, the proprietor of a house in Scotland, conveyed it to his daughter by an absolute disposition, which was recorded a few days before a Court of Session summons in a petitory action was served upon him. Held that the Court had not jurisdiction over him by reason of the ownership of Scots heritage.

2D DIVISION. Lord Dundas.

IN December 1904, Jeannie Buchan, residing at The Bungalow, Milltimber, Aberdeenshire, raised an action against George Frederick Grimaldi, designed as "carrying on business as a meat salesman, Central Markets, London, and residing at No. 74 Hamilton Place, Aberdeen," concluding for decree for £1000 as damages for seduction alleged to have been committed in Wales.

The summons was signeted on 28th December 1904, and was served by leaving a copy at the house No. 74 Hamilton Place, Aberdeen, on 30th December 1904.

Defences were lodged in which the defender pleaded, inter alia;—(1) No jurisdiction.

The averments bearing on this plea were as follows:—

The pursuer averred;—(Cond. 1) "The defender . . . carries on an extensive business in London and Aberdeen as a meat salesman. At the date of this action he had his residence at 74 Hamilton Place, Aderdeen, where he had resided at least a year previous. The defender has funds and effects in Scotland which have been arrested. The statement in answer is denied."

No. 164.

July 6, 1905. Buchan v. Grimaldi.

The defender answered;—(Ans. 1) " . . . Admitted that the defender . . . carries on business in London. Quoad ultra denied. He does not reside in Aberdeen or elsewhere in Scotland, and has not done so since 1st October 1904. He is a domiciled Englishman."

A proof on the question of jurisdiction was allowed and led.

The evidence was largely directed to the question whether the defender had, at the date of the service of the summons, a permanent domicile in Scotland. The present report is not directly concerned with that branch of the case.

It was further proved that the defender left Scotland fourteen days before the service of the summons, but it was not disputed that he had, before leaving Scotland, resided in Aberdeen for more than forty days, and the pursuer maintained that the defender thereby became subject to the jurisdiction of the Scots Courts in an action like the present, and that this jurisdiction did not cease until after the lapse of forty days from the time that the defender left Scotland.

The pursuer further maintained that defender was subject to the jurisdiction of the Scots Courts by reason of the possession of heritage in Scotland. The evidence bearing on this branch of the case sufficiently appears from the opinion of the Lord Ordinary.

On 23d March 1905, the Lord Ordinary (Dundas) pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Finds (1) that the defender's domicile of origin was in England, and that he had never changed that domicile or acquired a domicile in Scotland; and (2) that on 30th December 1904, when the summons in this action was served, the defender was not the owner of heritable property in Scotland: Therefore sustains the first plea in law for the defender: Dismisses the action, and decerns: Finds the defender entitled to expenses," &c.*

---

* "OPINION.—In this action, which is one of damages for alleged seduction, the defender's first plea in law is 'No jurisdiction.' The averments of parties in regard to this plea are of the most meagre description, and are to be found at the end of Answer 1 and Condescendence 1 respectively. I allowed a proof of them, which has now been led at considerable length. The defender avers that 'he is a domiciled Englishman.' His case, as disclosed by the proof, is that his domicile of origin was in England, and that he has never abandoned that domicile or acquired any other. There is, I think, no room for doubt that the defender's original domicile, and that of his father and grandfather before him, was in England, and its alleged abandonment by him, and the acquisition of a domicile of choice in Scotland, are only within quite recent years. It is, I apprehend, well settled that a very heavy burden lies upon anyone who seeks to prove that another has thrown off his domicile of origin, and has acquired a domicile of choice elsewhere. The gravity of that onus, and the character of the evidence requisite to discharge it, are fully dealt with in the well-known case of Steel v. Steel, 15 R. 896. It is true that the burden may not be so great where it is sought to establish that an Englishman has acquired a Scots domicile, or vice versa, as where the proposition is that an Englishman or a Scotsman has acquired a domicile in a purely foreign country—Vincent v. E. of Buchan, 16 R. 637. But even under such circumstances a heavy onus lies upon the pursuer in the issue; and in the present case I am of opinion that the pursuer has failed to prove that the defender threw off his English domicile of origin, and acquired a domicile of choice in Scotland.

"The defender has long carried on the business of a meat salesman in Smithfield, in premises leased from the Corporation of London. He acquired this business from his father, with whom, prior to the latter's death, he was

No. 164.
July 6, 1905.
Buchan v. Grimaldi.

The pursuer reclaimed, and argued;—(1) There was here jurisdiction ratione domicilii. The evidence shewed that when the summons was served the defender, though by origin an Englishman, had acquired a Scots domicile of succession. In any view he had a domicile of residence in Scotland which gave the Court jurisdiction over him in a petitory action like the present. It was for the Courts of each country to say what length and character of residence would subject persons living in the country to the jurisdiction of its Courts. In Scotland it had long been settled that continuous residence for forty days gave jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction so constituted lasted for forty days after the person had left Scotland.[1] The defender here had left Scotland only fourteen days before the service of the summons; he consequently was subject to the jurisdiction of the Court. (2) The defender was subject to the jurisdiction of the Court by in partnership, and the requirements of the business have for years past caused the defender to visit centres of the meat and cattle trade all over the country, and among other places Aberdeen, which, it appears, is a centre of much importance, and where he has been accustomed to see consignors and to purchase cattle. . . . He has no house of his own in London. His wife and he apparently prefer to live in hotels or apartments, or with friends, and they travel about a good deal, partly for pleasure, partly when the defender's business requires it, and partly upon a combination of pleasure with business. . . . Undoubtedly, during some parts of 1900, 1901, and 1902 they resided for periods of varying length in Aberdeen in furnished apartments or rooms. . . . In the spring of 1903 he bought a house, 74 Hamilton Place, Aberdeen, taking the title in his own name. . . . It appears that a daughter of the defender by his first wife, having entered into an unhappy marriage, was in 1899 deserted by her husband. Since that time the defender has wholly, or almost wholly, supported her, as she had and has no means of her own. The defender succeeded in getting a situation for this daughter, Mrs Mitchell, in Aberdeen, in a meat business which at one time he had bought, but which he shortly afterwards sold. He depones, and Mrs Mitchell fully corroborates his evidence, that the purchase of the Hamilton Place house was made by him in order to provide a permanent home for her, but that it was considered imprudent that the title should be taken in her name, lest her husband should interfere and give trouble in the matter. Divorce proceedings at the lady's instance were pending in London, and decree nisi was obtained on 1st November 1904. In December 1904 the house was conveyed by the defender to Mrs Mitchell by absolute disposition, under circumstances to which I shall advert more particularly at a later stage." (His Lordship then further adverted to the evidence bearing on the question whether the defender had acquired a permanent domicile in Scotland.) "Upon the whole matter, therefore, my opinion is that the evidence adduced by the pursuer is inadequate in character and quality to prove that the defender's original domicile was ever abandoned or lost by him.

---

"Holding as I do this opinion, it is unnecessary for me to decide or even to discuss the question whether or not, assuming that the defender did acquire a Scottish domicile of choice, his original domicile revived upon his

---

[1] Joel v. Gill, June 10, 1859, 21 D. 929, per Lord Justice-Clerk Inglis at p. 938-939, 31 Scot. Jur. 511; Calder v. Wood, Jan. 19, 1798, F. C. and M. 2250; International Exhibition, 1890, v. Bapty, May 26, 1891, 18 R. 843; Pedie v. Grant, June 14, 1822, 1 S. 460, rev. July 5, 1825, 1 W. and S. 716; 6 Geo. IV. cap. 120, sec. 53; A. S. Dec. 14, 1805; Mackay's Manual of Practice, p. 54; Dove Wilson, Sheriff Court Practice, p. 66.

No. 164. July 6, 1905. Buchan v. Grimaldi.

reason of his ownership of heritage in Scotland. It was true that he had disponed his Scots heritable property to his daughter a day or two before the service of the summons, but the case ought to be determined on the footing that he was still, at the time of the service, the owner of the heritage,—in the first place, because the disposition of the property was for the purpose of escaping the jurisdiction, and secondly because the summons would have been served while he was still the proprietor of the heritage had it not been for the circumstances set forth in the Lord Ordinary's note.

Argued for the defender;—(1) A person's permanent domicile was important only in questions of succession and of status. In any view it was abundantly clear that the defender had never acquired a Scots domicile. A domicile of residence ceased as soon as the person had left Scotland; that must now be taken as settled.[1] (2) At the date when the summons was served the defender de facto was not the departure from Scotland in December 1904, before the raising of the action —(2 Fraser on Husband and Wife, p. 1270; Udny v. Udny, 7 Macph. (H. L.) p. 89).

---

"But an entirely separate and distinct answer is pressed by the pursuer to the defender's plea of 'no jurisdiction,' and must now be considered. It is not distinctly stated on record, but it is based upon his alleged ownership of heritable property in Scotland, viz., 74 Hamilton Place, Aberdeen, as at the date of service of the summons. This argument has, of course, nothing to do with the aspect of the case previously considered, and would, if well founded, subject the defender to the jurisdiction of this Court, even upon the assumption that he was and is a domiciled Englishman. But, prima facie at least, the pursuer's case fails upon the facts. The summons was served on 30th December 1904, at the house in Hamilton Place, which was then uninhabited. The house itself had been conveyed by the defender to Mrs Mitchell by absolute disposition, dated 16th, and recorded 20th December. The present case is therefore even a stronger one for the defender than that of Bowman v. Wright, 4 R. 322. Nor do I think that the defender's position would be in any way weakened or altered if it were clear that the disposition, assuming it to be an absolute one, and with no back-letter,—and there is no evidence of any such document,—was made with the intention and for the purpose of escaping the jurisdiction of the Scottish Courts. The defender admits that he had been told of and had in view the law of the matter, and depones that under the circumstances he thought the occasion a good one for carrying out his original intention, to which I referred at an earlier portion of my opinion, of gifting the house to his daughter. And the conveyance being duly made before service of the summons, the matter would, in my judgment, there take an end, except for a disagreeable topic which is introduced into the evidence, and which, the pursuer urges, is sufficient to bar the defender from founding upon the disposition as excluding jurisdiction.

"The evidence upon this matter stands as follows:—It is proved that on 14th December 1904 the defender had an interview in Edinburgh with Mr Robert Stewart, S.S.C., at which Mr Stewart was instructed to prepare the disposition, which he did, and the disposition was signed on the 16th and

---

[1] Corstorphine v. Kasten, Dec. 13, 1898, 1 F. 287; Watt v. Watt, Jan. 31, 1902, 9 S. L. T. 400; Colley v. Cameron, Feb. 18, 1902, 9 S. L. T; 462; Ritchie v. Fraser, Dec. 11, 1852, 15 D. 205, 25 Scot. Jur. 139. Johnston v. Strachan, March 19, 1861, 23 D. 758, 33 Scot. Jur. 386; Prescott v. Graham, Feb. 2, 1883, 20 S. L. R. 573; Pickering v. Aitken, Feb. 2, 1883, 20 S. L. R. 574; Bankton, iv. 6. 5 and 6; Erskine, i. 2. 16; Darling's Practice, vol. i. p. 148; Shand's Practice, vol. i. pp. 238, 239.

No. 164.
July 6, 1905.
Buchan v. Grimaldi.

proprietor of heritage in Scotland. His motive in getting rid of his heritage and the manner of getting rid of it were immaterial if de facto he had got rid of it. A person was entitled to escape from the jurisdiction of the Courts of a country if he could, and the Court could not exercise jurisdiction if the basis of the jurisdiction had ceased. In any view, the Lord Ordinary's estimate of the evidence regarding the delay in serving the summons was incorrect, but the Lord Ordinary was right in holding that delay was not necessary since a simple disposition like that in question could have been put on record in a few hours.

At advising,—

LORD KYLLACHY.—I agree generally with the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, subject to a certain addition to his Lordship's findings which I think is necessary—an addition to the effect that on 30th December 1904, when the summons in the action was served, the defender was not resident in Scotland and had not been so for about fourteen days previous.

I do not at all differ from the Lord Ordinary's conclusion that the defender being by origin a domiciled Englishman had not, animo et facto, acquired a domicile of succession in Scotland. I think that is so. And I think, further, that even if that were otherwise it is sufficiently clear recorded on the 20th. Now, on the same day, 14th December, Mr Stewart called upon Mr Mackay, the pursuer's Edinburgh agent, and after a conversation, which the latter gentleman narrates with clearness in his evidence, Mr Stewart asked and obtained from Mr Mackay an undertaking that nothing further should be done in the matter until Mr Stewart should communicate with him again. I think that Mr Mackay, who gave his evidence with marked moderation, was well entitled to trust and rely upon Mr Stewart, who was an old and intimate friend, to deal fairly with him in regard to this undertaking. It was not until 28th December that Mr Mackay learned from Mr Stewart that he had decided not to act for the defender in the case, and that the summons had better be served in the usual way, which was done on the 30th. By this time the disposition in favour of Mrs Mitchell had been executed and recorded as already explained. It is not proved whether or not, when Mr Stewart called upon Mr Mackay upon 14th December, he had already had his meeting with the defender. But it is difficult, upon either hypothesis, to justify Mr Stewart's conduct, and he did not enter the witness-box to explain it. The pursuer's counsel maintained that, in these circumstances, I ought to hold that the defender is barred from pleading the execution of the disposition as exempting him from the jurisdiction of this Court. I have some sympathy with this view, but I do not think that I can give effect to it. It is not, in my opinion, proved or at all clear that Mr Stewart's request for delay, under whatever state of knowledge on his part it may have been made and acceded to, was necessarily the cause of the summons not being served until after the disposition had been executed. The execution and even recording of a simple conveyance such as this could obviously have been carried through in the course of a period of hours rather than of days. It seems to me, therefore, that if the defender desired to have the thing done, he would have been able to effect his purpose before the summons was prepared and served, quite apart from any delay asked from or granted by the pursuer's agent. For these reasons, I think that upon this branch of the case also the pursuer's contention fails.

---

"It follows, in my judgment, that the defender's plea of 'no jurisdiction' must be sustained, and that the action must be dismissed, with expenses."

No. 164.

July 6, 1905.
Buchan v. Grimaldi.

that he had prior to the service of the summons renounced, animo et facto, any Scotch domicile which he had acquired.

I rather wish, however, to guard against the assumption, which rather seemed to pervade the argument, that in ordinary civil jurisdiction—that is to say, in actions for debt as distinguished from actions affecting status—the defender's domicile of succession is necessarily an important circumstance. For, apart from the ownership of heritage in Scotland or arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causa, residence, (and not domicile) is what in ordinary actions determines the jurdisdiction. Domicile—that is to say, domicile of succession—may be important in judging of the character of a residence or in questions of continuity. But while that is so, it would not, I apprehend, be possible to sue, say for debt, in the Scotch Courts, and to cite edictally, a Scotsman who had resided abroad for many years, supporting the jurisdiction upon the ground merely that having been born in Scotland he had not yet lost his domicile of origin. Neither, on the other hand, is there, as we all know, any difficulty in sustaining jurisdiction against a foreign debtor irrespective of his domicile, and on the ground simply that he has resided in Scotland for forty days. These are all matters more or less elementary, and I only refer to them to avoid misconception. But I may just add that the two cases mentioned at the close of the argument do not appear to have much bearing one way or the other. The question in the case of Calder[1] was a question of citation, not of jurisdiction; and as to the case of Pedie v. Grant[2] all that was there decided was that the Scotch Courts had not jurisdiction, ratione originis merely, over a defender who though born in Scotland had been long domiciled and resident in England.

Lord Stormonth-Darling.—The Lord Ordinary has sustained the plea of "no jurisdiction" and dismissed the action. Certainly the defender states that plea in circumstances that do not entitle him to any favour, but unless jurisdiction has been constituted in one of the recognised modes it cannot be exercised.

The action is one of damages for seduction alleged to have been committed in Wales. A great part of the proof is directed to shew that the defender, whose domicile of origin was undoubtedly English, has abandoned that domicile and adopted Scotland as his domicile of choice. I do not mean to say or imply that it is necessary for the purpose of giving jurisdiction in an action for a civil debt to establish domicile such as would regulate a man's succession. But since issue has been joined on that question, I am content to say that I agree with the conclusion of the Lord Ordinary.

It is also urged that jurisdiction is constituted by the defender's ownership of heritable property in Scotland, i.e., a house in Hamilton Place, Aberdeen, of which he was owner from May 1903 to 16th December 1904. But the answer is that the summons was not served upon him till 30th December 1904. It is attempted to get rid of this obvious difficulty by urging that the transfer on 16th December was a mere trick or device which the defender's agent was enabled to carry out by asking for and [1] Jan. 19, 1798, F. C. [2] 1 W. & S. 716.

No. 164.
July 6, 1905.
Buchan v. Grimaldi.

obtaining delay in raising the action. But I agree with the Lord Ordinary that it is not proved that the request for delay was necessarily the cause of the summons not being served until after the disposition had been executed. Nor do I think that the defender's plea is affected even if it were clear that the disposition, assuming it to be an absolute and not merely a simulate one, was made with the intention and for the purpose of escaping the jurisdiction of the Scottish Courts.

Again, it is said that in an action of this kind a residence of forty days is enough to give jurisdiction. That may be if the summons had been served while the defender was still in this country. But he had left Scotland fourteen days before the summons was served. As I am responsible for some observations in Bapty's case[1] to the effect that jurisdiction which had been acquired over a foreigner by forty days' residence in Scotland endured for forty days after he had left it, it is right that I should say that the fuller discussion which this question received in the case of Corstorphine[2] has convinced me that there is no sufficient warrant for this artificial extension of time. Be it observed at the same time that both Bapty's[1] and Corstorphine's case[2] related to the citation of foreigners, and nothing that was said or decided in either of them can affect the case of a man whose usual place of abode is in Scotland.

I am of opinion that we should adhere to the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, with the slight variation proposed by Lord Kyllachy.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD KINCAIRNEY concurred.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Refuse the reclaiming note, and with the following finding in fact, (3) that the defender was not resident in Scotland on 30th December 1904, and had not been so residing for at least fourteen days previous to said date, affirm the said interlocutor reclaimed against, and decern," &c.

MACKAY & YOUNG, W.S.—MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 165.
July 7, 1905.
British Linen Co. v. Purdie.

THE BRITISH LINEN COMPANY, Pursuers (Respondents).—M'Clure, K.C.—G. C. Stewart.
JANET GOUDIE PURDIE, Defender (Appellant).—Deas.—Spens.

Lease—Management and Occupation—Shop—Affixing show-cases outside shop—Reasonable use of premises.—The tenant of a draper's shop in Ayr, without the consent of the landlord, put up show-cases attached by stanchions to the outside walls of the shop.

Held that, in the absence of proof of general custom of trade in Ayr, this was not impliedly authorised by the lease.

2D DIVISION.

BY lease, dated 7th and 30th July 1902, William Bain as commissioner for the British Linen Company, let to Miss Janet Goudie Purdie, draper and milliner, Ayr, a shop No. 119 High Street, Ayr, for ten years from Whitsunday 1902, to be used by her "as a shop in connection with the carrying on of her business of draper and milliner, and for no other purpose."

The premises let formed part of the ground floor of the British

[1] 18 R. 843. [2] 1 F. 287.

No. 165.
July 7, 1905.
British Linen Co. v. Purdie.

Linen Company's Bank buildings. The central portion of the ground floor was occupied by the Bank as their office. The shop let to Miss Purdie was separated from the Bank's office by an entrance leading to dwelling-houses above. The side walls of the shop let terminated in piers or butts projecting on to the pavement. To the outside ends of each of these piers, Miss Purdie, without obtaining leave from the landlords, affixed a show-case. The landlords requested her to remove these show-cases, but she refused to do so.

The British Linen Company thereupon brought the present action in the Sheriff Court at Ayr against Miss Purdie. The pursuers prayed the Court to ordain the defender to remove the two show-cases and to restore the front of the property to the condition in which it was prior to the defender's interference therewith, and failing her so removing and restoring, for warrant to the pursuers so to remove and restore at her expense.

The pursuers pleaded;—The defender having interfered with the outside walls of the property of the pursuers as libelled, she is bound to remove said show-cases, and to restore the walls to the condition in which they were prior to her interference.

The defender pleaded;—(2) The defender having, in accordance with custom of trade, a right to erect show-cases on the outside walls of her shop, the petition should be dismissed, with expenses. (3) The defender being entitled to the full use and enjoyment of her premises, leased by her from the pursuers, and no infringement of the terms of the lease having been committed, she is entitled to absolvitor, with expenses.

A proof was allowed, and led. The manner in which the show-cases were affixed to the piers is stated in the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute. The defender ultimately conceded that she had failed to prove a custom of trade, but she founded upon the evidence led as shewing that the affixing of the show-cases was such a reasonable use of the premises let as to be impliedly sanctioned by the lease. The evidence so founded upon was to the effect that it was common for drapers to have such show-cases affixed to the outside of their shops.

On 20th December 1904 the Sheriff-substitute (Shairp), pronounced an interlocutor in which he found in fact,—"(1) That defender is tenant of the shop, No. 119 High Street, Ayr, under the pursuers, for the period of ten years from Whitsunday 1902, conform to the lease No. 10 of process. (2) That, without the consent of the pursuers, the defender, on or about 15th June 1904, erected the two show-cases in front of said premises of the size and in the position detailed on the plan No. 22 of process, and that she has so maintained them since the foresaid date without the consent of the pursuers. (3) That each of the defender's show-cases is attached by screw nails to two hold-fasts driven into the concrete pavement in front of the premises in question, and that at the top each show-case is held in position by attachment to a metal pin about half an inch in diameter inserted inward for a distance of about two inches between the stones of the channelled ashlar front of the butts belonging to the pursuers, as shewn on the plan No. 22 of process. (4) That no general custom of trade has been proved to exist in Ayr under which tenants are in the habit of erecting show-cases, in such positions as the defender's cases, and with similar attachments, without the consent of the proprietors of the respective subjects"; found in law,—"That in these circumstances the defender was not entitled originally to erect the said show-cases, with such attachments, in the position in which they stand, without the consent of the pursuers, nor is she now entitled so to maintain them, without such consent," and accordingly granted decree in terms of the prayer of the petition.

No. 165.
July 7, 1905.
British Linen Co. v. Purdie.

The defender appealed to the Sheriff (Brand), who by interlocutor, dated 6th April 1905, adhered to the interlocutor appealed against, and dismissed the appeal.

The defender appealed to the Court of Session, and argued;—The only ground of action pleaded was the interference with the outside walls by driving in the nails. The encroachment on the pavement in front of the shop was not pleaded as a ground for the action. No injury to the walls was proved. Even if the evidence was not sufficient to prove a custom, it was sufficient to shew that this was a reasonable use of premises let for a draper's shop. The putting up of show-cases was necessary for the purposes of the defender's business, and was not injurious to the landlord. In such circumstances the landlord was not entitled to object during the currency of the lease.[1] There was no inversion of the purposes for which the premises were let.[2] This was just the same as the case of a barber putting up his pole, or a druggist his pestle and mortar, or any shopkeeper his signboard.

Argued for the pursuers and respondents;—The defender had no exclusive right in the ends of the side walls of her shop, which were outside the subjects let to her altogether. There was no rule of law that a tenant had an implied right to do anything to the outside walls which a Court might consider a reasonable use of the premises if it was advantageous to himself and not specially injurious to the landlord. The terms of the lease could not be modified or added to except by clear proof of universal custom.[3] Proof of what generally happens was not enough.[4] There could be no implied right under a lease to interfere with the outside walls unless such interference was sanctioned by universal usage, as in the case of putting up a signboard shewing the tenant's name and business. Putting up show-cases was not so sanctioned.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—This is a regrettable litigation about a very small matter, arising between landlord and tenant. The British Linen Company are proprietors of a building in the town of Ayr, where they have their bank offices, and the defender is their tenant of premises let to her "as a shop in connection with the carrying on of her business of draper and milliner, under a ten years' lease. She has erected against the outer wall abutting upon her shop two show-cases for the purpose of exhibiting her goods, and these cases are attached to the wall in the manner described by the Sheriff-substitute in his judgment of 20th December 1904, as follows:—"Each of the defender's show-cases is attached by screw-nails to two hold-fasts driven into the concrete pavement in front of the premises in question, and at the top each show-case is held in position by attachment to a metal pin about half an inch in diameter inserted inward for a distance of [1] Stirling v. Strang, Feb. 26, 1857, 19 D. 568, 29 Scot. Jur. 268; Keith v. Reid, June 16, 1870, 8 Macph. (H. L.) 110, 42 Scot. Jur. 425.

[2] Rankine on Leases (2d ed.), p. 225.
[3] Dickson on Evidence, sec. 1093.
[4] Brown v. M'Connell, June 7, 1876, 3 R. 788.

No. 165. July 7, 1905. British Linen Co. v. Purdie.

about two inches between the stones of the channelled ashlar front of the butts belonging to the pursuers."

The Bank has brought this action for the removal of these show-cases, and the prayer of the petition is "to ordain the defender to remove two show-cases which she has fixed on the front walls of the shop, No. 119 High Street, Ayr, of which the pursuers are the proprietors, and the defender is the tenant, and to restore the front of the property belonging to the pursuers to the condition in which it was prior to the defenders' interference therewith." Both the Sheriff-substitute and the Sheriff have given decree in terms of the prayer of the petition. The case which the learned Sheriffs had to consider was entirely based on custom of trade, and the plea to that effect is the second plea for the defender, which is,—"The defender having, in accordance with custom of trade, a right to erect show-cases on the outside walls of her shop, the petition should be dismissed, with expenses." The learned Sheriffs have found that the defender has failed to prove her averment of custom of trade. The defender's counsel here, feeling that it would be difficult to maintain that plea, has given it up, and has fallen back on the argument that this was reasonable use of the premises let, and so impliedly allowed by the lease, and he has used the evidence to shew that this was a reasonable use to make of the outside wall. This new argument must rest on the proposition that, when erections attached to the outer wall of the premises let are found to be useful and convenient to the tenant and not materially injurious to the landlord, they are therefore within the lease, and impliedly authorised by it. I find myself unable to assent to that proposition. I do not say there might not be such attachments. For instance—and this is probably the instance which would occur to everyone—a signboard bearing the name of the shopkeeper is so universally recognised as part of the equipment of a shop that the law would hold it to be authorised by implication. But that is not the case here. The defender's witnesses do not say that the show-cases were necessary for the shop, but merely that they were convenient. If that is all that can be said in their favour, I do not think we can hold that there is any implication that the tenant may thus interfere with the outer structure of the building without the consent of the landlord.

On this ground I concur with the conclusion to which the Sheriffs came.

Lord Kyllachy.—I agree with Lord Stormonth-Darling that the alleged custom has not been proved. On the question whether the affixment of these show-cases to the outside of the defender's shop was, apart from custom, so reasonable a use of the premises let to her as to be impliedly authorised by her lease, I also agree with Lord Stormonth-Darling.

Lord Kincairney.—I have considerable doubt as to this case, but I am not prepared to dissent from your Lordships' decision. I agree that there is no sufficient proof of custom. The question comes to be whether what the defender did was so impliedly within the lease that she was entitled to do it. It is not said that what she did was injurious to the proprietor, and it is said that it was in accordance with the purposes for which the premises were let. What, then, are the things which a tenant of a shop may do to

No. 165.

July 7, 1905.
British Linen Co. v. Purdie.

the shop as being within the scope of the lease? Some things undoubtedly the tenant may do without special sanction. He may, for example, put up his name on the shop. Such a use of the subject of lease would be sanctioned by universal custom, and there may be other uses of a like kind. It is said that what was done here was going a long way beyond that, and certainly no such custom in support of it has been proved. I am not prepared to say that she can put up these show-cases. There is no authority to the effect that she can. But I am very averse to saying that she cannot.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK concurred.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Find in fact and in law in terms of the findings in the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute of Ayrshire, dated 20th December 1904: Dismiss the appeal, and affirm the said interlocutor, and also the interlocutor of the Sheriff dated 6th April 1905; of new ordain the defender to remove the two show-cases described in the prayer of the petition within ten days from the date of intimation hereof, and to restore the front of the property belonging to the pursuers to the condition in which it was prior to the defender's operations thereon: Failing the defender removing and restoring in terms hereof, Grant warrant to the pursuers to have the necessary removal and restoration effected at the expense of the defender, and Decern."

MACKENZIE & KERMACK, W.S.—J. A. KESSEN, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 166.

July 11, 1905.
Wilson v. Wordie & Co.

WILLIAM BROWN WILSON, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Dunbar.
WORDIE & COMPANY, Defenders (Respondents).—Watt, K.C.—R. S. Horne.

Reparation—Negligence—Safety of the Public—Accident to member of the public caused by horse let out on hire—Liability of owner of the horse to the member of the public.—A child was run over and killed in a public street by an ammunition waggon belonging to a regiment of volunteer artillery. The waggon was drawn by horses which had been hired out by a firm of carting contractors, two of the volunteers being the drivers. The father of the child brought an action against the contractors. He averred that the horses had run off and got beyond the control of the drivers, who were young members of the volunteer regiment; that the horses were unsuited for the purpose for which they were hired, being young and restive and unaccustomed to drawing ammunition waggons; that they had never previously been driven as a pair; and that the defenders were aware of these defects.

Held (aff. judgment of Lord Ardwall) that the pursuer had not stated a relevant case of fault against the defenders.

Opinion per curiam that it could not be affirmed as an absolute proposition that under no circumstances could a horse-hirer be liable to a member of the public for injuries caused by horses hired out by him.

2D DIVISION. Lord Ardwall.

(SEE Wilson v. 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, Nov. 30, 1904, supra, p. 168.)

In April 1905 William Brown Wilson, tramway inspector, Edinburgh, brought an action against Wordie & Company, carting contractors, Lothian Road, Edinburgh, concluding for decree for £500 as

No. 166. damages on account of the death of the pursuer's daughter, Marjory Wilson.

July 11, 1905. Wilson v. Wordie & Co.

The pursuer averred;—(Cond. 2) "On Saturday, 14th March 1903, the pursuer's wife was walking up Lothian Road in the direction of Grindlay Street, with her youngest child in a perambulator and her only daughter, Marjory Wilson, who was then six years of age, walking by her side. As they were passing the island platform situated for the accommodation of foot-passengers directly opposite the Lothian Road Board School, an ammunition waggon belonging to the 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, and drawn by two horses hired by them as after mentioned from the defenders, suddenly came from the direction of Grindlay Street at a furious, runaway pace. Marjory Wilson accordingly took refuge on the said island platform, but the horses of the said ammunition waggon dashed on to the platform, knocked her down, and so seriously injured her that she died shortly afterwards. The said horses, which were quite unsuited for the purpose of drawing guns and ammunition waggons, on account of being untrained and unaccustomed to such work, had run off and got beyond the control of the drivers, who were young members of the volunteer corps." (Cond. 3) "The said volunteer corps, for the purposes of a march-out on the public streets of Edinburgh, had entered into a contract of hire with the defenders, under which the defenders undertook to supply a considerable number of horses for the purpose of drawing heavy guns and ammunition waggons along the public streets. It was the duty of the defenders, knowing that the said horses were for use on the public streets, to have supplied quiet and well-trained horses, but they failed to do so, and the death of the pursuer's said daughter was thus caused by the defenders' fault or negligence. The defenders, knowing that the horses which they used for their business had not been trained or exercised in drawing guns and ammunition waggons, and that their use involved danger to the public, stipulated with the said volunteer corps that they should be relieved of any damage which happened to the public while the horses were under their charge. In point of fact the horses so supplied by the defenders, including the horses which ran away, had not been trained or exercised in any way in such work, and such training or exercise was necessary before they could be safely used in the public streets. In particular, the horses attached to the runaway gun waggon already condescended on were young and restive and had never previously been yoked together as a pair, and had never before drawn an ammunition waggon. They were harnessed differently from what they were accustomed to. The defenders were aware of all these circumstances, and should not have hired out said horses for said purpose. The defenders were further well aware that the horses could not be safely yoked as a pair to the said military waggon. The said horses, in consequence of their not having been trained, resisted violently being yoked at the yard at Lochrin Place, to which they were sent by the defenders to be harnessed to the gun waggons." (Cond. 4) "The accident was caused through the fault of the defenders. It was gross negligence on their part to hire out the said untrained horses for use on the public streets in Edinburgh. . . ."

The pursuer pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuer's daughter having been killed through the fault of the defenders, they are liable in reparation.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuer's averments

No. 166.
July 11, 1905.
Wilson v. Wordie & Co.

are irrelevant and insufficient to support his pleas. (3) The said accident not having occurred through any fault on the part of the defenders, they ought to be assoilzied.

On 9th June 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Ardwall) sustained the first plea in law for the defenders, and dismissed the action.*

The pursuer reclaimed.[1]

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—The question for our decision is whether the pursuer has stated upon record a relevant case entitling him to an issue.

I am far from saying that a person who hires out horses is absolutely exempt from a claim for damages at the instance of a person who has been injured by them merely because he has hired them out to a third party, under whose temporary control they are for the time. I can well conceive a case in which blame might be brought home to him, e.g., supposing he were to hire out without notice or warning a notoriously vicious and dangerous animal. I am not prepared to say that the owner might not in such a case be liable although the horse was at the time of the accident under the control of another.

We have, however, no such case here. There are no averments that the horses were vicious. What is said is that they should not have been hired out to draw these ammunition waggons through the streets. But it is not

---

* "OPINION.—On 14th March 1903 the pursuer's child was run over and killed while on an island platform in Lothian Road by an ammunition waggon belonging to the 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers drawn by horses belonging to the defenders and driven by a young artilleryman. The accident was a sad and deplorable one, but I am of opinion that the pursuer has failed to state a relevant case against the present defenders, and that he is not entitled to an issue. The defenders are carting contractors, and use a number of horses in their business. They were applied to by the 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers for horses to draw their guns and ammunition waggons on Saturday, 14th March 1903. They gave them horses which the pursuer states (Cond. 3) 'they used in their own business,' and the pursuer seeks to make them liable as for fault because such horses 'had not been trained or exercised in drawing guns and ammunition waggons.' This is really the whole case, and it seems to me to be irrelevant. No duty lay on the defenders, who were mere carting contractors, and not horse-dealers or horse-breakers, to train horses for artillery service; indeed they had not the means of doing so. Further, it cannot be said they were in fault in not refusing to give the artillerymen horses at all; it was not for them, but for the artillerymen, to judge whether the horses in question were fit for artillery purposes, and could be safely used for drawing guns and ammunition waggons on the public streets.

"But apart from all this, I am of opinion that the person liable to members of the public for an accident such as this is the person using the horses either by himself or his servants, and not the person who hired out the horses to him, and who has no control of them when they leave his stable. It may be that the person who takes the horses on hire will have an action of relief against the person who hired out the horses, if the accident was due to inherent vice in the horses. But the horse-hirer has in the ordinary case no contract with, and no duty to, the public, whatever may be his liabilities to the person to whom he has hired out a horse."

[1] Cited at the hearing by Pursuer:—Cotteril v. Starkey, 1839, 8 Carr. and Payne, 691; by the Defenders—Laugher v. Pointer, 1826, 5 Barn. and Cress. 547.

No. 166.
July 11, 1905.
Wilson v. Wordie & Co.

said that they had never drawn waggons through the streets before, nor is anything stated to shew that an ammunition waggon differs in any material respect from any ordinary waggon. It is said that the animals were young and restive, and had never previously been yoked together as a pair. But it is evident that the quietness and safety of horses is a matter of degree. Many horses are more or less addicted to shying and other indications of nervousness or excitability, yet it cannot be said that no such horses are to be used, and that they should all be sent to the knacker. It is all a question of degree. Some horses are restive in the hands of an inexperienced man, while perfectly docile in those of a better rider or driver, and it is a noticeable point in this case that the pursuer himself avers that these horses were put under the control of young members of the Volunteer Corps, which would seem to point to fault or incapacity on the part of the drivers selected by the persons who hired them, and not the hirers-out. The latter were entitled to assume that their horses would be under the control of competent men. There is no averment that in the hands of such men they would have been dangerous. As to the averment that they had never been in double harness together, it is quite absurd to suggest that a jobmaster is only entitled to send out as a pair horses which have actually been together in harness previously. It is said, too, that they were differently harnessed from what was usual. But there is no indication of any respects in which the military harness was abnormal, nor is it said that the attention of the hirers was drawn to the fact that their animals would be put into anything other than ordinary double harness to which they were broken. I have alluded to these points as illustrating the general vague and unsatisfactory nature of the averments upon which I have no doubt in holding the pursuer is not entitled to an issue. Subject to the qualification indicated at the commencement of my opinion, I agree with the Lord Ordinary.

Lord Kyllachy.—I concur. I am not prepared to affirm the proposition suggested in the last paragraph of the Lord Ordinary's opinion, namely, that in no circumstances could a horse-hirer be liable to members of the public for injuries caused by horses let out by him. Cases I think might well be figured in which it would be very difficult to affirm that proposition. But the position here is that we have no averments raising any question of that nature—no averments of circumstances involving any such responsibility. On the contrary, there is nothing in the pursuer's averments inconsistent with the supposition that the horses were safe and free from vice, and that, as indeed some of the pursuer's averments seem to suggest, the true and proximate cause of the accident was the fact that the persons to whom the horses were let placed them under the charge of young and inexperienced drivers.

Lord Kincairney.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I quite assent to all that has been said, and do not find it necessary to add anything.

Lord Stormonth-Darling concurred.

The Court adhered.

R. S. Rutherford, Solicitor—Connell & Campbell, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 167.

July 11, 1905.

Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees.

GEORGE WILLIAM GALLOWAY, First Party.—Munro.
ANDREW GRAHAM AND ANOTHER (Campbell's Trustees), Second Parties.—J. S. Mackay.

Trust—Administration—Powers—Power to sell—Specific Legacy—Power to sell specific subject held in trust for liferenter and fiars.—A testator, inter alia, directed her trustees "to hold in their own name my shares of the G. C. Railway Company, and pay the dividends or annual income thereof to" her nephew George "during his lifetime, and immediately after the decease of the said" George "I direct my said trustees to realise the said shares and to pay the price or value thereof" to George's children, whom failing to his heirs, executors, or successors whomsoever. The truster empowered her trustees "to sell and realise . . . the whole or any part of my estate, heritable or moveable, in so far as may be necessary or proper in their discretion." In 1905, as the shares were yielding no income, George requested the trustees to sell them and to reinvest the proceeds.

In a special case presented by the trustees held (diss. Lord Stormonth-Darling) that the trustees had power to sell the shares.

2D DIVISION.

MRS JESSIE GALLOWAY OR CAMPBELL, widow of John Campbell, wine and spirit merchant, Slateford, died on 13th January 1899, leaving a trust-disposition and settlement, dated 30th November 1898, by which she conveyed her whole means and estate, heritable and moveable, real and personal, to certain persons (including her nephew George William Galloway) as trustees for the purposes specified.

The third purpose was in the following terms:—"(Third) I direct my trustees to hold in their own name my shares of the Great Central Railway Company, and pay the dividends or annual income thereof to the said George William Galloway during his lifetime, and immediately after the decease of the said George William Galloway, I direct my said trustees to realise the said shares and to pay the price or value thereof to such child or children of the said George William Galloway, at such ages or times, in such shares and in such manner and form as the said George William Galloway shall by a writing under his hand direct and appoint, and failing such direction and appointment to and in favour of the lawful child or whole children of the said George William Galloway, equally among them, share and share alike; and failing children of the said George William Galloway, to and in favour of his heirs, executors, or successors whomsoever."

The trust-settlement conferred the following powers on the trustees:—"Declaring that my trustees shall have the fullest powers and privileges, statutory and otherwise, and in particular they may, without prejudice to their statutory and legal powers, appoint factors and law-agents out of their own number, and pay him or them the usual professional remuneration. They may sell and realise either by public roup or private bargain the whole or any part of my estate, heritable or moveable, in so far as may be necessary or proper in their discretion, and any of my trustees or beneficiaries may become purchasers. They may borrow money on the security of the trust-estate or any part of it, and may grant bonds and dispositions in security and all other necessary deeds. They may invest the trust funds on heritable security or on mortgages or debentures of public companies or corporations or the purchase of feu-duties, ground-annuals, and heritable subjects, or retain the same in bank, or continue any of the investments made by myself, and from time to time call up and vary the same."

No. 167.

July 11, 1905. Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees.

In June 1905 a special case was presented for determination of the question whether the trustees had power to sell the shares of the Great Central Railway Company mentioned in the third purpose of the settlement.

The first party was the truster's nephew, George William Galloway, mentioned in the third purpose, and the second parties were Andrew Graham and the said George William Galloway, the surviving trustees acting under the settlement.

The case set forth :—"The second parties, after the truster's death, ascertained that she held a certificate for £500 of 5 per cent Preference Stock 1894 of the Great Central Railway Company, referred to in her trust-disposition and settlement as 'my shares of the Great Central Railway Company.' She had acquired the stock in March 1898, and had received two half years' dividends of 5 per cent thereon, for the half years ending 30th June and 31st December 1898. . . . In the course of their administration, the said railway stock was transferred to the second parties, . . . and they have since continued to hold the same. . . . The said railway stock, although a preference stock, is postponed in competition with all the preference stocks of the company created previous to 22d June 1894, and since the death of the truster on 13th January 1899 the second parties have not received, and have not therefore been able to pay to the first party (the beneficiary entitled under the third purpose of the foresaid trust-disposition and settlement to receive the same) any dividend or annual income in respect of the said railway stock.

"The first party having thus received no benefit from the gift to him by the truster, has requested the second parties to realise the said railway stock, to hold and reinvest the proceeds, and to pay him the annual income thereof; and he maintains that the second parties have power to do this under the said trust-disposition and settlement. The second parties, while they consider that it would be proper now to realise the said stock, and have been so advised by the stockbrokers whom they have consulted, maintain that they have no power to realise the said railway stock during the lifetime of the first party."

The case further stated that George William Galloway, the first party, was unmarried.

The question of law was :—"Have the second parties power to realise the said stock of the Great Central Railway Company during the lifetime of the first party?"

The nature of the arguments sufficiently appears from the opinions of the Court.[1]

At advising,—

LORD KYLLACHY.—I am of opinion that we should answer in the affirmative the question that is put to us in this special case. The power of sale in the settlement is quite general. It applies in terms to "every part" of the trust-estate. In other words, it applies in terms not only to subjects or investments held by the trustees as part of the residue, or for payment of general legacies, but also, I apprehend, equally to subjects which are held for behoof of particular beneficiaries, or, as is the case here, for a particular beneficiary in liferent, and his children, if he has any, in fee. Such sub-

[1] Cited by the First Party:—Weir's Trustees, June 13, 1877, 4 R. 876; Downie, June 10, 1879, 6 R. 1013; Birkmyre, Feb. 5, 1881, 8 R. 477.

No. 167.

July 11, 1905.
Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees.

jects are of course parts of the trust-estate, and I know of no rule to the effect that powers of sale generally expressed do not apply to them.

That being so, it appears to me that if it be proposed to except such subjects from the general power, it must be by reason of something deduced from the nature and object of the special bequest—something which makes it clear that the application to it of the general powers would be contrary to the truster's intention. And such truster's intention would have to be deduced from something more than the mere letter of the provision. It would have, I think, to be deduced upon a consideration of what appeared to be the truster's real purpose and object, and in dubio upon what appeared to be her main purpose and object.

The question therefore is, can it be fairly deduced from the terms and character of this special bequest that the truster's true purpose and object with regard to these Great Central Company's shares was really this: That having, for some reason, sanguine views as to the prospective value of these shares, she desired to commit her trustees and her nephew for, it may be, the next fifty years, to what was really a speculation? Is that to be held as her ruling intention? Or, on the other hand, should it not rather be held that the terms of the special bequest mean after all only this: That having assigned to her nephew and her nephew's children, as their share of her trust-estate, this particular investment, the truster desired that it should not be handed over at once, but held in trust—held as part of her trust-estate, and subject to all the powers of her trustees—for the purpose simply of securing in common form her nephew's liferent and his children's fee.

It appears to me that the latter is the true view. The question is not one as to an heirloom, or as to a family estate, or a family residence, or anything of that sort. There is no suggestion of any delectus, such as might be held in such cases. The case is, I think, just the same as if the subject of the bequest was a tenement of houses, or a range of shops, or some similar subject, which the truster had bought as an investment, and over which (as here) she desired to create and secure a liferent by a trust set up in the usual terms. I do, I confess, think that with respect to such a bequest and relative trust it is easier to read into the bequest such words as "or the proceeds thereof when sold," or such words as "subject always to the powers herein expressed," than to read into the subsequent "powers clause" words of exception—words excluding an important part of the trust-estate from the general power.

I may perhaps add, that although the cases cited to us under the Trusts Act may not be directly applicable, these cases, and particularly the case of Birkmyre,[1] appear to me to shew very distinctly that if there had been in this trust-deed no power of sale at all, the Court, if applied to, would have had no particular difficulty in granting the power of sale claimed. They certainly granted the power in the case of Birkmyre[1] although the properties proposed to be sold formed, as here, the subject of a special bequest, and were, as here, directed to be held during a liferent and sold at its termination. And they did so upon the ground that even in such a case (a case where there was no power of sale at all) an immediate sale was (if found

[1] 8 R. 477.

No. 167.
July 11, 1905.
Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees.

expedient) not inconsistent with the truster's intention. It rather appears to me that if that could be affirmed there, where the question was as to the introduction into the deed of a power of sale, it may a fortiori be affirmed here, where the question is only as to the application of a particularly wide general power to a certain part of the trust-estate.

I should perhaps also add that we, of course, assume that the trustees, in proposing to sell the shares in question are acting fairly and honestly and in the general interest. They state that they have been advised by their stockbroker that a sale is expedient, and we are not called upon even to consider the matter.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—I have found this a difficult case, as to which my opinion has wavered. I have ultimately come to think that the answer may be affirmative. No doubt the direction to hold during the life of the first party is definite and clear, and I do not suggest that it can be read as a power to realise. The general power to realise is also clear, and might no doubt cover the Great Central shares. Yet I do not consider that there is any inconsistency or repugnancy between the two parts of the deed. They are easily reconciled by holding that the general power of sale applies to the shares only after the first party's death. There would be no inconsistency if the general power to sell were so read.

But I think that is not the whole case, and that the special character of the shares requires consideration, and also the limited nature of the first party's professed intention.

The truster acquired the shares in March 1898, and she received two dividends on 30th June and on 31st December 1898. Her trust-deed was executed on 30th November 1898, so that when she bequeathed these shares she bequeathed them as a dividend-yielding subject, and she mentions the dividends specially. But her trustees inform us that the shares have never yielded a dividend since, so that it may be fairly concluded that they have proved a different kind of property than she intended and supposed. The testatrix died on 13th January 1899, before another term of paying dividend had arrived.

The first party does not venture on any prophecy as to the future of these shares. Had he been able to affirm that they were falling in the market, and would in all likelihood continue to fall, there might have been very plausible reasons for authorising a sale, on the principle of the case of Downie,[1] which was quoted at the debate, in which heritable property which from change of circumstances had lost its value was sold by trustees with the authority of the Court, although the trust-deed contained no power of sale. No statement to that effect has been made, but both parties have stated that they have been advised that it would be wise to sell.

The right and interest of the first party is really the only obstacle to the sale. If he were dead there would be no doubt about the power and the duty of the trustees. There seems no one else who has an interest to oppose a sale. There is no reason to suppose that the truster had any predilection for the shares, or looked on them otherwise than as an investment. It may be worthy of notice that the first party's professed object is not the conversion of the shares into cash, but only an alteration of the investment.

[1] 6 R. 1013.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—The first party to this special case is a nephew of the testatrix and a beneficiary under her will, the third purpose of which directs her trustees to hold in their own name her shares of the Great Central Railway Company, and pay the dividends or annual income thereof to him during his lifetime. The deed then goes on to direct that immediately after the decease of the said George William Galloway the trustees are "to realise the said shares and to pay the price or value thereof" to such child or children of the said George William Galloway at such ages or times, in such shares and in such manner and form as he may appoint, and failing such directions, to such child or children equally, and failing children to and in favour of his heirs, executors, or successors whomsoever. The testatrix died in January 1899 possessed of £500 5 per cent Preference Stock 1894 of the Great Central Railway Company, which she had acquired in March 1898, and on which she had received two half years' dividends at the rate of 5 per cent. Since her death the trustees have received no dividend on this stock, which is postponed in competition with all the preference stocks of the company created prior to June 1894. The first party having thus received no benefit from the gift in his favour has requested the trustees to realise the said stock, to hold and reinvest the proceeds, and to pay him the annual income thereof. And the question of law is, whether they have power to do so during the lifetime of the first party.

I am sorry to differ on this question, especially as the proposal to sell the stock would undoubtedly be for the immediate advantage of the liferenter, who for more than five years has received no benefit from the bequest. There may be reason to suppose that if the testatrix had contemplated that the stock would so soon cease to be an income-bearing subject (whatever its ultimate fate may be) she would have worded her bequest differently. But we must take the will as we find it, and it seems to me that it gives the trustees no power to do what they are here asked to do. The third purpose admittedly gives no such power, for it contains a positive direction to the trustees to hold the stock and pay the dividends or annual income thereof to the first party during his lifetime, and to realise immediately after his decease. Moreover, this bequest, being of a certain amount of stock in a particular undertaking, is a special legacy which has some well-known characteristics and consequences. Its efficacy depends on the continued existence of the thing bequeathed, so that, if (for example) it had been sold by the testatrix during her life, it would have been adeemed, and its proceeds or value could not have been recognised as a substitute. Further, a special legacy does not abate like general legacies in the event of there being a deficiency of funds to meet the testamentary provisions as a whole. In short, the special legatee has some advantages and some disadvantages, and the characteristic which pervades both is that he must follow the fortunes of the thing bequeathed.

But the first party finds a justification for his demand in the powers of sale and investment given to the trustees towards the end of the deed. The power of sale is expressed in very wide terms thus—"They may sell and realise either by public roup or private bargain the whole or any part of my estate, heritable or moveable, in so far as may be necessary or proper in their discretion, and any of my trustees or beneficiaries may become purchasers." And later on, with regard to investment, it is declared that the trustees may invest the trust funds in a number of specified modes, including the power to "continue any of the investments made by myself, and from time to time to call up and vary the same."

No. 167.

July 11, 1905. Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees.

Now, does this power of sale apply to the Great Central Railway stock at all? No power was required for the ultimate realisation of the stock at the death of the liferenter, because an absolute direction to sell is higher than a power, and involves it. It cannot therefore be said that this power answers the description of being "necessary," which is one of the qualifications under which it is granted. Neither can it be said to answer the other description of being "proper in the trustees' discretion," unless it can be held that it is a matter of discretion whether or not the trustees are to obey a positive direction of the testatrix. I confess that, with all the will to stretch this power to its utmost legitimate length, I cannot for my own part so hold. In other words, I cannot hold that this discretionary power, which of course must be construed as granted for the purpose of effectuating the other directions of the trust, is to be read as overriding one of these express and positive directions. It may be required to provide money for the payment of pecuniary legacies, just as the power of investment must certainly be required for the investment of pecuniary provisions which are to be held by the trustees, such as the sums of £1000 each which are given for the benefit of the first party's sisters in liferent and for their children or heirs in fee. But beyond carrying out these purposes, I cannot bring myself to think that either the power of sale or the power of investment was intended to go. I am therefore for answering the question in the negative.

I would only add that cases arising under the Trusts Acts do not seem to me to have any bearing. This is not an application of that nature, but brought simply to determine the powers of the trustees under the will, and if I am right in the view I have expressed as to the power of sale, the Court could not be asked to grant authority to sell, because it would be inconsistent with the intention of the trust.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK was absent.

THE COURT answered the question in the affirmative.

JAMES RORIE, W.S.—DOUGLAS & MILLER, W.S.—Agents.

No. 168.

July 11, 1905. C D v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland.

C D, Petitioner.—Party.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF LAW-AGENTS IN SCOTLAND, Respondents.—Hunter.

Administration of Justice—Law-Agents—Readmission to the Roll.—In 1894 an enrolled law-agent was convicted of forging and uttering a pretended interlocutor of a Lord Ordinary, finding him entitled to £35, and was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment. In 1896 his name was, on his own application, removed from the Register of Enrolled Law-Agents. In 1901 he presented a petition for readmission, which was refused.

No. 168.
July 11, 1905.
C D v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland.
1st Division.

In 1905 he presented another petition for readmission. The petition was opposed by the Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland, and it did not appear that, apart from the lapse of time, there was any change of circumstances since the refusal of the previous petition.

The Court refused the petition.

(See C D v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland, Oct. 18, 1901, 4 F. 4.)

On 20th July 1904 C D, an enrolled law-agent, pleaded guilty to a charge of forgery, in the following terms:—"(1) That he did utter as genuine a document, bearing to be a certified copy of a pretended interlocutor by the Honourable Lord Low, granting warrant upon the Bank of Scotland for payment to the panel of the several sums of money therein mentioned, amounting in all to the sum of £35, 19s. 11d., on which document the name of 'James D. Fraser' bore to be signed, as the party certifying said document to be a true copy, such signature being forged by the panel; by presenting said document to a clerk to the Accountant of Court, for the purpose of the panel receiving from him the deposit-receipt referred to in said pretended interlocutor, to enable the panel to draw said sums, which deposit-receipt the panel received; (2) in the head office of the Bank of Scotland, Bank Street, Edinburgh, the panel did utter as genuine another document, also bearing to be a certified copy of said pretended interlocutor, the signature 'James D. Fraser' thereon being forged by the panel, by presenting said document in said bank for the purpose of the panel receiving payment from said bank of the sum of £35, 19s. 11d."

He was convicted, and sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment.

On 23d June 1896 his name was removed, on his own application, from the Register of Enrolled Law-Agents.

On 1st July 1901 he presented a petition to the Court for readmission to the Roll of Law-Agents. On 18th October 1901 the Court refused the petition—4 F. 4.

The present petition was presented by C D, praying the Court "to readmit the petitioner as a law-agent . . . and to decern and ordain the Registrar of Law-Agents to restore the name of the petitioner to the Register of Enrolled Law-Agents, kept in terms of the statute thereanent; and also to decern and ordain the Keeper of the Register of Law-Agents practising in the Court of Session, and the Keepers of the Registers of Law-Agents practising in the Sheriff Courts of the Lothians and Peebles, to restore the petitioner's name to the said Register . . ."

The petitioner produced and referred to his former petition, the answers thereto, and all the documents on which that petition was based. The petitioner stated that till May 1904 he occupied the same position he did at the date of the former petition.

The Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland, upon whom the petition was appointed to be served, lodged answers, stating that the Council of the Society at a meeting held on 1st June 1905, were unanimously of opinion that the prayer of the petition should be opposed. The respondents also stated that since the prayer of the petition formerly presented by the petitioner was refused, no change of circumstances had occurred to warrant the granting of the present petition; and that the Council of the Society of Procurators of Midlothian was unanimously of opinion that it would not be in the interests of the profession that the present application be granted, and disapproved thereof.

No. 168. July 11, 1905. C D v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland.

Argued for the petitioner;—It appeared from the opinion delivered by the Lord President on the occasion of the former petition that his Lordship was under the impression that the petitioner desired to be admitted a member of a particular society of law-agents. That was a misapprehension. The petitioner did not desire admission to any society, but craved to be restored to the Register of Enrolled Law-Agents. That was a matter for the Court in the exercise of its discretion, and not for the Societies of Law-Agents which had intervened to express an opinion on the application. The offence in the present case was not of greater gravity than had been the offences in several cases in which the Courts had restored the offenders to the Roll, and in the circumstances the prayer of the petition should be granted.[1]

Argued for the respondents;—In Scotland the only case of a law-agent being restored was the case of A B v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents,[2] and the circumstances in that case were very special and of a kind which found no parallel in the present application. No new certificates had been produced with reference to the present application; the petitioner merely referred to the certificates produced with reference to the former application. On grounds of public policy the purity of the roll of law-agents should be carefully guarded. The offence of forging a document of Court was a very grave one, and the result of the investigation made by the respondents was that they decided to oppose the application. In a matter of this kind weight was to be attached to the opinion of such a Society as the respondents'. There was no case either in Scotland or England in which a solicitor who had been found guilty of forgery had been restored to the Roll.[3]

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this petition for readmission as a law-agent we are called upon to discharge what is always a delicate and sometimes a painful duty. The application is not the first made by the petitioner, because a similar application made by him was refused in 1901. I think I am stating no more than the fact when I say that since the date of that judgment there has been no change of circumstances even alleged except the change operated by the efflux of a certain portion of time. It is a fair consideration for your Lordships whether what may have been considered premature at that time is now any longer premature. Upon the general principles which should guide us I do not think there can be much room for doubt. On the one hand, we have to guard very carefully the purity of the roll of law-agents who are admitted to practise before the Courts of this country. On the other, no reason exists for the doctrine that persons once struck off that roll for having been convicted of crime cannot, under any circumstances, be readmitted. Obviously each case must be taken on its own merits, and there must be a distinction drawn between classes of crime. But I rather take the circumstances of the crime than the

[1] A B v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland, July 9, 1895, 22 R. 877; Anonymous, 1853, 17 Beavan's Rep. 475; In re Robins, 1865, 34 L. J. (Q. B.) 121; Re William Unwin, 1882, 72 L. T. (O. S.) 388.

[2] 22 R. 877.

[3] Garbett, 1856, 18 C. B. 403.

No. 168.
July 11, 1905.
C D v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland.

mere name into consideration, and I am not prepared to adhere to the dictum of Mr Justice Manisty[1] which has been quoted to us that the crime of forgery by a solicitor is an unpardonable offence. At the same time it is a crime which is a very serious one for the public interest, quite apart from whatever may be one's personal view of the particular circumstances in which it is committed. I do not think the Court would ever repone a solicitor who had been convicted of that crime unless it was shewn affirmatively that by his subsequent conduct he had so far earned the respect of his professional brethren that he was in a position to come to the Court asking to be restored with a substantial amount of support from those with whom he would thereafter be qualified to practise. I rest this view upon general grounds, and not upon the technical view of the petitioner being a member of a certain society. There is no doubt a trifling error in the opinion delivered on the occasion of the previous application as to the petitioner having been a member of that society, but my judgment in this matter does not depend on any such technicality; it depends upon the general proposition of the necessary vigilance the Court must use in safeguarding the purity of the whole body of law-agents practising before it. I am not to be understood by that to say that it is a necessity that we should have on such an application the imprimatur of the Incorporated Society of Law-Agents, who on this occasion have lodged answers opposing the prayer of this petition. That would be putting in their hands a duty which has been already committed to the Court. They are a perfectly proper body to consult, as your Lordships have done by ordering intimation of the petition to them, but they do not, and could not, represent the whole body of law-agents; and in any case, quite apart from that, it is for the Court to exercise its discretion, and not for them. At the same time their opinion is one which I think we shall always respectfully consider, and when, as in the present case, we find them opposing the prayer of the petition, and when there is, to put it no higher, a dearth of affirmative support on the other side, I come reluctantly to the conclusion that it would not be proper in the circumstances to grant the prayer of the petition.

LORD M'LAREN concurred.

LORD KINNEAR.—I have come with regret to the same conclusion, for the reasons your Lordship has given.

LORD ADAM was absent.

THE COURT refused the prayer of the petition.

PARTY—CARMENT, WEDDERBURN, & WATSON, W.S.—Agents.

No. 169.
July 11, 1905.
Crerar v. Clement's Trustee.

JOHN M'EWAN CRERAR, Appellant (Respondent).—D. Anderson.
WILLIAM JAMES WOOD (Clement's Trustee), Respondent (Appellant).—Crabb Watt, K.C.—D. P. Fleming.

Bankruptcy—Ranking—Preference—Adjudication by Trustee—Rectification of Claim—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. cap. 79), sec. 51.—A creditor on a sequestrated estate, who was entitled to a preferential [1] Re William Unwin, 1882, 72 L T. (O. S.) 388.

No. 169.
July 11, 1905.
Crerar v. Clement's Trustee.

ranking for arrears of wages, lodged a claim, which bore that the debt was for wages, but did not demand a preferential ranking. In a letter to the trustee on the sequestrated estate, accompanying the claim, the creditor stated, "As this is a preferable claim I shall be glad to have it settled at once." In acknowledging the claim the trustee wrote, "You need not, however, expect to get payment in full, as in any case the preference is limited." Eventually the trustee intimated to the creditor that he could not regard his debt as preferable, as it was not claimed as preferable in his affidavit and claim. The creditor thereupon offered to rectify his oath, and expressly state that he claimed a preference. The trustee refused to entertain this proposal and proceeded to adjudicate on the claim, treating it as a claim to an ordinary ranking. The creditor thereupon appealed to the Sheriff, who allowed him to lodge an amended affidavit and claim.

Against this interlocutor the trustee appealed and maintained that he was right in ranking the claim as an ordinary debt, and that it was incompetent to rectify a claim after it had been adjudicated on. Held that the creditor should have been allowed to rectify his claim.

Opinion by Lord M'Laren that, as a trustee is supposed to know, or to be able to ascertain, what debts are entitled in law to a preference, it is unnecessary in a claim for such a debt formally to demand a preference, if it be informally intimated to the trustee that the debt is entitled to a preferential ranking.

1ST DIVISION. Sheriff of Perthshire.

WILLIAM JAMES WOOD, accountant, Perth, was appointed trustee on the estates of David Thomas Clement, solicitor, Crieff, which had been sequestrated on 1st October 1902. John M'Ewan Crerar had been in the employment of the bankrupt as a law clerk, at a salary of £50 a year, and at the date of the sequestration the bankrupt was indebted to him for six months' salary. On 10th December 1902, Crerar lodged an affidavit and claim in the sequestration for £25, in which he stated that the sum claimed was due to him as wages, but did not ask for a preferential payment. He, however, enclosed the affidavit and claim in a letter addressed to the trustee, which was in these terms:—"Dear Sir,—I enclose affidavit and claim by me for salary. As this is a preferable claim I shall be glad to have it settled at once.—Yours faithfully," &c. To this the trustee replied on 11th December 1902:—"Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of affidavit and claim by you for wages, and requesting an immediate settlement. I have no funds in hand to pay any part of the claim meantime. You need not, however, expect to get payment in full, as in any case the preference is limited.—Yours faithfully," &c. And after further correspondence the trustee again wrote on 2d June 1903:—"Dear Sir,—Replying to yours of 30th ult., I write to inform you that I will not be in a position to make payment of any of the preferable claims until I know what other obligations I have to meet as trustee.—Yours faithfully," &c.

On 6th March 1905, Crerar had a meeting with the trustee, at which the trustee intimated to him that, as he had not claimed a preferential ranking in his affidavit, he could not obtain more than an ordinary ranking. Thereupon, on 9th March 1905, Crerar wrote to the trustee as follows:—"Dear Sir,—With reference to our conversation on Monday last regarding my claim I shall be glad to know if I am to receive payment of £15 which I offered to accept in full, if my claim was settled immediately. If not I will adhere to my original claim, p. £25 for six months, out of which I am justly entitled (under the Bankruptcy Act, 1875), to a preference for four months' wages, £16, 13s. 4d., and to rank as an ordinary creditor for the balance.

No. 169.

July 11, 1905.
Crerar v. Clement's Trustee.

Regarding your view that I am only entitled to an ordinary ranking, by omitting to mention that I claimed a preference, I think that on the face of it my affidavit, which distinctly stated that the debt was wages, will uphold my claim as preferable. If, however, you desire it, I shall be glad to rectify my oath on this point and expressly state that I claim a preference.—Yours faithfully," &c. To this the trustee replied on 15th March 1905:—"Dear Sir,—I was duly in receipt of your letter of 9th inst., but cannot entertain the proposal therein contained, and will leave the matter to be determined according to law. —Yours truly," &c.

The trustee proceeded to adjudicate on the claims, and intimated his deliverance to Crerar by a letter, dated 16th March 1905, which was in these terms:—"Dear Sir,—As trustee on the sequestrated estates of David Thomas Clement, solicitor, Crieff, I hereby intimate that a first and final dividend will be paid to those creditors whose claims have been admitted within our chambers here, on the 2d day of May next. The amount of your claim, as lodged, is £25. The proposed dividend on claims admitted is 3¼d. per £, but, in the event of my deliverances on claims rejected being appealed, the dividend will be 1d. per £, or thereby. . ."

Against this deliverance Crerar appealed to the Sheriff-substitute (Sym), who on 23d May 1905 pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Sheriff-substitute having heard the agent for the appellant, and the agent for the trustee, recalls hoc statu the deliverance appealed against: Allows the appellant to lodge with the trustee an amended affidavit and claim setting forth, if so advised, the nature and amount of the preference which he claims, and that within ten days from this date: Finds no expenses due to or by either party."

The trustee appealed, and argued;—It was incompetent for the Sheriff to allow the creditor to amend his claim at this stage. If a preference is desired it must be claimed in the affidavit.[1] That had not been done here, and therefore the claim was for an ordinary ranking only, and that the trustee had allowed.[2] The deliverance of the trustee was therefore in every way regular and unimpeachable, and it was incompetent for the creditor to appeal against it, for it had been pronounced on his own motion and gave him everything he had asked for.[3] A creditor could not amend his claim after it has been adjudicated upon and a deliverance pronounced upon it, and the amendment allowed here was therefore too late.[4] Section 51 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1856 * did not apply. That section provided for

[1] Bell's Com. (5th ed.), p. 337; Goudy on Bankruptcy, p. 341.

[2] Young v. Strathie, Sept. 8, 1896, 12 S. L. Rev. 366, Lord Trayner at p. 368.

[3] Watson v. Russell, Jan. 30, 1894, 21 R. 433.

[4] Commercial Bank of Scotland v. Speedie's Trustee, Nov. 27, 1885, 13 R. 257.

* The Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. c. 79), enacts, sec. 51,—"When it shall appear to the Sheriff or to the trustee that the oath or claim of any person produced with a view to voting or ranking, and drawing a dividend on the sequestration, is not framed in the manner required by this Act, the Sheriff or trustee, as the case may be, shall call upon such person, or his agent or mandatory, to rectify his oath and claim, pointing out to him wherein it is defective; and unless such person or his agent or mandatory shall thereupon make such alteration upon his oath and claim as may be necessary in order to rectify the same, the Sheriff or trustee,

No. 169.
July 11, 1905.
Crerar v. Clement's Trustee.

rectification of a claim only where it "is not framed in the manner required by this Act."[1] Here there was no such defect; it was quite competent for a creditor who might claim for a preferable debt to content himself by claiming for an ordinary ranking only. The proper course would have been for the creditor to withdraw his claim and lodge a new one, but the claims having been adjudicated on it was now too late to do so.[2]

Counsel for the respondent was not called on.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is one of those cases where, if we had been forced to decide in favour of the appellant, we should have done so with regret, for it would have been a most inequitable result. But I have heard nothing in the argument that has been submitted to us to make me think that the Sheriff was not perfectly right in issuing the interlocutor that is here appealed against. The creditor in this case was a clerk in the employment of the bankrupt, and he put in a claim for wages due to him, enclosing it in a letter in these terms:—"I enclose affidavit and claim by me for salary. As this is a preferable claim I shall be glad to have it settled at once.' So far from disclaiming this as a preferential claim the trustee's answer shews that he accepts it as such, for he replies:—"I am in receipt of affidavit and claim by you for wages, and requesting an immediate settlement. I have no funds in hand to pay any part of the claims meantime. You need not, however, expect to get payment in full, as in any case the preference is limited." So that, under the trustee's own hand, we have perfectly clear evidence that he knew that the creditor was claiming a preference, though it was not one he was prepared to satisfy at once or in full. Afterwards the trustee took up the very technical objection that this was not a good claim to a preference, as there was no demand for preferential payment stated in gremio of the affidavit and claim. When informed of this the creditor writes in reply:—"Regarding your view that I am only entitled to an ordinary ranking, by omitting to mention that I claimed a preference, I think that on the face of it my affidavit, which distinctly stated that the debt was wages, will uphold my claim as preferable. If, however, you desire it, I shall be glad to rectify my oath on this point, and expressly state that I claim a preference." Upon that the trustee does nothing but adjudicate on the claim as it stands, treating it as a claim to an ordinary ranking; and when the Sheriff says that the creditor is to be given an opportunity of putting his claim into an unambiguous form, the trustee takes this appeal here, and maintains that that cannot be allowed, as he has already adjudicated on the claim. It appears to me that this is very like an attempt to catch the creditor in a trap. Of course we might have had to hold that the trustee was right in his contention if there had been any-as the case may be, shall disallow or reject such oath and claim: Provided always, that when the failure to comply with the provisions of this Act shall appear to have been made for some improper or fraudulent purposes, or where injury can be qualified by the other creditors or any of them in respect thereof, it shall not be incumbent upon the Sheriff or trustee to give such person an opportunity to rectify his oath and claim as aforesaid."

---

[1] Young v. Strathie, 12 S. L. Rev. 366.

[2] Commercial Bank of Scotland v. Speedie's Trustees, 13 R. 257.

No. 169.

July 11, 1905.

Crerar v. Clement's Trustee.

thing in the Bankruptcy Act to support it, but I can find nothing there to that effect. I agree that, in order to obtain preferential payment, creditors must claim a preference in a material if not a technical sense. But I see no objection to the course the Sheriff has taken in allowing the creditor to amend his affidavit so as to make a technical claim for a preference. I think this is a most unnecessary appeal, and that it ought to be dismissed with expenses.

LORD M'LAREN.—Where a preference is claimed on the ground that the debt is a privileged debt, there is nothing in the statute requiring that the demand for a preferential ranking should be set forth in the affidavit. If the creditor claims a preference over any particular property of the bankrupt, that must be stated in his affidavit in terms of section 22. But where it is only that the law has given a preference to certain debts the trustee is supposed to know or to be able to find that out for himself. Then surely it is enough if the creditor intimates by letter, or in any other informal way, that the debt for which he is claiming is entitled to a preferential ranking. But even if it were true that, under the statute, a claim to preferential payment must be stated in the affidavit, we have here the creditor informing the trustee by letter that he is willing to rectify his claim; and, if the creditor were in error in not stating it in his affidavit, the trustee ought to have allowed an amendment under section 51. So whether we hold that this claim ought to have been in the affidavit or that it ought not, the trustee was in a position to deal with the matter as a preferential claim. I think that the course proposed by the Sheriff is reasonable and equitable, and I agree that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

LORD KINNEAR.—I agree that the course proposed by the Sheriff is perfectly reasonable and equitable, while what the appellant says he ought to have done would have been most inequitable. I would only add that the argument that the claim cannot be amended because the trustee has already adjudicated seems to me to be rather a bold one, because it comes to this, that the trustee may deprive a creditor of his right of appeal by not allowing him to state his case. I agree that where a creditor has made a claim to a preference on an explicit footing, and the claim has been rejected it may be too late after the decision to seek to alter the basis of the claim. But that is no reason why he should not be allowed to amend his affidavit before a decision on the merits, when it has been pointed out to him that in form it fails to make the claim he means to bring forward. The creditor made it clear from the first that he meant to claim a preference. He lodged his claim, and intimated that he demanded a preferential ranking, and the trustee has acknowledged that intimation in two letters, though he stated that he was not in a position to give effect to it at the moment. Then when, in a subsequent letter, the trustee pointed out his technical objection to treating this as a claim to a preference, the creditor replied that he was willing to rectify his affidavit. The trustee would not entertain this suggestion, and proceeded to decide against the creditor without giving him an opportunity to rectify his claim, and has issued his deliverance accordingly. It is said that by so doing he has successfully deprived the creditor of his right of appeal to the Sheriff and to this Court. If that is so a creditor could have no right of appeal against the refusal of a trustee to allow him to amend his claim. I do not think this is at all the sort of restriction of appeal that is dealt with in the cases that were cited to us, and I think the appellant's contention on this point is untenable.

No. 169. July 11, 1905. Crerar v. Clement's Trustee.

LORD ADAM was absent.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Affirm the interlocutor, dated 23d May 1905, appealed against: Refuse the appeal, and remit to the Sheriff-substitute to proceed as may be just, and decern."

A. CAMPBELL & SON, S.S.C.—WILLIAM C. MORRIS, Solicitor—Agents.

No. 170. July 11, 1905.* Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

THE MICA INSULATOR COMPANY, LIMITED, Pursuers (Respondents).—Younger, K.C.—Macphail.

BRUCE PEEBLES & COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Reclaimers).—Clyde, K.C.—Christie.

Patent — Infringement — Process — Particulars of Breach — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. cap. 57), secs. 29 and 107.—The Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Acts, 1883, sec. 29, enacts,—"In an action for infringement of a patent the plaintiff must deliver with his statement of claim, or by order of the Court or the Judge, at any subsequent time, particulars of the breaches complained of"; and sec. 107, dealing with the application of the Act to Scotland, enacts, inter alia, that "nothing shall affect the jurisdiction and forms of process of the Courts in Scotland in such an action."

In an action for damages for infringement of two patents for the manufacture of electrical insulating sheets the pursuers averred that the defenders, in manufacturing micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth, "have used and employed the inventions protected by the said letters-patent, or one or other of them"; and they further averred that the defenders had purchased from other persons "micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth made in contravention and infringement of the said letters-patent, or one or other of them," and in particular, had purchased "micanite made in contravention of said letters-patent," and "machines insulated in infringement of said letters-patent."

Held (1) that sec. 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, applied to Scotland, and that particulars of the breach must be set forth, but that they fell to be set forth, in accordance with the forms of process of the Courts in Scotland, in the condescendence, and not in a separate statement; and (2) that the particulars of breach set forth were not sufficient, in respect that they did not specify the manner in which the infringement had taken place, nor which of the two protected processes of manufacture had been infringed.

Patent—Amended Patent—Infringement—Damages for Infringement before and after Amendment—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. cap. 57), sec. 20.—The Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, sec. 20, enacts,—"When an amendment by way of disclaimer, correction, or explanation, has been allowed under this Act, no damages shall be given in any action in respect of the use of the invention before the disclaimer, correction, or explanation, unless the patentee establishes to

* Decided July 6, 1905.

No. 170.

July 11, 1905.

Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

the satisfaction of the Court that his original claim was framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge."

In an action of damages in respect of amended patents for infringement both before and after amendment, held that, although it was not necessary that separate sums should be claimed as damages in the summons, yet, owing to the heavier onus of proving actionable infringement for the period prior to the amendment, the amounts claimed for breach prior to and after the amendment must be distinguished in the condescendence.

1st Division. Ld Stormonth-Darling.

THE MICA INSULATOR COMPANY, LIMITED, who were manufacturers of and dealers in mica segments, cut mica, and micanite, were the registered proprietors of two patents; the first No. 10,430* of 1892, for "an improvement in electrical insulating sheet," was dated 28th January 1893, and was amended, in accordance with the decision of the chief examiner, on 2d August 1904; and the second No. 6048* of 1898, for "improvements in the manufacture of flexible sheets for electrical insulation," was dated 20th December 1895, and was amended in accordance with the decision of the chief examiner, on 27th August 1904. Bruce Peebles & Company, Limited, were engineers in Edinburgh, who used mica in the construction of machines.

On 3d December 1904 The Mica Insulator Company raised an action against Bruce Peebles & Company, in which they sought:—(first) for payment of £500 as damages for breach of a contract of sale, whereby the defenders bound themselves to purchase their whole supply of micanite segments, &c. for the year 1904 from the pursuers; (second) that the defenders should be interdicted from infringing the two patents of which the pursuers were the registered proprietors by making, vending, or using in whole or in part the inventions described in the specifications relative to the said patents, "and in particular from making, vending, or using any micanite or electrical insulating sheets or flexible sheets for electrical insulation, constructed or used in the manner described in the said amended specifications, or either of them, or in manner substantially the same, and from infringing the said letters-patent in any other manner of way"; and (third), that the defenders should be ordained "to exhibit and produce a full and particular account of the whole micanite, electrical insulating sheets, or flexible sheets for electrical insulation made, or which during the dependence of this action they may make, in infringement of the said letters-patent, or either of them, and of the whole micanite and others as aforesaid made in infringement of the said letters-patent, or either of them, bought by the defenders from persons other than the pursuers, and to pay to the pursuers the sum of £500 . . . as the damages sustained by the pursuers through the defenders' infringement of the said letters-patent, or either of them."

The pursuers, besides setting forth the contract of sale and the alleged breach thereof referred to in the first conclusion of the summons, averred;—(Cond. 1) "The pursuers manufacture in accordance with said patent of 1892 a substance which is sold by them and known in the trade as 'micanite,' and in accordance with said patent of 1895 a substance which is sold by them and known in the trade as 'extra flexible micanite cloth' or 'extra flexible micanite paper.' The pursuers have the sole right of making and selling the same."

Cond. 5 was as follows:—"The pursuers further believe and aver that the defenders have been manufacturing and continue to manufacture 'extra flexible micanite cloth.' In manufacturing the said

No. 170.
July 11, 1905.
Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth as aforesaid, the defenders have used and employed the inventions protected by the said letters-patent, or one or other of them, and described in the amended specifications relative thereto, and have infringed the said letters-patent, or one or other of them. The pursuers further believe and aver that since the beginning of 1902 the defenders have been purchasing from other persons micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth made in contravention and infringement of the said letters-patent, or one or other of them, and have thereby infringed the same. In particular they believe and aver that at various dates during the said period the defenders have bought from one Brandt in Hamburg and used in their machines in Scotland micanite made in contravention of said letters-patent, and have purchased from the Bergman Electricitäts Gesellschaft of Berlin machines insulated in infringement of said letters-patent, and sold them to various persons in England and Scotland."

The defenders, in Ans. 5, called upon the pursuers "to specify the points in which the defenders have infringed the pursuers' patents."

Cond. 6 was as follows:—"In consequence of and by the said infringement, the pursuers' business has been seriously interfered with and injured, and the pursuers have suffered loss and damage to an extent of not less than £500, which is the sum third above concluded for."

The pursuers pleaded;—(2) The defenders having infringed the pursuers' said letters-patent, or one or other of them, the pursuers are entitled to interdict, as concluded for in the second conclusion of the summons. (3) The pursuers having suffered loss and damage to the extent third above concluded for through the defenders' infringement of their said letters-patent, or one or other of them, they are entitled to decree in terms of the third conclusion of the summons.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuers' averments are irrelevant and lacking in specification, and ought not to be remitted to probation.

On 27th March 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Stormonth-Darling) pronounced an interlocutor repelling the first plea in law for the defenders, and allowing the parties a proof of their averments.*

---

* "OPINION.—The defenders plead that the pursuers' averments are irrelevant, and lacking in specification, both as to their claim of £500 of damages for breach of the contract of sale, and their claim of £500 of damages for infringement of patent. As to the first claim, they say that a contract to purchase their whole supply of mica segments, and similar articles, during a particular year does not debar them from manufacturing the articles for themselves, which is the main part of the pursuers' complaint against them. Perhaps so, but the pursuers go on to say (cond. 4) that the 'defenders have also been buying mica and micanite from persons other than the pursuers, whose names are unknown to the pursuers.' I see no objection to the relevancy of this averment. If true, it would constitute a breach of contract, and the defenders can hardly complain of it as wanting in specification, because it is a fact within their own knowledge.

"As to the second claim of damages, it certainly comes to a very narrow point, because the two patents said to have been infringed were each made the subject of amendment (it is not said whether 'by way of disclaimer, correction, or explanation,' but it must have been by one or other) in August 1904. Now, this action was raised on 3d November of that year, and therefore there were only ten or twelve weeks during which damageable infringement can have taken place without the patentee undertaking an almost

No. 170.

July 11, 1905.

Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

The defenders reclaimed, and admitted that the Lord Ordinary was right in allowing a proof with regard to the alleged breach of contract, but argued;—The averments of infringement of patent set forth here were not sufficiently specific to entitle the pursuers to go to proof on these points. Sec. 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883,* applied to Scotland, and therefore full particulars of the breach complained of must be set forth. Even at common law the averments of breach here stated would be insufficient to guard against surprise of the defenders.[1] Specific instances of infringement, identified by their dates, should be put on record,[2] and also the precise manner in which the system of manufacture complained of had infringed the letters-patent of the pursuers. There were also two patents here, covering different processes of manufacture, and there was nothing on record to shew whether both or only one, and if only one, which, had been infringed. Further, both these patents had been amended, and by sec. 20 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-prohibitory onus of proof under the 20th section of the Act of 1883. I can hardly suppose that the pursuers, knowing this, seriously intend to undertake that onus, and, if not, the period of available infringement is so short that the defenders cannot be put to any real disadvantage in not being told more particularly the occasions when they are said to have used the pursuers' processes in manufacturing their own machines. But I cannot say that the pursuers are absolutely debarred by the statute from undertaking, if they please, the onus which section 20 lays upon them, and therefore it is formally open to them to prove infringement from 1895 downwards. The rather vague nature of the averments in cond. 5 is, I think, to be excused by the fact that the thing complained of is, not sale of this or that article, but use of the patented processes in the defenders' own works. The real question between the parties, so far as I see, will thus come to be whether the patents are good, and cover the sheets for electrical insulation used by the defenders.

---

"I will therefore repel the first plea for the defenders, and allow a proof on a day to be fixed."

* The Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. cap. 57), enacts:—

Section 20. "Where an amendment by way of disclaimer, correction, or explanation, has been allowed under this Act, no damages shall be given in any action in respect of the use of the invention before the disclaimer, correction, or explanation, unless the patentee establishes to the satisfaction of the Court that his original claim was framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge."

Section 29. "(1) In an action for infringement of a patent the plaintiff must deliver with his statement of claim, or by order of the Court or the Judge, at any subsequent time, particulars of the breaches complained of. . . . (4) At the hearing no evidence shall, except by leave of the Court or a Judge, be admitted in proof of any alleged infringement or objection of which particulars are not so delivered."

Section 107. "In any action for infringement of a patent in Scotland the provisions of this Act, with respect to calling in the aid of an assessor, shall apply, and the action shall be tried without a jury, unless the Court shall otherwise direct, but otherwise nothing shall affect the jurisdiction and forms of process of the Courts in Scotland in such an action or in any action or proceeding respecting a patent hitherto competent to those Courts."

[1] Kerr v. Clark & Co., Nov. 4, 1868, 7 Macph. 51, 41 Scot. Jur. 34; Hutchison, Main, & Co. v. Pattullo Brothers, May 24, 1888, 15 R. 644.

[2] Househill Coal and Iron Co. v. Neilson, Nov. 15, 1842, 5 D. 86, 14 Scot. Jur. 624, aff. March 6, 1843, 2 Bell's Appeals, 1, 15 Scot. Jur. 524.

No. 170.

July 11, 1905.

Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

Marks Act, 1883, the pursuer in an action for infringement prior to amendment must prove that the original specification was framed in good faith, and with reasonable skill and knowledge. There were no averments to that effect here, and they were all the more necessary as one at least of these patents, in its original form, had been abandoned as void, by the pursuers' predecessors, in an action in the English Courts.[1] In view of the difference in the onus of proof with regard to the period prior to as compared with that after amendment, the statement of damage was not sufficiently specific. The sums claimed for breaches prior to and the sums claimed for breaches after amendment must be clearly distinguished.

Argued for the respondents;—The Lord Ordinary was right in holding that the averments of infringement of patent were sufficient to entitle the pursuers to a proof. With regard to the goods manufactured by the defenders the averments were of a continuous course of manufacture in breach of the letters-patent, and it was therefore unnecessary to specify particular occasions. Further, the breach was alleged to have taken place in the defenders' works, and as what happened there must be well within the defenders' own knowledge, they were not entitled to demand such precise particulars as might otherwise be necessary.[2] Househill Coal and Iron Co.[3] was not in point, as it dealt with objections to the patent, not with particulars of breach. As to the purchases from the German firms, the pursuers had set forth all that could be reasonably expected from them. They had set forth the articles purchased, and the parties from whom they were purchased; they could not be expected to know the actual dates of the purchases nor the specific processes of manufacture employed in these foreign works. With regard to the questions arising from the fact that these patents had been amended, it was unnecessary to put in a formal averment of reasonable skill and knowledge; that was entirely a matter for proof. So too was the amount of damage apportionable to the periods before and after amendment.[4] If, however, there were valid objections to the form of the record on this point, it would be obviated by allowing the amendments proposed in the minute of amendment lodged by the respondents.

The minute referred to (No. 30 of process), which had been tendered in the course of the discussion and had been allowed to be received, sought to amend the record by altering cond. 5 to make it read as follows:—(Cond. 5) "The pursuers further believe and aver that since 27th August 1904 the defenders have been manufacturing and continue to manufacture 'extra flexible micanite cloth.' In manufacturing the said micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth as aforesaid, the defenders have used and employed the inventions protected by the said letters-patent respectively, and described in the said amended specifications relative thereto, and have infringed the said letters-patent. The pursuers further believe and aver that since the said 27th August 1904 the defenders have been purchasing from other persons . . . ," &c., as above set forth in the original cond. 5.

---

[1] Mica Insulator Co. v. Electrical Co., Limited, Aug. 10, 1898, 15 R. P. C. 489.

[2] Mandleburg v. Morley, June 21, 1893, 10 R. P. C. 256.

[3] Sup. cit.

[4] Hopkinson v. St James' and Pall Mall Electric Light Co., Limited, March 15, 1893, 10 R. P. C. 46, at p. 62.

At advising,— No. 170.

July 11, 1905. Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is an action of damages at the instance of the Mica Insulator Company, who are manufacturers of electrical materials, against a firm of engineers, and damages are sought on two different grounds. They are sought on the ground of an alleged breach of contract, which the defenders are said to have committed by having bought certain materials from others than the pursuers, from whom alone by the terms of their contract they had undertaken to purchase. Damages are also sought on the ground that the defenders have sold goods which they themselves have manufactured, and by such manufacture have infringed the patent rights of the pursuers, or that these goods had been purchased from others who, in manufacturing them, had been in breach of these patent rights. There is no controversy between the parties that, in so far as regards the alleged breach of contract, the matters in dispute must be remitted to probation. But the defenders say that, as to the second claim for damages, the pursuers' averments are so wanting in specification as not to entitle them to a proof. The Lord Ordinary has, though, as appears to me from his opinion, only after considerable doubt, come to the conclusion that he cannot refuse a proof on the ground of want of specification, and it is against that decision that this reclaiming note is taken.

That makes it necessary to scan pretty closely the averments which the pursuers have made on this point, and they are set forth in cond. 5—(Here the Lord President read cond. 5 as originally framed). I ought to explain that the patents which are here said to have been infringed are patents of which the pursuers are owners, and they consist of a patent of 1892, amended on 2d August 1904, and a patent of 1895, which was also amended on 27th August 1904. Now, your Lordships are aware that it was long ago laid down by this Court that it was not necessary, under our forms of process, to have a separate statement of the particulars of the alleged breach of patent, such as is required in England, and that decision was based on the ground that by our forms the particulars must be set forth on record to prevent surprise, with the same distinctness as is required in the separate statement which is necessary in England. I think that that difference has been statutorily recognised in the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, where, while section 29 provides that the plaintiff must deliver with his statement of claim, or subsequently, particulars of the breaches complained of, section 107, dealing with the application of the Act to Scotland, says that nothing is to affect the forms of process of the Courts in Scotland. I take that to mean that the requirements of the Act are to apply just as much to Scotland as to England, though the Courts in Scotland are not to depart from their own forms of process; so I think the provision for setting forth particulars of the breaches complained of is just as much a statutory requirement in Scotland as in England, though the form in which it is to be done may be different.

Now, it is very necessary in patent cases to have full particulars of what is complained of, and I do not think the averments in this record are sufficient. The pursuers have come here with two amended patents, and the 20th section of the Patents Act of 1883 provides that where an amendment by way of disclaimer, correction, or explanation has been allowed, no damages will be given unless the patentee establishes to the satisfaction of the Court that his original claim was framed in good faith, and with reasonable skill and knowledge. Accordingly, the onus of clearly specifying the breach alleged to have taken place before disclaimer is much greater than with regard to a breach after disclaimer; and therefore I think it is necessary that a pursuer with a disclaimer should make this clear by splitting up the sum claimed as damages, so as to shew what amount is claimed for breaches before disclaimer, and what for breaches after it. I do not think it is necessary that separate sums should be claimed in the summons, but they must be clearly distinguished in the condescendence. That has not been done here; and the pursuers, feeling that difficulty, have lodged a minute of amendment, which would make cond. 5 read thus:—(His Lordship here read cond. 5 as amended). Now, that amendment would, of course, obviate the difficulty that I have hitherto been dealing with, and if there were no other difficulty in the case the course would be to allow this amendment to cond. 5, and send the case to proof.

No. 170.

July 11, 1905.
Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited.

But a further objection has been taken which is in my view a good one, and it is, that there are no averments to shew what is the nature of the breach complained of. The averments are that the defenders have made and sold a certain cloth, manufactured in breach of the pursuers' patents. Nothing is said but that it is an "extra flexible micanite cloth," and when we look at the pursuers' patents we see that they are for making extra flexible micanite cloth, but by different processes. I think the defenders are entitled to have a specification of the manner in which they are alleged to have infringed these patents, and as to which of the processes of manufacture the breach has occurred, whether it is the one or the other, or both of them, that are alleged to have been followed. There is also a want of specification as to the alleged purchases from the foreign firms. The pursuers must specify in what way Brandt and the Bergman Electricitäts Gesellschaft are in breach of their patents, and which process they have infringed, in manufacturing the articles which were purchased by the defenders. I think, therefore, the averments made here by the pursuers are not sufficient, and that with regard to the second ground on which damages are claimed, they are not entitled to a proof. I would propose, then, that the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor should be recalled, and that the pursuers should be given an opportunity to amend their record should they see fit; but whether they decide to amend or not, the case must go back to the Lord Ordinary.

LORD ADAM and LORD KINNEAR concurred.

LORD M'LAREN was absent.

THE COURT pronounced an interlocutor recalling the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary of 27th March 1905, allowing the pursuers, if so advised, to lodge a minute of amendment in supplement of that tendered at the Bar, No. 30 of process, and continuing the cause.

MACKENZIE & KERMACK, W.S.—E. I. FINDLAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

JEANIE CATHCART, Pursuer.—Orr, K.C.—MacRobert.
ALEXANDER BROWN, Defender.—M'Clure, K.C.—A. Moncrieff.

No. 171.

July 12, 1905.

Reparation—Seduction—Issue.—In an action of damages for seduction the method of seduction alleged to have been employed must be set forth in the issue.

Cathcart v. Brown.

Form of issue in Forbes v. Wilson, May 16, 1868, 6 Macph. 770, followed.

1ST DIVISION. Lord Low.

JEANIE CATHCART, domestic servant, raised an action against Alexander Brown, warehouseman, in which she sought for damages for breach of promise and seduction. The defender resided with his father, and the pursuer was a domestic servant in his father's employment.

The pursuer averred that shortly after she came to his father's house the defender began to pay her attention; that an intimacy sprang up between them; that the defender courted her and professed affection for her; that their meetings were of a more or less secret character, and that at these meetings he professed affection for her, and the subject of marriage was frequently alluded to. Cond. 4 was as follows:—"In or about the month of April 1904 the defender made a present of articles of dress to the pursuer, and then and there, as he had done on previous occasions, professed to the pursuer his warmest love for her, and asked her to marry him. The defender having succeeded in winning the affection and confidence of the pursuer, she agreed. The defender thereupon urged the pursuer to allow him to have carnal connection with her. The pursuer was at first unwilling, but was at last overcome, partly by the masterful ascendancy he had acquired over her in virtue of his position as the son of her employer, and partly by his solicitations and professions of love, and by his promise to marry her. The pursuer was then seduced by the defender." Cond. 5 was as follows:—"On or about the 20th day of May 1904 the defender came home from business from Glasgow by a late train. The pursuer had gone to bed. Her bedroom is above the kitchen and away from the rest of the household. The defender entered the pursuer's bedroom, and renewing his professions of love for her and his intention to marry her, again urged her to allow him to have connection with her. The pursuer being overcome by his solicitations, and relying on his promise to marry her, reluctantly yielded, and was again seduced by the defender."

In his answers the defender denied the allegation with regard to what happened in April 1904, but admitted that on 20th May 1904 he had carnal connection with the pursuer. He, however, explained that it was upon her invitation that connection took place between them. He further averred;—(Ans. 5) "The defender never professed love for the pursuer, and never expressed an intention of marrying her"; and (Ans. 9) "The defender never promised to marry the pursuer, and the sole act of connection between them did not take place on the faith of any such promise, nor was it preceded by courtship or proffers of affection."

The pursuer pleaded;—(2) The defender having seduced the pursuer, is liable in reparation therefor.

The defender pleaded;—(3) The only act of connection which took place between the pursuer and the defender having proceeded on the invitation of the pursuer, and without promise of marriage or proffer of affection, the defender should be assoilzied.

No. 171.

July 12, 1905. Cathcart v. Brown.

On 6th June 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Low) approved two issues for the trial of the cause. The first was an issue of breach of promise of marriage, upon the form of which no question arose. The second, dealing with the alleged seduction, was as follows:—"Whether between the month of April and 20th May 1904 the defender seduced the pursuer, and prevailed upon her to permit him to have carnal connection with her, to her loss, injury, and damage? Damages laid at £300."

The defender thereupon gave notice of a motion to vary this issue, and moved the Court to vary it by inserting between the words "defender" and "seduced," the words, "courted the pursuer, and proposed honourable intentions towards her, and promised to marry her, and whether, by means of such courtship and professions and promise, he."

Argued for the defender;—The popular significance of the word "seduce" was quite different from the legal significance, the latter requiring the existence of some arts or practices by means of which consent had been induced, and these must be clearly specified.[1] They ought also to be put in the issue to safeguard the defender by drawing the attention of the jury to the essentials in law of seduction. Though formerly that was not always considered necessary, the practice was now different, and it had been decided in Gray v. Brown[2] that the method of seduction must be stated in the issue.[3]

Argued for the pursuer;—The use of the word "seduce" alone was sufficient.[4] Gray v. Brown[2] dealt with the special circumstances of that case only, and did not apply here. The Lord Ordinary had had Gray v. Brown[2] before him, and had considered it in adjusting this issue. The form of issue approved in Gray v. Brown[2] had not been followed in the Outer-House of late years, where the practice was to allow the issue in this simple form. In the latest reported case, that of Gray v. Miller,[5] that was the issue approved. If the suggested variation was to be allowed, the word "or" should be substituted for the word "and," so as to make the methods alternative.

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this case the pursuer, who is a domestic servant, sues the son of her employer for damages on two grounds. No question arises as to the first ground, which is for breach of promise of marriage, and the first issue sets forth that breach in the usual form, and no objection is taken to it.

But she also sues for damages in respect of her alleged seduction, and the issue which the Lord Ordinary has allowed only uses the word "seduced": —Whether "the defender seduced the pursuer, and prevailed upon her to [1] Fraser, Husband and Wife, i. 501; Linning v. Hamilton, 1748, M. 13,909; Stewart v. Menzies, June 27, 1837, 15 S. 1198; Gray v. Miller, Dec. 17, 1901, 39 S. L. R. 256.

[2] June 19, 1875, 5 R. 971.

[3] Juridical Styles, iii. 811; Walker v. M'Isaac, Jan. 29, 1857, 19 D. 340, 29 Scot. Jur. 156; Forbes v. Wilson, May 16, 1868, 6 Macph. 770, 40 Scot. Jur. 396, where the issue of seduction that was approved was in these terms:—"Whether, in or about the year 1864 and 1865 the defender courted the pursuer, and professed intention to marry her; and whether, by means of these professions, the defender, in or about November 1865, seduced the pursuer, and prevailed upon her to permit him to have carnal connection with her, to her loss, injury, and damage?"

[4] Macfarlane on Issues, pp. 378, 381; Walker v. M'Isaac, 19 D. 340.

[5] 39 S. L. R. 256.

No. 171.
July 12, 1905.
Catheart v. Brown.

permit him to have carnal connection with her, to her loss, injury, and damage?" The defender has tabled a motion to vary this issue, on the ground that it should have contained some specification of the method of seduction which is alleged to have been employed; the mere use of the word "seduced" being in itself misleading. I think the defender is right that the use of this word alone may be misleading, for the popular use of the word "seduce" is not the same as the legal significance; the popular use would include a case where there is the most complete consent on the part of the woman, and no arts or deceit have been employed in inducing that consent. But I do not think it necessary to go into this question in detail, for it has been already carefully considered in both Divisions of the Court; in the Second Division in the case of Gray v. Brown,[1] and in this Division in the case of Forbes v. Wilson.[2] The issues approved in the case of Forbes[2] had been carefully considered, and I do not think they could be bettered. That was a similar action to this, an action for breach of promise and seduction, and I think the issues approved in that case ought to be strictly followed here, only making the necessary alteration of dates. I especially approve of the form of issue allowed in Forbes,[2] because the second issue does not set forth an actual promise to marry, but only a proposed intention to marry, as the inducing cause of the seduction. I think, therefore, that we should not approve the second issue allowed by the Lord Ordinary, nor adopt the variations suggested by the defender, but that it would be better here to follow the exact form of issue approved in the case of Forbes.[2]

LORD ADAM.—I concur.

LORD M'LAREN.—I am of the same opinion. I think it was settled so far back as the case of Linning,[3] that an action for damages for seduction will only lie where some species of fraud or deceit has been practised; and while the precedents have varied as to the form of issue to be allowed, I think we have settled down to this, that there must be some specification of the kind of deceit that is alleged to have been practised. That is the principle that I think will be found to underly the decisions in the cases that have been quoted to us. I think that here we ought to follow the form of issue that was approved in the case of Forbes,[2] but in so doing we are not deciding that that is the only form of issue to be employed; the form must in general depend upon the special circumstances of the case to which it is to be applied.

LORD KINNEAR.—I also think that we ought to follow the form of issue that was approved in the case of Forbes.[2] We have been told that a practice has grown up in the Outer-House of preferring the simpler form of issue that has been allowed by the Lord Ordinary, and of withholding from the jury any indication of the specific method of seduction that is set forth on the record. If that be so it is a practice which has grown up in disregard of a decision which is binding upon the Court.

THE COURT varied the issue in terms as adjusted at the Bar, and approved of it in this form:—"Whether between the months

[1] 5 R. 971. [2] 6 Macph. 770. [3] 1748, M. 13,909.

No. 171.
July 12, 1905.
Cathcart v. Brown.

of January and May 1904 the defender courted the pursuer and professed intention to marry her, and whether by means of these professions the defender, in or about the month of April 1904, seduced the pursuer, and prevailed upon her to permit him to have carnal connection with her, to her loss, injury, and damage? Damages laid at £300."

Ross Smith & Dykes, S.S.C.—Simpson & Marwick, W.S.—Agents.

No. 172.
July 13, 1905.
Paterson v. Lockhart.

James Paterson, Appellant.—W. Thomson.
Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhart, Bart., Respondent.—Campbell, K.C.—Chree.

Master and Servant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. cap. 37), sec. 7, subsec. (2)—"Workman"—Contractor—"Undertaker."—The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 7, subsec. (2), enacts, inter alia,—"'Workman' includes any person who is engaged in an employment to which this Act applies, whether by way of manual labour or otherwise, and whether his agreement is one of service or apprenticeship, or otherwise, and is expressed or implied, is oral or in writing."

An estate owner, through his factor, engaged a man to quarry from a quarry on the estate stone blocks for wire fences and farm buildings to meet estate requirements, in such quantities as the factor should direct. He was to be paid 5s. a day, though in fact he was not paid daily, and might employ assistants to be paid through him at the same rate. The estate forester visited the quarry, and kept a note of the days on which the quarryman worked. The tools were supplied partly by the quarryman and partly by the estate. He was told where he was to work, but was free to choose the part of the quarry where the excavation was to be made. The quarryman having been injured by an explosion while engaged in his work, claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, from the estate owner.

The Sheriff disallowed the claim on the ground that the claimant was a contractor and not a workman. The claimant appealed upon a stated case, in which the only question put was whether the claimant was a servant or workman in the sense of the Act.

Held that the claimant was a servant or workman in the sense of the Act.

Opinions reserved (per the Lord President and Lord M'Laren) whether a workman could at the same time be a contractor and a workman in the sense of the Act.

Question (per Lord M'Laren) whether a landed proprietor who works a quarry on his estate for estate purposes is an "undertaker" in the sense of the Act.

1st Division. Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

James Paterson, quarryman, Carluke, having claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897,* on account of personal injuries, from Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee, the matter was referred to the arbitration of the Sheriff-substitute at

* The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 37), enacts,—Sec. 7, subsec. (2), "In this Act . . . 'undertakers' in the case of a railway means the railway company; in the case of a factory, quarry, or laundry means the occupier thereof within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895. . . . 'Workman' includes every person who is engaged in an employment to which this Act applies, whether by way of manual labour or otherwise, and whether his agreement is one of service or apprenticeship, or otherwise, and is expressed or implied, is oral or in writing."

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 and 59 Vict. c. 37), enacts,

No. 172.
July 18, 1905.
Paterson v. Lockhart.

Lanark (Scott-Moncrieff), who refused to award compensation, on the ground that the claimant was a contractor and not a workman, and, at the request of Paterson, stated a case for appeal.

The case set forth:—"This is an arbitration in which the appellant craved decree for 15s. weekly in respect of permanent disablement as a result of an accident which occurred to him on 9th May 1904, while in the employment of the respondent as a quarryman at Auchenglen, Fiddler's Bridge, Braidwood. The following are the facts proved:—That the appellant has done work for the respondent on various occasions in both quarrying and draining operations, and it was admitted that he, at so much the chain or rood, did the draining work by contract, employing at times other men, but denied that he ever contracted for the quarrying work. That in February 1904 he was engaged by the respondent's factor to quarry a certain number of stone blocks for wire fences, and thereafter stones for farm buildings, in such quantities as the said factor should direct; that for this work he was to be paid at the rate of 5s. per day; and that the appellant was not paid daily. That, if he desired it, he might employ assistants to be paid for through him at that rate, and that he so employed his son on the first eight days at 5s. per day, appellant's name alone appearing in the estate books; that for this work he got a pick, shovel, barrow, and four boring irons from the estate, otherwise he provided his own tools and materials, but charged and was paid for the sharpening of the tools, and for blasting powder. That the respondent's forester visited the quarry and kept a note of the days on which the appellant worked. That the appellant was entitled to exercise his own judgment as to where the excavation in the quarry was to be made. That the usual way quarrying is contracted for is so much per stone, or so much per cubic yard. That the place at which appellant worked was on the respondent's estate, and that the quarrying was done to meet estate requirements. That said place was of a crescent shape, the deepest part of the face or bank from which stone could be taken being over 20 feet in height, but that at either side of the deepest part the height was less, and at the spot where the accident to the appellant occurred it was only about 14 feet. That previous to working in the above place he was instructed to take stones from other places, the stones from which, on examination by the respondent, his factor, and forester, were condemned, and he was sent to the place before stated (where the accident happened). That he started work about the end of March 1904; that at the time of the accident, and for four weeks before, he was working alone. That the accident, which was caused by an explosion, severely injured the appellant. . . . I found in law (1) that the place in which the accident occurred was a quarry within the meaning of the Quarries Act of 1894, and the Workmen's Compensation Act; but (2) that at the time of said accident appellant was a contractor, and not a servant or workman of the respondent in the sense of the Act."

The question of law was:—"Was the appellant, at the time of the accident, a servant or workman of the respondent in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act?"

---

sec. 23 (1) (v.) b,—" . . . the person having the actual use or occupation of a dock, wharf, quay, or warehouse, or of any premises within the same, or forming part thereof, . . . shall be deemed to be the occupier of a factory."

No. 172. The undernoted authorities were cited at the hearing.[1]

July 13, 1905. Paterson v. Lockhart.

LORD PRESIDENT.—The only question that has been submitted to us here is whether the appellant was a servant or workman of the respondent in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Sheriff-substitute has decided that he was not, holding that he was in point of fact a contractor. Now, I had occasion to point out in the course of the argument, and I am still of the same opinion, that, although it may be convenient in the course of an argument to see whether the injured man was a contractor or not, still the only point that is material for the decision of the case is whether he was a workman in the sense of the Act. The question whether a man may be at the same time both a contractor and a workman in the sense of the Act is one no doubt of much difficulty, and it is just the point raised in the case of M'Gregor v. Dansken,[2] on which the Second Division were divided in opinion. On that point I desire to reserve my opinion. It does not arise for decision in a case where we find that the injured man was clearly a workman. On considering the facts stated here by the Sheriff-substitute I see nothing to make me doubt that this was an ordinary case of the employment of a servant. The appellant was employed as a quarryman, he was in receipt of a daily wage, and was subject to the behests of Sir Simon Lockhart's factor, who gave him orders as to where he was to quarry, and what stone was to be got, and who could, I have no doubt, dismiss him at any moment. I have come to the conclusion, without any difficulty, that he was a workman. It appears to me that it is just a case of the ordinary employment that would occur on any large estate where quarrying is to be done to meet the estate requirements, and a labourer is engaged to do it. It is true that there are no strict regulations as to the hours he is to work, but no doubt the ordinary working hours on the estate would be taken as the measure, and the employer had the remedy in his own hands, for he could dismiss him if he found he was not working long enough. I think the case ought to be sent back to the Sheriff with the opinion of the Court that the appellant here was a workman in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

LORD ADAM.—I am of the same opinion. The appellant here met with an accident while working at a quarry on the respondent's estate. He made a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the Sheriff-substitute has found (first) that the place where the accident happened was a quarry within the meaning of the Quarries Act of 1894, and the Workmen's Compensation Act, and (second) that at the time of the accident the appellant was a contractor, and not a servant or workman, in the sense of the Act.

There is no question as to the first finding. The second finding, how-

[1] By the Appellant.—M'Cready v. Dunlop & Co., June 16, 1900, 2 F. 1027; Evans v. Penwyllt Dinas Silica Brick Co., Nov. 13, 1901, 18 T. L. R. 58. By the Respondent.—M'Gregor v. Dansken, Feb. 3, 1899, 1 F. 536; Hayden v. Dick, Nov. 26, 1902, 5 F. 150; Vamplew v. Parkgate Iron and Steel Co., Ltd., [1903] 1 K. B. 851.

[2] 1899, 1 F. 536.

No. 172.
July 18, 1905
Paterson v. Lockhart.

ever, raises the point whether on the facts stated in the case the appellant was a contractor or a servant in the sense of the Act. I agree with your Lordship that the facts disclose a contract of service. The facts are these:—In February 1904 the appellant was engaged by the respondent's factor to quarry stone blocks for wire fences, and also stones for farm buildings; he was engaged at a daily wage; and he was bound to work where he was required, and to quarry such stones as the factor might direct. But we are told that he might employ assistants. No doubt he might, but even if he did, they were paid, not by him, but by the employer, who paid them, through him, at the rate of 5s. a day.

As far as I can see, the respondent's factor was not bound to find the appellant continuous employment. On the contrary, the appellant was bound to do only such work as the factor might think necessary, and in accordance with the requirements of the estate. On the facts stated, I am of opinion that the appellant was a workman in the sense of the Act.

LORD M'LAREN.—I agree with the conclusion to which your Lordships have come. At the same time I am not clear that this decision does complete justice between the parties, because I have a strong impression that the respondent is not an undertaker in the sense of the statute. I read the Act as intended to apply solely to commercial undertakers, and I do not wish to be understood to assent to what has been taken as common ground—namely, that a landed proprietor who works a quarry on his own estate for estate purposes is properly described as an undertaker in the sense of the Act. On this point I wish to reserve my opinion.

The only point that arises in this case for decision is, whether the appellant was a workman or a contractor. I agree that the important consideration here is that the Act by no means makes it a condition of a claim for compensation that a contract of service must be proved, because it is stated in the Act that the agreement may be one of "service, or apprenticeship, or otherwise." It is enough to satisfy the conception of "employment" under the Act of Parliament if work is being performed, which is ordinarily done under a contract of service. It would be a serious restriction of the scope of the Act if it were possible, by introducing some condition into the agreement, to take it out of the category of a pure contract of service, and so to avoid liability under the Act. These words "or otherwise" seem to have been put into the Act for the purpose of preventing this, and appear to me to cover every case where, for practical purposes, the work done was that of a workman, though not strictly under a contract of service. However, I am far from saying the employment in this case was not under a contract of service. I think the appellant was a servant. He was paid a daily wage, and was liable to dismissal, and though he had the right to employ assistants that did not prevent him being a servant himself. It is quite in accordance with custom for a superior workman to choose his assistants. An engineer may choose his fireman, or a mason his hodman, but that does not prevent their being servants paid by a common employer.

I also wish to reserve my opinion on the question in the case of M'Gregor,[1]

[1] 1899, 1 F. 536.

No. 172.
July 13, 1905.
Paterson v. Lockhart.

as to whether a man can be a workman and a contractor at the same time. There is much force in Lord Young's remarks on that point, but I desire to keep an open mind on the question.

LORD KINNEAR was absent.

THE COURT recalled the decision of the arbiter quoad the second finding, answered the question of law stated in the case in the affirmative, and remitted to the arbiter to proceed in terms of the statute, and decerned.

MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—JOHN C. BRODIE & SONS, W.S.—Agents.

No. 173.
July 15, 1905.
Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

JAMES DUNCAN, Pursuer.—G. Watt, K.C.—Munro.
THE FIFE COAL COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders.—Hunter—Horne.

Reparation—Master and Servant—Employers Liability Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. c. 42), secs. 4 and 7—Notice of Injury.—The Employers Liability Act, 1880, sec. 7, enacts,—"Notice in respect of an injury under this Act . . . shall be served on the employer, or if there is more than one employer, upon one of such employers. The notice may be served by delivering the same to or at the residence or place of business of the person on whom it is to be served . . . Where the employer is a body of persons corporate or unincorporate, the notice shall be served by delivering the same at or by sending it by post in a registered letter addressed to the office, or, if there be more than one office, any one of the offices of such body . . ."

In an action of damages under the Employers Liability Act against a limited company at the instance of a workman in its employment, held that a notice of injury addressed to the company, enclosed in an envelope directed to A B, who was the company's cashier, and was in charge at one of the offices of the company, and delivered at that office, was duly served on the company.

Process—Employers Liability Act, 1880 (43 and 44 Vict. c. 42), secs. 4 and 7—Notice of Injury.—Per cur., after consultation with the Judges of the Second Division,—When a question of want of notice under the Employers Liability Act is raised, it should be dealt with by the Sheriff as a prejudicial plea, and a proof should be allowed on this prejudicial plea before a proof is allowed on the merits. If, on proof being allowed on the prejudicial plea, one of the parties appeals to the Court of Session for jury trial, the case will be sent back to the Sheriff to have this prejudicial plea disposed of.

1ST DIVISION. Jury Cause.

ON 15th January 1904 James Duncan, miner, Cowdenbeath, who was in the employment of the Fife Coal Company, Limited, was injured in the course of his employment.

In July 1904 Duncan raised an action in the Sheriff Court at Dunfermline against the Fife Coal Company, Limited, concluding for damages at common law and under the Employers Liability Act, 1880. The defenders' company was incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900, and had its registered office at Leven, and also had offices and works and carried on business at Cowdenbeath.

The pursuer averred that intimation of claim under the Employers Liability Act had been duly given to defenders on 21st January 1904 by written notice from the pursuer delivered by messenger at defenders' office at Lumphinnans, Cowdenbeath.

The defenders denied that notice of the injury had been given, and pleaded, inter alia ;—The pursuer having failed to give notice of his accident as required by the Employers Liability Act, 1880, he is barred from insisting in his claim under said Act, and the present action should therefore be dismissed, with expenses.

No. 173.
July 15, 1905.
Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

The Sheriff-substitute having allowed a proof, the pursuers appealed to the Court of Session for jury trial, and proposed an issue at common law and under the Act.

The case was tried before Lord Kyllachy and a jury. At the close of the evidence at the trial Lord Kyllachy, having heard counsel for the defenders on the question of notice under the 7th section of the Employers Liability Act, 1880, put to the jury the following question: —"Was a notice in terms of the document No. 21 of process, addressed to the defenders' company, and enclosed in an envelope addressed to Mr Bogie, the defender's cashier, who had charge at their Lumphinnans office, delivered by the witness John Duncan on the morning of Thursday, the 21st January 1904?"*

To this question the jury replied in the affirmative. Lord Kyllachy, being himself also of the same opinion upon the evidence, directed the jury to find that there had been sufficient notice of the claim in terms of sec. 7 of the Employers Liability Act. To this finding and direction counsel for the defenders excepted, and asked Lord Kyllachy to direct the jury that as the notice was enclosed in an envelope addressed, not to the defenders, but to their cashier, and as there was no evidence that it had been received by the company, sufficient notice had not been given in terms of secs. 4 and 7 of the Act. This direction Lord Kyllachy refused to give. Thereupon counsel for the defenders excepted to this ruling and refusal.

The jury returned a verdict for the pursuer, and assessed the damages at £200.

The defenders presented a bill of exceptions, which set forth the issue and the exceptions proposed by the defenders' counsel as aforesaid.

Argued for the defenders;—The putting of the notice into an envelope, addressed, not to the defenders, but to their cashier, followed by a delivery of the envelope at the office, was not a sufficient or proper serving of notice on the company under secs. 4 and 7 of the Act. The company was not to be prejudiced by the envelope directed to their cashier not coming into their hands through his neglect or his absence at the time the envelope was delivered. There was no evidence that the defenders ever received the notice, and this differentiated the present case from M'Govan v. Tancred, Arrol, & Company.[1] Under the Companies Act, 1862, sec. 62, notices on a limited company had to be "addressed to the company at their registered office." There was no duty on the cashier at a branch office to receive or hand over to the company a communication in an envelope directed to him.

Argued for the pursuer;—The jury found for the pursuer on the issue, which was one at common law as well as under the Employers Liability Act. There was nothing to shew that the jury did not find the defenders liable at common law. The notice being itself addressed to the company and directed to the cashier who was in charge of the branch office, and delivered at that office, was properly served on the company. Sec. 7 of the Act expressly sanctioned delivery of the notice at any one of the offices of a company. There was some conflict of authority as to whether the question of the

* It was not disputed that No. 21 of process was a sufficient notice if it had been duly served.

[1] June 26, 1886, 13 R. 1033.

No. 173.
July 15, 1905.
Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

sufficiency of a notice fell to be decided by the Judge presiding at the trial,[1] or by the jury.[2] In the present case both the presiding Judge and the jury had decided that the notice was good.

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is a bill of exceptions against a direction of Lord Kyllachy in a jury trial at the instance of James Duncan against the Fife Coal Company, and the question turns upon the matter of whether there was or was not a sufficient notice given in terms of the Employers Liability Act to allow the pursuer to maintain the action under that Act. Now, I am bound to say that I think Lord Kyllachy was put in a position of considerable difficulty owing to the state of the authorities in this matter, because there are two cases which deal with the disposal of the question of a notice which is not admitted by the other side. One is the case of Trail,[1] where, the question having been mooted at the time of the adjustment of the issues, the Court there postponed the decision—as the rubric says, and I think says correctly,—"for the decision of the presiding Judge at the trial." In this case, all the Judges treat this question as one to be decided by the Judge presiding at the trial. But then, on the other hand, there is a second case,—M'Leod v. Pirie,[2] where, though dealing with the case in the same way, the learned Judges do not express clearly the view that it is to be disposed of by the Judge at the trial, but rather indicate that it is in some way or other to be decided by the jury. Under these circumstances, I think Lord Kyllachy did very wisely in putting the question he did to the jury, namely,—"Was a notice in terms of the document No. 21 of process, addressed to the defenders' company, and enclosed in an envelope addressed to Mr Bogie, the defenders' cashier, who had charge at their Lumphinnans office, delivered at said office by the witness John Duncan on the morning of Thursday, the 21st January 1904?" That question the jury answered in the affirmative, and Lord Kyllachy, according to that, then directed the jury to find that there had been sufficient notice of the claim in terms of the said section of the Act.

Now, of course there is under these two cases, an alternative view, and for the purpose of disposing of this case I do not think it matters which view is correct. If the view was that Lord Kyllachy was to decide this matter as the Judge, then he did decide it, and being, I think, a decision on a question of fact, I do not think Lord Kyllachy's decision could be reviewed. At anyrate, if it could be reviewed it could only be reviewed in this way, that, proceeding on certain facts, he gave a direction in law which either side may say was wrong; but then they would have to raise the whole question on the merits, and persuade your Lordships that it was wrong. On the other hand, if the point was properly put to the jury, then, the jury having answered that question, in order to succeed in their bill of exceptions the defenders would have to shew that the direction that Lord Kyllachy thereupon gave to the jury was a misleading direction by directing them to find that there had been sufficient notice of the claim in terms of said section of the Act. Now, that is a misleading direction or not just

[1] Trail v. Kelman & Co., Oct. 22, 1887, 15 R. 4.
[2] M'Leod v. Pirie, Feb. 15, 1893, 20 R. 381.

No. 173.
July 15, 1905.
Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

according as it is a good sequitur to the question which I have already read to your Lordships being answered in the affirmative. I think it is a perfectly good sequitur, because there is the familiar doctrine that everything that the person complaining—who are the defenders here—did not object to in Lord Kyllachy's charge must be held to be correct. Now, they did not complain of the statement that Bogie, the cashier, had charge at their Lumphinnans office; and that fact standing, it seems to me that it was a perfectly good direction that if the letter addressed to this gentleman who was in charge at the office was delivered, that was a good delivery to the Company. If there had been any doubt as to Bogie being in charge at the office, then the proposition would not have been a complete one,—viz., that delivery to anyone at the office was necessarily delivery to the Company. But when you have the fact, which is not gainsaid so far as we are concerned, that the person to whom it was delivered was the person in charge at the defenders' office, there is good delivery. Therefore I am for refusing the bill of exceptions.

But the consideration given to these cases, and the difficulties that can be or have been put, have been enough to make your Lordships reconsider this matter of what should be done with those questions of want of notice when they are raised, and we have consulted the other Division on the matter, so that the practice of the Court should be uniform. Undoubtedly the idea under which these questions were reserved was upon the ground that it would save trouble and expense. The ground on which it was done in the first of the cases I quoted, the case of Trail,[1] was, that as there was there a common law action as well as an employers' liability action, there must be an inquiry before a jury, and that therefore they would have to face two inquiries instead of one. But on more mature consideration it seems to us,—for I think here I am expressing what all your Lordships think,—that, after all, there are more considerations on the other side. In the first place, it is obvious that this want of notice is truly a prejudicial plea. An action ought not to go on at all under the Employers Liability Act if the notice was badly given. The party might come to trial with the whole of his witnesses prepared,—skilled witnesses and medical witnesses,—and all that expense would be thrown away if it was found that the notice was bad. Further, the question does not seem appropriate to be settled by a jury, for undoubtedly it is not within the issue, and could not be within the issue submitted to the jury. And it does not seem very appropriate either to leave it to a Judge, for there are great difficulties,—if the Judge goes wrong,—in reviewing that decision. Therefore we have come to the decision that in future it will be proper for Sheriffs before whom this plea is tabled,—for I need not remind your Lordships that these Employers' Liability cases are necessarily raised in the Sheriff Court,—to take it up as a prejudicial plea before allowing a proof on the merits. No doubt they will have to allow a proof on the prejudicial plea, but it will not take away the case from them; for though on that allowance of proof one of the parties may apply here for a jury trial I give it forth clearly so that there shall be no mistake,—if they do come up they will be sent back on the principle of Sharples' [1] case. So that I hope nobody will come here thinking they ought to have a jury trial on the facts which dispose of this prejudicial plea. If anyone does so they will be sent back to the Sheriff to have this prejudicial plea disposed of.

[1] 15 R. 4.

No. 173. July 15, 1905. Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

LORD ADAM.—The first question is as to the disposal of the bill of exceptions, and I agree that it ought to be refused.

The Act of Parliament requires a man to give notice of action within six weeks, and that the action be commenced within six months from the occurrence of the accident causing the injury. And then section 7 of the Act speaks as to the form of the notice and provides for serving it. Now, this section says that the notice shall contain "the name and address of the person injured, and shall state in ordinary language the cause of the injury and the date on which it was sustained," and then it refers more particularly to the case now before us. It provides that it "shall be served on the employer, or if there is more than one employer upon one of such employers." Then it goes on to say that the notice may be served "by delivering the same to or at the residence or place of business of the person on whom it is to be served." Then a following clause is still more applicable to this case, —"Where the employer is a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, the notice shall be served by delivering the same at or by sending it by post in a registered letter addressed to the office, or, if there be more than one office, any one of the offices of such body."

That is what the Act requires in regard to service. Now, in this case there is no question whatever of the notice that was given being in accordance with the requirements of section 7. It contains the particulars necessary, and it was addressed to the defenders; but the objection taken here is that it was not properly served. Now, the jury have found in point of fact that this notice was delivered at the office of the Company by the witness John Duncan on the morning of Thursday, 21st January 1904. That seems to me, so far as service is concerned, to satisfy everything in the Act of Parliament. The Act requires service, and nothing but service, and provides that it will be served on the Company by being delivered at their office. Now, that was done. But the objection taken was this, that it was put into an envelope addressed not to the defenders, but to the cashier, Bogie, and it was contended that the inference from that is that it was not actually delivered into the hands of the Company. Now, there is no substance in that objection at all. The jury has held that this notice was served at the Company's office as required by the Act. Had it been addressed to the office boy or something less, there might have been a question raised; but when it is addressed to a man Bogie, who is found by the jury to have been in charge of the Company's office at which it was received, I think it would be idle to say that there was a good objection to that being good service. And therefore I see no objection to the service.

I entirely agree with your Lordship as to the general question of future proceedings. We have profited by the experience we have had in this case to review the matter.

---

[1] Sharples v. Walter Yuill & Co., May 23, 1905, supra, p. 657.

No. 173.

July 15, 1905.
Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

LORD KINNEAR.—I entirely agree on both points,—that is to say, the grounds on which this bill of exceptions should be refused, and also on the general point.

I only add that I agree with what I understand to be your Lordship's opinion, that the statute itself, by providing that an action shall not be maintainable unless notice is given within six weeks, makes it clear that when a question of notice arises it is a prejudicial question which must be settled before anything else is done in the conduct of the process. The action cannot be maintained unless notice has been admitted or proved, and therefore if the fact of notice is disputed it should be settled by the Sheriff in the first place, before the pursuer is allowed to go to proof on the case he alleges against his employer.

LORD KYLLACHY.—I concur, and have nothing to add.

LORD M'LAREN was absent.

THE COURT disallowed the exceptions for the defenders, applied the verdict of the jury, and decerned against the defenders for payment to the pursuer of £115.

P. R. M'LAREN, Solicitor—W. & J. BURNESS, W.S.—Agents.

No. 174.

July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

THE LORD ADVOCATE, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Sol.-Gen. Salvesen—A. J. Young.

WILLIAM BOYD ANDERSON AND OTHERS (Henderson's Trustees), Defenders (Respondents).—Clyde, K.C.—T. B. Morison.

Revenue—Estate-duty—Property passing on death—Cesser of Annuity—Value of benefit accruing—Finance Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. cap. 30), secs. 1 2 (1), b, and 7 (7).—The Finance Act, 1894, enacts, sec. 7, subsec. (7), that, for the purpose of calculating estate-duty, "the value of the benefit accruing or arising from the cesser of an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased shall . . . (b) if the interest extended to less than the whole income of the property, be the principal value of an addition to the property equal to the income to which the interest extended."

Held, in the case of the cesser of an annuity payable out of heritable property, that the value of the benefit accruing fell to be determined by capitalising the amount of the annuity on the basis of the number of years' purchase applicable to the class of property out of which it was paid, and without taking into consideration the amount of the bonds by which the heritable property might be affected.

1st DIVISION. Exchequer Cause. LdStormonth-Darling.

JAMES HENDERSON, timber merchant in Glasgow, died on 3d January 1882. By his trust-disposition and settlement he assigned and disponed to William Boyd Anderson and others, as trustees, his whole estate, heritable and moveable, for certain trust purposes. By the fourth purpose of his trust-disposition and settlement he, inter alia, directed his trustees to pay to his wife, should she survive him, a free yearly jointure or liferent annuity of £800, and to allow her during her viduity the liferent use and occupation of his furnished residence of Broomhall, Partick, or in lieu of that an annual payment of £150 out of his estate. By the last purpose it was provided that on the youngest of his children attaining the age of twenty-one the whole heritable properties and generally the whole rest and residue of his estate should be divided and apportioned amongst his surviving children and the issue of deceasing children; but should his wife be alive at that date the division of residue should be subject to retention by his trustees of such funds and property as might be necessary to secure payment of the liferent provisions conferred upon her, and on the lapse of these provisions, the funds and property thereby released were to form, and to be administered as, part of the residue of his estate.

No. 174. July 15, 1905. Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

James Henderson was survived by his wife, and his trustees accepted office and lodged an account for payment of legacy-duty. In that account the widow's liferent of £950 per annum, made up of the liferent annuity of £800, and the annual payment of £150 in lieu of the liferent use of Broomhall, was treated as falling to be paid, to the extent of £200 out of the moveable estate, and to the extent of £750 out of heritage. In ascertaining the dutiable value of the residue, an amount sufficient to provide for this annual payment of £750 was deducted from the value of the heritable estate, and legacy-duty was paid on the net value thus arrived at.

The testator's widow died on 6th March 1903, and on her death estate-duty became payable (in virtue of sections 1, 2 (1) (6), and 7 (7) of the Finance Act, 1894), on the value of the benefit accruing to the residuary legatees in respect of the cesser of her annuity of £750. In October 1903 the trustees lodged an estate-duty account in which the value of the benefit accruing from the cesser of this annuity was brought out at £4717, 4s. 6d., and upon that sum estate-duty, assessed at 3½ per cent, and amounting to £165, 2s. 1d., was duly paid by the trustees. The principle on which the value accruing from the cesser of such an annuity is to be estimated is defined in section 7, subsection (7), of the Finance Act, 1894.*

The Inland Revenue authorities being dissatisfied with this valuation by the trustees, on 27th January 1905, the Lord Advocate, for and on behalf of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, raised this action against James Henderson's trustees, seeking, inter alia, that the trustees should be decerned and ordained to deliver to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue a corrective account of the property which passed or was deemed to have passed on the death of the widow of James Henderson, for the purpose of ascertaining the estate-duty chargeable in respect of the benefit accruing from the cesser of an annuity of £750; and to pay to the pursuer the sum of £250 sterling, or such other sum as might be found to be still due as estate-duty in respect of the value of the benefit accruing as aforesaid.

In the estate-duty account lodged by the trustees in October 1903 the sum of £4717, 4s. 6d. there set forth as the value of the benefit accruing was arrived at as follows:—The gross principal value of the heritable properties, calculated as being fourteen years' purchase of the gross rental after the usual deductions, was set down as £120,630, 1s. 1d., and from that was deducted the amount of the bonds affecting the subjects, namely £80,173, 11s. 4d., leaving as the net principal value £40,456, 9s. 9d. The gross annual value was set down as

* The Finance Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. cap. 30), enacts, section 7, subsection (7):—"The value of the benefit accruing or arising from the cesser of an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased shall . . . (b) if the interest extended to less than the whole income of the property, be the principal value of an addition to the property equal to the income to which the interest extended."

No. 174.
July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

£11,686, and from that was deducted £3070, 11s. 2½d. in name of feu-duties and public burdens, and £2181, 15s. as interest on bonds for £62,950, leaving as the net annual value £6433, 13s. 9½d. (The difference between £80,173, 11s. 4d. and £62,950, viz. £17,223, 11s. 4d., represented the liquidation of bonds out of the testator's moveable estate.) The sum of £4717, 4s. 6d. was then arrived at as the figure bearing the same proportion to the net principal value as the amount of the annuity did to the net annual value. In other words it was arrived at as a sum in proportion, viz.:—as £6433, 13s. 9½d. is to £750, so is £40,456, 9s. 9d. to £4717, 4s. 6d.

The pursuer averred (Cond. 8) that in this account "the value upon which duty was paid was materially underestimated. The sum of £4717, 4s. 6d. did not represent even approximately the true principal value corresponding to the annuity of £750. Such an annuity meant a life interest in so much capital as was required to yield that amount of income. . . . The defenders also in valuing the whole heritable properties belonging to the trust, proceeded on the basis of a fourteen years' purchase of the net rental, after meeting feu-duties and such necessary outgoings, and on the same ratio an annual sum of £750 would mean a capital value of £10,500. It is accordingly claimed that the estate-duty payable in respect of the cesser of the widow's annuity should be assessed on the footing that the principal value proportionate to the annuity amounts to at least £10,500."

In answer the defenders explained (Ans. 8) "that the sum of £4717, 4s. 6d. represented the capital value of the annuity of £750, in terms of the Finance Act, 1894, sec. 7 (7) (b), that capital sum bearing the same proportion to the capital of the trust that the annuity of £750 bears to the income of the trust"; and (Ans. 9) "that in the valuation of the testator's heritable property the valuation thereof is taken at fourteen years' purchase of the rents, and as the said annuity is only charged on what remains after paying the incumbrances, the said duty cannot be charged on anything of a greater value than the amount of the said fourteen years' purchase, after deduction of the amount of said incumbrances."

The pursuer pleaded, inter alia;—(1) For the purpose of estate-duty, the value of the benefit arising on the cesser of the deceased's annuity is the principal value of an addition to the heritable trust-estate equal to the annuity. (2) The value of the heritable estate being taken at so many years' purchase, the principal value of an addition to it should be determined on the same basis. (3) Estate-duty being still due and payable as condescended on, decree therefor ought to be given, with interest.

The defenders pleaded;—(2) The defenders not being liable under the Finance Act, 1894, in the estate-duty claimed by the pursuer, they ought to be assoilzied. (3) The defenders having paid all estate-duty legally exigible, and same having been accepted, are entitled to absolvitor. (4) In respect that the benefit arising on the cesser of the deceased's annuity ought to be valued on the basis of taking into account, inter alia, the burdens affecting the heritable estate, the defenders should be assoilzied.

On 18th May 1905 the Lord Ordinary in Exchequer Causes (Stormonth-Darling) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds that in estimating, for the purposes of estate-duty, the value of the benefit arising from the cesser of the late Mrs Henderson's liferent annuity of £750, payable out of the heritable property forming part of the trust-estate, the principal value of an addition to the said property equal to the said annuity, must, under section 7 (7) (b) of the Finance Act, 1894, bear the same proportion to the market value of the said property at Mrs Henderson's death, after deducting the burdens thereon allowed by section 7 (1) of the said Act, as the amount of the said annuity bore to the whole free income of the said property at the same date; and quoad ultra continues the cause." *

No. 174.

July 15, 1905. Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

---

* "OPINION.—The only question which was here argued relates to the mode of valuing a liferent annuity of £750 which terminated on the death of Mrs Henderson on 6th March 1903. The annuity was created by the will of her husband, who died on 3d January 1882, leaving both heritable and moveable estate. The value of the annuity, as provided by the will, was £800, plus a right to the occupation of his furnished residence, or (in lieu of that) an annual payment of £150; and the testator directed that the net annual income from both the heritable and moveable parts of his estate should be applied in the first place in payment of the annuity. The reason why the amount of the annuity for the purposes of estate-duty comes to be reckoned at only £750 is this: In settling for the duties payable at the death of the testator, both parties treated the annuity of £800 as payable out of moveables and heritage respectively in the proportion of one to three, i.e. £200 as payable out of moveables and £600 out of heritage. Accordingly, when £150 a year, as representing the value of the liferent of the house, is added to this estimated sum of £600 a year, you have an annuity of £750 allocated to heritage, and nobody proposes to disturb that division. It is only in so far as payable out of heritage that the annuity has to be reckoned for purposes of estate-duty, because the moveable part of the estate is admittedly exempt from estate-duty, as having already borne inventory-duty.

"Now, the value of the benefit accruing or arising by the cesser of an interest in property is regulated by the Finance Act, 1894, sections 2 (1) (b) and 7 (7), and the question here raised turns chiefly on the construction of the latter section, which relates to the manner of estimating the benefit. The section first deals with the case where the interest extends to the whole income of the property, and provides that in that case the value of the benefit arising from the cesser of the interest shall be the principal value of the property. A previous subsection, viz., 7 (5), provides that 'the principal value of any property shall be estimated to be the price which, in the opinion of the Commissioners, such property would fetch if sold in the open market at the time of the death of the deceased.' When, therefore, an annuity consists of the whole income arising from a particular heritable subject the matter is plain enough, for the property is to be taken at its market value at the date when the annuity terminates by the death of the annuitant. Where, however, the interest ceasing at the death of the annuitant extends to less than the whole income of the property, the matter is not so plain, and the rule of valuation laid down by section 7 (7) (b) cannot be said to be a model of clearness. Indeed, if the words were taken literally, they would work out rather a nonsensical result, for the declaration that the value of the benefit is to be 'the principal value of an addition to the property equal to the income to which the interest extended' might be read as meaning, in the present case, an addition of only £750. This, however, is so manifestly not the real meaning of the subsection that the defenders do not contend for it. The parties are agreed that the hypothetical addition to be made to the property is to be something which will be capable of yielding the income to which the interest extended, and they differ only as to the mode in which the addition is to be calculated.

"I cannot say that the actual figures suggested by either party afford an

No. 174.
July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

The pursuer reclaimed, and argued;—The security here being ample, the benefit accruing to the residuary beneficiaries by the cesser of this annuity was simply an increase of income to the extent of the amount of the annuity. That amount was not made any greater or any less by the bonds affecting the property; and therefore, in estimating the principal value of such an increase, it was quite irrelevant to take into consideration the amount of the bonds. The Lord Ordinary's method of stating a sum in proportion was erroneous. All that had to be done was to ascertain the capital value of an annual payment of £750, payable out of heritable property of this class. On the defenders' own shewing, the capital value of income arising from this class of property fell to be calculated at fourteen years' purchase; altogether satisfactory basis for solving the question. The Crown suggests an addition of £10,500, which is just the annuity of £750 capitalised at fourteen years' purchase. The defenders, on the other hand, suggest an addition of £4717, 4s. 6d., as bearing the same proportion to the total capital of the trust that the annuity of £750 bears to the income of the trust. This latter suggestion is at first sight a little startling, for it implies that the heritable property on which the annuity is charged yields an annual return of nearly 16 per cent. I think it would have been more satisfactory if there had been a detailed statement of the total value of the heritable subjects on which the annuity was charged after deducting the other burdens thereon allowed by section 7 (1), and of the total income yielded thereby, all as at 6th March 1903. But, in the absence of such actual figures, it is perhaps enough for the decision of the case that I should state the principles on which, in my opinion, the hypothetical addition to the property prescribed by section 7 (7) (b) ought to be made.

---

"In the notes to this rather enigmatical subsection by the editors of the fourth edition of the late Mr Hanson's book, I find a suggestion in which I concur. They say—'In the case here provided for, the addition must, it is conceived, be of such a sum as will, at the average rate of income which the actual property is producing, return an income equivalent to the amount of income received in respect of the interest which has ceased.' Then they go on to figure a case where a property worth £20,000 is producing an actual income of £800, and the benefit which is being valued is the cesser of an annuity of £400, in which case, they say, the principal value upon which duty has to be paid would be just one-half of the value of the property, or £10,000. Now, all this recognises, rightly I think, that regard must be had to the market value of the actual property on which the annuity is charged as at the date of the annuitant's death, and to the actual free income yielded by it as at the same date. Thus, it is impossible to settle the question either by taking an arbitrary number of years' purchase of the annuity, or by taking a capital sum which would yield the annuity at any percentage which is merely customary. It is, to my mind, inconceivable that, where the annuity covers the whole income of a property, you should be relegated under section 7 (7) (a) to market value, of course after deducting burdens; and that, where the annuity covers something less than the whole income, you should be free, under section 7 (7) (b), to disregard the actual facts altogether. It is of no consequence, in my view, whether the income yielded by the property charged with the annuity be large or small, usual or unusual. What you want to get at is, the value of the benefit arising to the actual property by its being relieved of the actual burden. If the income yielded by the property be unusually large, the capital value of its relief from the fixed burden will be proportionally small; and in any case the value must be ascertained as at the death of the annuitant, and can take no note of events affecting value either before or after that event."

No. 174.
July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

and therefore the value of the benefit accruing here was fourteen years' purchase of £750.[1]

Argued for the respondents;—By the cesser of this annuity the net income from this heritable property had been increased by the amount of the annuity, and the capital value of this increase of income must depend on the nature of the property from which it was paid. The capital value of the increase was, therefore, such a sum as would, at the average rate of income which the property yielded, produce the amount of the annuity.[2] The average rate could only be determined by taking the net capital value of the property, and the net income arising from it; and these two figures could only be ascertained after deducting, in the one case the amount of the bonds, and in the other the interest on the bonds. The proportion sum stated by the Lord Ordinary, which gave effect to these considerations, was, therefore, the correct method of calculating the principal value of the benefit accruing in this case. To calculate it on the basis of the number of years' purchase applicable in general to this class of security, and to ignore the actual nature and value of the particular security from which it was paid, would produce a false and inequitable result.[3]

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—The late James Henderson died before the passing of the Finance Act of 1894, leaving, so far as the question in this case is concerned, heritable estate, consisting of house property in Glasgow, burdened with an annuity of £750 a year, payable to his widow. The widow died in 1903, and therefore estate-duty became due upon the principal value of property passing under sec. 1 of the Finance Act of 1894, such property being held to be property passing in respect of the provisions of sec. 2, subsec. (1), which is in these terms—"Property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include the property following, . . . That is to say (b) property in which the deceased or any other person had an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased, to the extent of which a benefit accrues or arises by the cesser of such interest." The dispute is as to how the principal value is to be calculated. The rules for determination of value are given in sec. 7, and the specific case is dealt with under subsec. 7 of that section, which is in these terms—"The value of the benefit accruing or arising from the cesser of an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased shall . . . (b) if the interest extended to less than the whole income of the property, be the principal value of an addition to the property equal to the income to which the interest extended." The facts about this heritable estate, over which the annuity of £750 is secured, are that the gross value of the estate is reckoned at £120,000 odd, which is just fourteen years' purchase of the rental, deducting feu-duty, ground-annuals, and public burdens. But further, there is the fact that the estate is presently bonded to the extent of about £63,000.

The Lord Ordinary sets forth the contention of parties thus—"The

---

[1] Lord Advocate v. Maclachlan, June 13, 1899, 1 F. 917.
[2] Hanson's Death Duties, 4th ed., p. 162.
[3] Earl Cowley v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1899] A. C. 198.

No. 174.
July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

Crown suggests an addition of £10,500, which is just the annuity of £750 capitalised at fourteen years' purchase. The defenders, on the other hand, suggest an addition of £4717, 4s. 6d., as bearing the same proportion to the total capital of the trust that the annuity of £750 bears to the income of the trust." He then goes on, not to pronounce directly upon the figures of value suggested either by the Crown or by the defenders, but he states the principles on which the hypothetical addition, quoting the terms of subsec. 7, is to be made. His Lordship says—"In the notes to this rather enigmatical subsection by the editors of the fourth edition of the late Mr Hanson's book, I find a suggestion in which I concur. They say—'In the case here provided for, the addition must, it is conceived, be of such a sum as will, at the average rate of income which the actual property is producing, return an income equivalent to the amount of income received in respect of the interest which has ceased.' . . . Now, all this recognises, rightly I think, that regard must be had to the market value of the actual property on which the annuity is charged as at the date of the annuitant's death, and to the actual free income yielded by it as at the same date. Thus, it is impossible to settle the question either by taking an arbitrary number of years' purchase of the annuity, or by taking a capital sum which would yield the annuity at any percentage which is merely customary. It is, to my mind, inconceivable that, where the annuity covers the whole income of a property, you should be relegated under sec. 7 (7) (a), to market value, of course after deducting burdens; and that, where the annuity covers something less than the whole income, you should be free, under sec. 7 (7) (b), to disregard the actual facts altogether." Now, with all this I agree—only noting in passing that the Lord Ordinary is mistaken if he thinks, as he apparently does, although I am not quite sure—that the selection of the number fourteen by the Crown for the years of purchase is an arbitrary selection. But when he proceeds to put these general dicta into concrete form he seems to me to take a new and an altogether inadmissible departure. His interlocutor is—"Finds that in estimating, for the purposes of estate-duty, the value of the benefit arising from the cesser of the late Mrs Henderson's liferent annuity of £750, payable out of the heritable property forming part of the trust-estate, the principal value of an addition to the said property equal to the said annuity must, under sec. 7 (7) (b) of the Finance Act, 1894, bear the same proportion to the market value of the said property at Mrs Henderson's death, after deducting the burdens thereon allowed by sec. 7 (1) of the said Act, as the amount of the said annuity bore to the whole free income of the said property at the same date." Now, in the first place, there is no indication in the statute, and no necessity in the Lord Ordinary's general remarks that you should attack the question by means of a proportion sum at all, still less that one of the factors of that proportion sum should be the free income of the whole property over which the sum in question was secured. But perhaps the easiest way of demonstrating what is the fallacy of this method is to take it as it stands. If you take $x$ as the principal value of an addition to the said property equal to the annuity, then putting in the form of an equation the proportion stated by the Lord Ordinary, we get it that $x$ multiplied by the free income is equal to the market value of the property, minus the bonds,

No. 174.

July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

multiplied by £750. Now, as this equation must be true for all values, it follows that as you diminish the free income by, for example, supposing a higher rate of interest on the bonds, $x$ must increase. In other words, the less the free income the greater the value of the hypothetical addition corresponding to the annuity, which is absurd.

I therefore discard this proportional method, and revert to what the Lord Ordinary has said as to taking actual facts. The hypothetical addition must be an addition of the same class of property as the property in question. Therefore I think the Crown are right in taking the fourteen years' purchase, because admittedly that is the capital value of this class of property. The truth is that the bonds can never have any effect on the calculation unless they are so large as really to affect the annuity itself, that is, to render it insecure. That would be an answer in fact, because then the annuity of £750 would not truly be an annuity of £750, but only of some less sum. But here there is no such question, for all admit that there was ample margin to secure the £750 being regularly paid. But it was only secured on this class of property, not on consols or some other first-class security; and therefore I think the Crown are right in being content to calculate the hypothetical addition in the same way as they would have calculated the property itself if it had passed after the date of the Finance Act. I therefore propose to recall the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, and find that the value in the circumstances is properly calculated at fourteen years' purchase of £750.

LORD ADAM.—The question arises in this case in consequence of the death of Mrs Henderson, who had an annuity of £750 a year from her husband's estate, and as I understand that annuity was not secured on any specific part of that estate, it cannot be held as applicable to the portion of the rent of that estate which otherwise would have gone to this annuity. When Mrs Henderson died of course her interests, which were life interests, ceased, and the question before us is raised under subsection 7 of section 7 of the Finance Act of 1894, which relates to the value of the benefit accruing from the cesser of an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased, and subsection (b) says,—"If the interest extended to less than the whole income of the property" (which is the case here), it shall "be the principal value of an addition to the property equal to the income to which the interest extended." Now, it is quite true that that is not very clearly expressed, but the meaning of it is plain, and, as the Lord Ordinary said in his note, "the parties are agreed that the hypothetical addition to be made to the property is to be something which will be capable of yielding the income to which the interest extended, and they differ only as to the mode in which the addition is to be calculated." The question therefore here is, what is the value of the addition to the estate at the death of Mrs Henderson. Now, I confess that I have not been able throughout this case to see or to understand how the value of the estate can be increased or diminished—how the estate to be added to another estate is to be enlarged or increased by the fact that the value of the estate to which it is added has been already fixed. Supposing the estate were worth £130,000, and the value after deducting bonds was £100,000, how would that affect the value of the addition to be made to it? If the capital value of £750 annually is to be valued, how is that to be more or less because it is added to £130,000 or to £100,000? It is beyond my capacity to understand that, and accordingly I think that the view that the Lord Ordinary proceeded on is wrong, and that the simple question before the Court is to state what is the value, the capitalised value, of the £750.

Now, I agree with your Lordship also that the fourteen years taken by the Crown is by no means arbitrary. What we find is this—that the value of the whole estate is estimated at fourteen years' purchase of the rents of the property. That is so. Now, if that be so, and if this estate now becomes more valuable by £750 a year, that is just an addition to the estate of that portion of the rent of that estate which otherwise would have gone to provide this annuity. I think the Crown is right in estimating that the £750 would require fourteen years' purchase of that amount to meet the £750, and by so much the estate would be increased.

LORD M'LAREN.—I agree with your Lordships that the mode of valuing the estate suggested by the Lord Ordinary, although apparently plausible, yet does not lead to sound or equitable results. While in this case it leads to a favourable result to the private party, it is easy to see that if the conditions were reversed, the result might be to tax unfairly the person entitled to the reversion of the estate. But the real objection to the method is that it is not the method described by the Act of Parliament. I think that what we have to do is simply to value the addition of benefit to the estate resulting from an annuity falling in, and the only elements are the amount of the annuity and the number of years' purchase at which it has to be valued, having regard to the nature of the security out of which it is paid. I therefore agree with your Lordships that the sum claimed by the Crown is the true sum, and is arrived at in a fair way.

LORD KINNEAR.—I entirely agree with your Lordship. I think the main error of the interlocutor under review consists of the introduction of the words "after deducting the burdens thereon" into the Lord Ordinary's statement of the sum in proportion. But I agree with your Lordships that it is not necessary or convenient to set it out in the form of a sum in proportion at all. It appears to me that the meaning of the statute is plain enough, on careful consideration of the words employed.

In the first place, the particular subject of taxation for the purposes of the present question is to be found in section 2, subsection (1) (b),—"property in which the deceased or any other person had an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased." But then, in applying that provision to the particular case in hand, which is the taxation of the property arising from the termination of an annuity of £750 as a yearly charge on the estate, we must keep specially in view the next following words, "to the extent to which a benefit accrues or arises by the cesser of such interest." That seems to me to shew that the true subject of taxation is not the whole property of course, but that property to the extent to which it has ceased to be burdened by the annuity, because it has been relieved of an annuity of £750 a year, and to that extent it is made subject of taxation. But then, when we go to section 7, I think the true principle is brought out with perfectly sufficient clearness by subsection 7,—"The value of the benefit accruing or arising from the cesser of an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased shall . . . (b) if the interest extended to less than the whole income of the property, be the principal value of an addition to the property equal to the income to which the interest extended." Now, I cannot say that I have any doubt upon the construction which the Lord Ordinary and all your Lordships have put upon these words, which means that there is to be an addition of a value equal to producing £750 a year. Now, the question is whether, in searching for the value of this hypothetical addition, we are to take into account the encumbrances affecting the remainder of the estate, and it appears to me that, taking the Lord Ordinary's principle, which I think perfectly sound, we ought to look at the actual facts of the case. It is plain enough that there is no room for the consideration of the encumbrances on the rest of the property, in order to ascertain what the value of an unencumbered addition to the property would be. The whole question is what would be the value of an addition to the property that would produce an annuity of £750. That is the whole problem which is set for us by the statute, and inasmuch as it appears to be clear that the thing to be valued is the interest of the deceased in the estate, the interest which has ceased at her death is an interest of £750 exactly, unaffected by any burden. The deceased had no interest whatever in that part of the income which went to pay the debts, but had interest only in that part which went to pay her own annuity of £750. It appears to me, therefore, that the true method of ascertaining the subject of taxation is to see what would be the value of an addition to the estate which, at the average rate of income which the actual property is producing, would return an income equal to £750 a year. I take these words from the passage quoted by the Lord Ordinary from Mr Hanson's work, which I agree with the Lord Ordinary states the rule.

No. 174. July 15, 1905. Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—" . . . Recall the said interlocutor: Find that the value of the benefit arising from the cesser of the late Mrs Henderson's liferent annuity of £750 payable out of the heritable property forming part of the trust-estate is, under section 7 (7) (b) of the Finance Act, 1894, the principal value of an addition to the said property equal to the said annuity, and is, in the circumstances, properly calculated at fourteen years' purchase of the said annuity."

THE SOLICITOR OF INLAND REVENUE—WEBSTER, WILL, & Co., S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 175. July 15, 1905.* Lord Advocate v. Corporation of Edinburgh.

THE LORD ADVOCATE (on behalf of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue), Pursuer (Respondent).—Sol.-Gen. Salvesen, K.C.—A. J. Young.

THE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF EDINBURGH, Defenders (Reclaimers). —Cooper, K.C.—Spens.

Revenue—Income-Tax—Deduction of Income-Tax from interest on loans —Liability for Income-Tax not deducted—Customs and Inland Revenue

* Decided July 6, 1905.

No. 175.

July 15, 1905.

Lord Advocate v. Corporation of Edinburgh.

1st Division. LdStormonth-Darling.

Act, 1888 (51 and 52 Vict. cap. 8), sec. 24, subsec. (3).—Held that a municipal corporation, which was bound to deduct Income-tax from interest on loans but had failed to do so, was liable in payment to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount that should have been deducted.

(ANTE, Oct. 15, 1903, 6 F. 1.)

The Corporation of Edinburgh, in virtue of powers conferred upon them by various Acts of Parliament, borrowed money temporarily by the issue of bills and promissory-notes, and simple acknowledgments granted to lenders.

On 9th January 1903, the Lord Advocate, on behalf of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, brought the present action, in which reference was made to section 24, subsection (3) of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888,* and in which the conclusions of the summons were, that the defenders should be ordained to render to the Commissioners "a full account of the sums retainable by the defenders in respect of income-tax during the period from 22d September 1901 to 5th April 1902, upon their payment of interest of moneys borrowed by them on temporary loan, by means of bill or promissory-note, or simple acknowledgment; and whether such an account be rendered or not the defenders ought and should be decerned and ordained, by decree of our said Lords, to pay to the pursuer the sum of £1200, or such other sum, more or less, as may be found to be due and payable in respect of income-tax retainable as aforesaid, with interest," &c.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—1. The pursuer's averments are irrelevant, and insufficient to support the conclusions of the summons. 3. The defenders should be assoilzied from the conclusions of the summons in respect that—(a) The defenders are not bound or entitled to deduct income-tax from discounts on bills or promissory-notes discounted with banks or financial traders, or from interest paid on short loans or overdrafts from bankers. (b) Income-tax on interest, not being annual interest, falls to be accounted for by the recipients of such interest under section 100 of the Act 5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35, second rule of third case of Schedule D, and the defenders are not bound to deduct the income-tax from such interest. (c) The income-tax sued for, in so far as the same was due or payable, has been already duly accounted for, and paid over to the Inland Revenue. (e) The defenders not being bound to retain or deduct, and not having in fact retained or deducted income-tax from the interest paid by them on temporary loans during the period embraced in the summons, are not liable for or bound to pay the sum sued for, or any part thereof.

On 7th July 1903, the Lord Ordinary (Stormonth-Darling) pronounced an interlocutor finding that the defenders were bound to

* Section 24, subsection (3), of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 and 52 Vict. cap. 8), enacts:—"Upon payment of any interest of money or annuities charged with income-tax under Schedule D, and not payable, or not wholly payable, out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax, the person by or through whom such interest or annuities shall be paid shall deduct thereout the rate of income-tax in force at the time of such payment, and shall forthwith render an account to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount so deducted, or of the amount deducted out of so much of the interest or annuities as is not paid out of profits or gains brought into charge as the case may be; and such amount shall be a debt from such person to Her Majesty, and recoverable as such accordingly. . . ."

No. 175. July 15, 1905. Lord Advocate v. Corporation of Edinburgh.

deduct the income-tax out of interest paid by them, and to render an account to the Commissioners of the amount so deducted; and appointing them within one calendar month to render such an account for the period from 22d September 1901 to 5th April 1902. The defenders reclaimed, and on 15th October 1903 the First Division adhered.[1]

Thereupon the Commissioners, on being furnished with information as to the recipients of interest from the defenders, instituted an inquiry as to what income-tax still remained payable on such interest, and eventually it was reported to the Lord Ordinary that there only remained a sum of £12, 19s. still due, for which sum the pursuer asked for decree. The defenders, though not impugning the accuracy of these figures, maintained that they were not liable in payment.

On 15th May 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Stormonth-Darling) pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Lord Ordinary in Exchequer Causes having heard parties and considered the cause, in respect of the report by Mr Edward Harris, No. 15 of process, decerns against the defenders for payment to the pursuer of the sum of £12, 19s. sterling in full of the principal sum sued for, together with interest thereon as concluded for."*

The defenders reclaimed, and argued;—The duty of deducting income-tax on interest was a statutory duty imposed by sec. 24, subsec. (3), of the Act of 1888, and that statute imposed no penalty for failure to do so. It only declared that the "amount," i.e., the

---

[1] Lord Advocate v. Corporation of Edinburgh, 6 F. 1.

* "OPINION.—The only remaining point in this case arises on the rendering of an account by the defenders for the period mentioned in the interlocutor of 7th July 1903, which was affirmed by the First Division. On adjustment of that account the matter came before my colleague, who was acting temporarily as Lord Ordinary in Exchequer, and I find in the report of what took place that the effective motion that was made by the defenders was that they should be allowed a proof of something or other, I do not exactly know what; but that did not meet with the approval of Lord Kyllachy, and accordingly parties were asked by his Lordship to endeavour to settle the matter and arrange figures for themselves. An attempt has now been made to do so by the Inland Revenue authorities, and I have before me a statement founded on particulars given by the defenders, and adopting these particulars, but bringing out the actual balance of income-tax which is said to be due as the result. It is a very small matter—it amounts only to £12, 19s.—and for that Crown counsel move me to grant decree. The only answer is, not that the sum is incorrect, but that there is no liability on the part of the defenders to account for any tax not deducted.

"Now, plainly that is a matter that ought to have been stated as a defence in limine. The action is one for an account, it is true, but it is also a petitory action for a large sum of income-tax due by the defenders, and due by them because the Crown regards them as having incurred liability through their failure to deduct income-tax from the persons to whom they were paying interest on these receipt-notes. I do not intend to decide the point whether the statutes make a person so acting liable to pay the income-tax at all. If that point is stateable, it ought to have been stated long ago, because it would have rendered unnecessary all the elaborate inquiries which apparently have taken place and which have resulted in bringing out this balance of £12, 19s. Accordingly I give decree for £12, 19s., and there ends the case so far as the Outer-House is concerned."

No. 175.

July 15, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. Corporation of Edinburgh.

amount deducted, should be a debt to Her Majesty, and here there being no amount deducted there was no statutory debt. The pursuer's only claim, therefore, was one at common law, and that must be based on damage. Here no such damage was alleged, nor could it be, for the pursuer had not been prejudiced in any way in his right to recover this sum from those to whom the interest had actually been paid.

Counsel for the respondent were not called upon.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I consider this a very preposterous contention. It really comes to this, that the Corporation of Edinburgh by not having done what the statute clearly tells them to do, viz., deduct the income-tax payable in respect of interest, have escaped a debt which otherwise would have been due by them to the Crown. It turns upon a section of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, which imposes a duty to deduct income-tax and to keep an account, and it says that such amount, so deducted, shall be a debt to Her Majesty and recoverable as such. It seems to me that the whole matter must be taken together. The debt is the sum the retention of which is put as a duty along with the liability to render an account. But the idea that by not doing it they can get rid of a debt is a thing which seems to me, as I say, preposterous. I consider that to give any countenance to this attempt to escape a duty clearly imposed would be to throw confusion upon the administration of the Revenue law without the slightest reason for the Corporation or anyone else being allowed such a concession.

LORD ADAM.—I concur.

LORD M'LAREN.—I think this is a case to which the maxim applies, quod fieri debet infectum valet. The duty is laid upon the Corporation to collect income-tax by way of deduction from the interest payable on the borrowed money, to render an account of the amount of income-tax so deducted, and to pay it over to the Crown. That is a duty which consists of two parts, the collection, and the paying to the Crown. It is clear to my mind that the account must be a complete account. It is no defence to an action of accounting to say that the debtor had in fact neglected part of the duty cast upon him. In such a case the debtor must pay as on a complete account, but would probably have a claim against the creditor to whom he had paid the interest without making the deduction.

LORD KINNEAR.—I concur.

THE COURT adhered.

THE SOLICITOR OF INLAND REVENUE—THOMAS HUNTER, W.S.—Agents.

No. 176.

July 18, 1905.
Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

JOSEPH CLELLAND, Respondent.—Campbell, K.C.—Gunn.
SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appellants.—Younger, K.C.—Constable.

Master and Servant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. cap. 37), sec. 1, Schedule I., secs. 1 (b), 12, 13—Compensation—Amount—Nominal award of a penny per week—Competency.—In an application by an employer to have a weekly payment to an injured workman reviewed and ended, held that it is incompetent for the arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, if either party objects, to postpone the determination of the question of compensation by making an interim nominal award of one penny per week.

No. 176.

July 18, 1905. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

Freeland v. Macfarlane, Lang, & Co., March 20, 1900, 2 F. 832, and Ferrier v. Gourlay Brothers & Co., March 18, 1902, 4 F. 711, reconsidered.

Opinion, that while the Act requires an arbitrator in fixing the amount of a weekly payment to have regard to the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident, and to the average amount he is earning after the accident, the latter is not conclusive as to the workman's wage-earning capacity.

1st Division. Sheriff of Stirling, Dumbarton, and Clackmannan.

In an arbitration brought at the instance of the Singer Manufacturing Company to review and end the weekly payment made by them to Joseph Clelland, sawyer, Clydebank, a workman who had been injured in their employment, the Sheriff-substitute at Dumbarton (Blair) reduced the compensation payable by them to the nominal sum of one penny per week.

The Sheriff-substitute, at the request of the employers, stated a case on appeal to the Court of Session, in which he set forth that, on the evidence, he "found in fact that the said Joseph Clelland, the workman in this case, is a sawyer by trade and is forty-three years of age; that previous to 22d September 1904 he was employed in the Singer Manufacturing Company at a weekly wage of 28s.; that previous to that date he had already lost the top joint of the thumb of his right hand; that on 22d September 1904, when in Singers' employment, he lost by accident the first and middle fingers of the right hand; that the said fingers were taken off down to and including part of the knuckles at the base of the fingers; that the wound caused thereby is now healed and well; that on 15th March 1905 he recorded in this Court a minute of agreement; that under said agreement Singers have paid to him a weekly sum of 14s. down to 14th January 1905; that on 16th January 1905 Singers took him back into their employment at a weekly wage of 28s.; that he is still in their employment at that wage; that they are under no obligation to employ him or continue to employ him; that he is able to do the work at present allotted to him, which is of the same nature as he did before. The Sheriff-substitute also found that Singers had failed to prove that he could earn 28s. per week as a sawyer if he was compelled to find employment elsewhere, and, in respect that supervening incapacity might occur, reduced the compensation payable by Singers to him to the nominal sum of one penny per week until further orders of Court, and found Messrs Singers liable to the defender in expenses."

The questions of law for the opinion of the Court were:—"Whether in the circumstances the appellants are entitled in law to have their liability in respect of the respondent's injuries ended as craved in the petition? or was the Sheriff-substitute right in making the award of one penny per week?" *

---

* The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 and 61 Vict. c. 37), enacts, Schedule I., sec. 12,—"Any weekly payment may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or the workman, and on such review may be ended, diminished, or increased, subject to the maximum above

No. 176.

July 18, 1905. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

When the case was called in the Single Bills, counsel for the appellants moved for an order on the Sheriff-clerk to transmit the process in terms of sec. 9 (f) of the Act of Sederunt of 3d June 1898, on the ground that the Sheriff-substitute had appended a note to his interlocutor which it might be found necessary to refer to at the hearing.

The Court refused the motion. (Reported supra, p. 654.)

The appeal was subsequently heard on the merits.

Argued for the Singer Manufacturing Company, appellants;—The Act contained no provision for the suspension of the assessment of compensation either by a mere declaration of liability or by the device of making a nominal award of one penny per week. On the contrary, the Act provided definitely for the assessment of compensation, and it was the duty of the arbitrator, when an application was made to him to assess the amount payable, having regard to the condition of the workman at the time the application was made. The Act was intended to provide a summary remedy, and not to keep the assessment of compensation in suspense, and that was clearly evidenced by the provision in sec. 13 of the First Schedule, which provided that where a weekly payment had been continued for six months, the liability therefor might, on the application of the employer, be redeemed by payment of a lump sum.[1] The practice of making a nominal award was introduced into Scotland in the case of Freeland v. Macfarlane, Lang, & Company,[2] and followed in Ferrier v. Gourlay Brothers & Company,[3] but these cases admittedly followed on the decision in the English case of Irons v. Davis & Timmins, Limited,[4] which seemed to be the origin of the whole practice; but that case was a weak authority, for the award was made of consent. Here the appellants opposed such an award, and therefore the Court should reconsider these decisions. In the circumstances of this case the arbitrator should have ended the award of compensation. The criterion for assessing compensation provided in sec. 2 of the First Schedule must be strictly adhered to. The workman was earning the same wage as before the accident, and no circumstances relevant to modify the deduction from that fact were set forth in the stated case.[5]

Argued for respondent;—The competency of suspending an assessment of compensation was directly settled by authority, and could be effected either by awarding a nominal sum,[6] or by a mere declaraprovided, and the amount of payment shall in default of agreement be settled by arbitration under this Act." Sec. 13. "Where any weekly payment has been continued for not less than six months, the liability therefor may, on the application by or on behalf of the employer, be redeemed by the payment of a lump sum, to be settled in default of agreement by arbitration under this Act, and such lump sum may be ordered by the committee or arbitrator to be invested or otherwise applied as above mentioned."

---

[1] Castle Spinning Co. v. Atkinson, [1905] 1 K. B. 336.

[2] March 20, 1900, 2 F. 832.

[3] March 18, 1902, 4 F. 711.

[4] [1899] 2 Q. B. 330; Chandler v. Smith, [1899] 2 Q. B. 506.

[5] Pomphrey v. Southwark Press, [1901] 1 K. B. 86; Jamieson v. The Fife Coal Co., Limited, June 20, 1903, 5 F. 958; Geary v. Dixon, Limited, May 12, 1899, 4 F. 1143; Husband v. Campbell, July 15, 1903, 5 F. 1146.

[6] Freeland v. Macfarlane, Lang, & Co., 2 F. 832; Ferrier v. Gourlay Brothers & Co., 4 F. 711; Irons v. Davis & Timmins, Limited, [1899] 2 Q. B. 330.

No. 176. July 18, 1905. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

tion of liability.[1] Such a course was not repugnant to any provision of the Act, and was entirely in keeping with the spirit of it. The object of the Act was to provide, either by a continuing payment or by a commuted payment, for compensation for life to an injured workman for such incapacity as he might have suffered, and the Act contained provision for reviewing the award of compensation if the incapacity increased or diminished or proved intermittent.[2] If there was anything repugnant to this in the Schedule, that could not overrule the provisions and the purpose of the Act itself.[3] The arbitrator was right in keeping the question open by this nominal award, and was not bound to make an arbitrary award at once, still less in the circumstances of this case to end the compensation.

The case of Fraser v. Great North of Scotland Railway Company,[4] was also referred to.

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is a stated case in an appeal from the Sheriff Court of Stirlingshire, &c., at Dumbarton, and the question proposed in law for your Lordships' determination is whether the learned Sheriff-substitute was right in making an award of a penny per week.

The circumstances of the case were these: That the appellant, who was a sawyer by trade, was in the employment of the Singer Manufacturing Company at the weekly wage of 28s. While in that employment, on 22d September 1904, he lost by an accident the first and middle fingers of the right hand. The Singer Company, while he was laid up with this serious accident, paid under agreement a weekly sum of 14s., and this payment went on till 14th January 1905. By that date the wound was completely healed, by which I mean that it was no longer in the state of an open sore, and that his hand was restored to the complete use that any hand can have which is minus two fingers.

But the point that I ask your Lordships' attention to is that the injury was of a class which by this time had, so to speak, fully developed. There is no reason to suppose that his hand will ever be any worse, while on the other hand it is impossible to suppose that his hand will ever be any better. On 16th January the Singer Company took back this man into their employment at his old wage of 28s., and the Sheriff-substitute tells us that as a matter of fact he is able to do the work at present allotted to him, which is of the same nature as he did before. In these circumstances the Singer Company made this application to the Sheriff-substitute in order to have the payments ended. The Sheriff-substitute having taken evidence, in which he elicited the facts as I have detailed them to your Lordships, found that Singers had failed to prove that the appellant could earn 28s. per week as a sawyer if he were compelled to find employment elsewhere, and, in respect that supervening incapacity might occur, reduced the compensation payable by Singers to him to the nominal sum of a penny per week until further orders of Court; and that is the finding that is really submitted to your Lordships for review.

---

[1] Chandler v. Smith, [1899] 2 Q. B. 506.
[2] Powell v. Main Colliery Co., [1900] App. Cas. 366.
[3] Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons, [1901] App. Cas. 79.
[4] June 11, 1901, 3 F. 908.

No. 176.
July 18, 1905.
Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

Now, as I shall presently have occasion to say, I do not in any degree wonder that the Sheriff-substitute should have made this finding, looking to the state of the authorities which I shall examine; but at the same time I must call attention at once to the fact that I rather think that the learned Sheriff-substitute has misunderstood the meaning of "supervening incapacity." When he uses the words "in respect that supervening incapacity might occur," he means not any change of circumstances in the man but a change of circumstances in respect of the employment he might secure. In other words, he really changes the use of the words "supervening incapacity" by failing to see that the case is not in pari casu with the other cases where that phrase has been used, where "supervening incapacity" meant incapacity arising from a different state of the man's health, the ordinary instance being the case of a possible development of disease in one eye quite well at the time, but where, the other eye being injured, it is quite possible to say that disease might supervene truly attributable to the accident which had occurred. Here, as I have pointed out to your Lordships, there can be no further development of this injury. We know now as well as we shall ever know how much the man has been injured.

But while I say so I do not wonder that the Sheriff-substitute has been led into the interlocutor he has pronounced by the state of the authorities, because undoubtedly there have been two cases in your Lordships' Court where this finding of a penny per week and continuing the case until further orders was sanctioned. The first is the case of Freeland v. Macfarlane, Lang, & Company.[1] Now, in that case undoubtedly the Lord President says that it would be right to adopt the course taken in Irons v. Davis & Timmins, Limited,[2] of making a nominal award of a penny per week, and then he goes on to point out what he thinks was also the course followed in the case of Chandler v. Smith,[3] and the interlocutor in that case declared "that the fact that the weekly wage which the appellant is at present earning is not less than the weekly wage which he earned before the accident would not necessarily or per se preclude any claim under the Act." And that view was followed in the case of Ferrier v. Gourlay Brothers & Company,[4] in which the other Division of the Court (but with the dissent of Lord Young) remitted the case to the Sheriff to reduce the compensation to a penny per week until further orders of Court.

But in this case the Singer Company, who are the appellants, object to that course, and your Lordships I think will find it necessary to reconsider whether this plan of granting a penny per week and continuing the case is a method that is really sanctioned by the statute.

I am bound to say that when I look into the supposed origin of the device—for it is nothing else—the basis on which it rests is very slight. In the case of Irons v. Davis[2] it was really a course that rested upon the agreement of the parties, and the Court, as very often is the case, did not make any objection to sanctioning what both parties were agreed should be done. And in the case of Chandler v. Smith,[3] so far from following the

[1] 2 F. 832.
[2] [1899] 2 Q. B. 330.
[3] [1899] 2 Q. B. 506.
[4] 4 F. 711.

No. 176.
July 18, 1905.
Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

penny a-week procedure, Lord Justice Williams particularly pronounces against that, because he says that it would be much better to postpone the fixing of the amount of compensation until the facts are ascertained, and he concludes—"I prefer this course to that of awarding a weekly payment of a penny and then applying the provisions of clause 12 of Schedule 1." Accordingly, so far as the Lord President based his judgment in that first case of Freeland[1] on the English practice, I do not think it was a very firm substructure.

I therefore proceed to the Act itself. Now, compensation under the Act is due for personal injury by accident arising in the course of the employment. That is in section 1. When we go to the schedule which determines the scale and conditions of compensation, we find that under section 1 (b) the compensation under the Act shall be, where total or partial incapacity for working results from the injury, a weekly payment during the incapacity; and then in the same schedule, section 12, we find that "any weekly payments may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or the workman"; and in section 13 "where any weekly payment has been continued for not less than six months the liability" may be redeemed by a lump sum.

All that seems to me to point excessively clearly to the idea that this is a proceeding which has to take place at once and to be done with, and not to be prolonged after the period of six months. The six months' period, I think, is taken as a rough estimate of the time during which, if I may so use the expression, the result of the injury will have settled down, and it will become apparent whether it has been really only temporary or is permanent, and as soon as it has settled down then any liability may be got rid of by one payment.

All that seems straight in the teeth of any idea of making a sort of fictitious award—for it is nothing else—in order to prolong the period of suspense long beyond the period which is in the view of the statute. Indeed, if the matter were absurdly dealt with, it is quite clear that all cases might be hung up, because there is no injury of any serious character as to which medical men would not say that there was some chance at least of a supervening incapacity developing late in life. I am quite aware that presumably the Court would not use the device in that way, but that argument seems to go also against the idea of this procedure.

Accordingly, I come to be of opinion that this settling of the compensation at the sum of a penny, contra renitentem, is not a proceeding that is sanctioned under the Act. It seems to me that an injured workman is entitled to come to the Court and say,—"Assess me now my compensation and find out what I am the worse for the accident." The Act gives us some light on this inquiry, because article 2 of the same Schedule says,—"In fixing the amount of the weekly payment regard shall be had to the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident." The amount is not to be absolutely conclusive,

[1] 2 F. 832.

No. 176.

July 18, 1905.
Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

because it is only "regard is to be had." But still that, no doubt, always will be the leading consideration.

At the same time, therefore, a workman who has been injured in a permanent way has right to say,—"I shall now have my compensation assessed, and the figure at which I am entitled to have it assessed is the difference of the wage-earning capacity which I had before the accident and which I have now." The Court must arrive at that in the best way it can, always having in view the wages paid, but not taking the weekly wages payable at the present moment as synonymous with the wage-earning capacity, if it thinks that the present wages are due to the kindly consideration of an old employer.

I ought also to say that I think the principles of the valuation of compensation were exceedingly accurately stated by this Division of the Court in the case of Freeland,[1] and I entirely adhere to all that was there said.

The application of these views to the case in hand seems to me to be this, that we should tell the Sheriff-substitute that he had no right,—although, as I have already explained, it is not at all to be wondered at that he should have acted as he has done,—to fix the compensation at a penny per week, and that the case must go back to him in order that, in view of the principles I have laid down, he should consider how much this man has been injured in his wage-earning capacity by the loss of these two fingers. I do not think he has considered the case from that point of view, and therefore I do not think that we ought to try to spell out a result from the findings which he has given. The Sheriff will keep in view that the man can do certain work, and will not necessarily be bound down to the amount at present received. I am therefore of opinion that the question ought to be answered in the view that I have stated, and the case sent back to the Sheriff.

LORD ADAM.—On 22d September 1904 the respondent Clelland, when in the appellants' employment as a sawyer, met with an accident by which he lost the first and middle fingers of his right hand.

Previous to the accident Clelland had been earning a weekly wage of 28s., and after the accident the appellants, under an agreement, paid him a weekly sum of 14s. down to 14th January 1905. On the 16th January 1905 the appellants took him back into their employment at the same wage as he was earning before the accident. We are told that the wound caused by the accident is now healed and well, and that he is able to do the work at present allotted to him, which is of the same nature as he did before; that he is still in their employment at that wage, but that the appellants are under no obligation to employ him. The Sheriff further found that the appellants had failed to prove that Clelland could earn 28s. per week as a sawyer if he was compelled to find employment elsewhere.

The present proceedings originated in an application to the Sheriff under section 12 of the First Schedule of the Act, and on 29th March 1905 the

[1] 2 F. 832.

No. 176.

July 18, 1905.
Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

Sheriff, in respect that supervening incapacity might occur, reduced the compensation payable by the appellants to him to the nominal sum of one penny per week until further orders of Court.

The question argued to us was whether such an award was competent under the Act.

Looking to the previous procedure which has taken place in such cases—for example in Irons v. Davis,[1] and Freeland v. Macfarlane[2]—I am not surprised that the Sheriff should have decided the case as he did—in fact I do not see how he could have done otherwise. But certainly this is the first time the competency of the course has been challenged before us, or as would rather appear in any previous case.

Now section 12 says that any weekly payment may be reviewed at the request of either party, and on such review may be ended, diminished. or increased, or I suppose the application may be refused. I think that means that the weekly payment is to be reviewed and dealt with according to the state of facts existing at the date of the application. In this case, however, the weekly payment has neither been ended, diminished, nor increased as the Act directs, but the consideration of the case has been suspended for an indefinite time in respect that some supervening incapacity might occur. It appears to me that the Act does not warrant the weekly payment being suspended for a time and then resumed. The 13th section of the First Schedule, for example, gives to the employer, where weekly payments have been continued for not less than six months, a right to have his liability therefor redeemed by payment of a lump sum. This clause appears to me clearly to indicate that it was not intended that an employer's liability under the Act should continue for an indefinite time, but that he should be able to get rid of it by payment of a lump sum at the end of six months. But it appears to me that the device of suspending the weekly payments and substituting therefor the payment of a nominal sum of a penny would render that clause practically inoperative. It was admitted on both sides that the payment of the nominal sum of a penny could not be treated as a weekly payment under the Act. If that be so, then in this case, for example, in which the weekly payments ceased at the end of four months, if the appellants were to apply to have their liability under the Act redeemed by payment of a lump sum they would be met by the plea that the weekly payments had not been continued for the necessary period of six months. I see no answer to that plea, with the result that the appellants' liability under the Act would be continued indefinitely. I think that the Act assumes that the weekly payments are to be continuous, and if at the end of six months an application is made by an employer to an arbiter for redemption of his liability by payment of a lump sum, the arbiter must apply his mind to the facts as then existing, and determine the amount of that sum to the best of his ability. So I think that when an application is made to an arbiter under the 12th section to review a weekly payment, he must apply his mind to the facts as they exist at the time, and either diminish, increase, or end the payment, or by refusing the application continue it, but that he has no power under the Act to suspend it.

---

[1] L. R. [1899] 2 Q. B. 330.

[2] 2 F. 832.

No. 176.

July 18, 1905.
Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

I am accordingly of opinion that the second alternative question should be answered in the negative.

The Sheriff seems to have thought that the only other alternative to following the course he did was to end the weekly payment, and no doubt he came to that conclusion because the wound caused by the accident was healed and well, and Clelland had been taken back into the appellants' employment, and was earning the same wages as before the accident. That, no doubt, might be quite sufficient evidence to have entitled the Sheriff to come to the conclusion, if he had done so, that Clelland's incapacity had ceased. It appears to me, however, that the true question under the Act is whether Clelland is able to earn in his maimed state as much in the open labour market as he was before the accident. It does not appear to me that the fact that Clelland had been taken back by his employers and is earning as much as formerly necessarily furnishes a conclusive answer on that point. I do not think the Sheriff has applied his mind to that view of the case, and I think the case should be remitted to him for his reconsideration.

LORD M'LAREN.—At the conclusion of the argument your Lordships were all of opinion that the question of a nominal award under the Workmen's Compensation Act ought to be reconsidered, and I agree with your Lordships in the result of that reconsideration. I may say for myself that, although in deference to the supposed authority of some English cases, and having regard to possible convenience, I assented to the previous decision of this Division for making a nominal award, I was never a convinced adherent of that method of applying the Act, and indeed never could find out for myself that there was any warrant for such a proceeding. It is, I may say, a perfectly futile proceeding for the purpose specified, because at the expiration of six months from the date of the accident the employer has an absolute right to capitalise his liability, or to insist upon a lump sum being substituted for a weekly payment. How the capital value of a penny a week is to do any good to the injured workman I am unable to see. But I think that it is not really necessary to make a nominal award. The cases in which that has been done have resulted, as I venture to think, from inattention to the provisions of the statute in this respect, that because a workman was receiving from his employer a sum equal to the wages that he earned before the accident it was assumed that this was the man's wage-earning capacity, and therefore that there was no ground for making a substantial award of compensation. Now, that is not the intention of the statute at all. What the arbiter has to consider is not what the man is receiving, whether under the name of wages or charity, from his employer, but what could the man earn in the open market after the accident had happened as distinguished from what he actually earned in the open market before the accident. If his wage-earning capacity—the wage that he could earn in the open market—is less than what he earned before, it is an absolutely irrelevant consideration to take into account that the master is paying full wages. The workman is then entitled to have an award of compensation. What the master is to do is for him to consider. He may or may not continue the payment which he had hitherto been making ex gratia. When the statute is applied according to my reading of it, by taking into account only the wage-earning capacity of the man at the time when the application to the Sheriff is made, whether for an original award or for variation of an award, all difficulty disappears. It is quite true that at the end of six months the result may be that the employer's liability comes to an end, but I have no conception that the Legislature intended that this liability should hang like a millstone round the employer's neck during the whole period of his life. Six months was the time fixed, because it was supposed that by that time the arbiter would be able to make a fair estimate of the probable loss to the workman and of the principle upon which compensation should be made. If unfortunately a man whose eye was injured and had apparently healed should suffer a relapse (it might be glaucoma, which could be proved to arise from the accident,) that cannot be helped. In so far as this is not foreseen and allowed for at the expiry of six months, that is just the workman's misfortune, for it was never intended that he should be put in the same position as before the accident, but only that he should receive compensation under the conditions and limitations prescribed by Act of Parliament.

No. 176.

July 18, 1905. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co.

LORD KINNEAR concurred.

THE COURT answered the second alternative of the question of law in the negative, and remitted to the Sheriff-substitute to proceed in accordance with their finding.

MACKAY & YOUNG, W.S.—J. W. & J. MACKENZIE, W.S.—Agents.

No. 177.

July 18, 1905. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

THE LORD ADVOCATE, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Johnston, K.C.—Young.
GEORGE M'LAREN, Defender (Respondent).—Campbell, K.C.—W. Thomson.

Revenue—Income-Tax—Exemption and Abatement—Untruly declaring income—Penalties—Amount—Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), sec. 166.—The Income-Tax Act, 1842, sec. 166, enacts, that "if any person shall," in making a claim of exemption, "untruly declare any income or amount of income," he "shall forfeit the sum of £20, and treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income, and as if such claim had not been allowed."

Held (1) that a person found guilty under this section of untruly declaring his income was liable in the forfeiture, although no exemption or abatement had in fact been allowed, and (2) that the amount upon which the treble duty was to be calculated was his whole income, including income upon which duty had been already deducted or paid.

Observed, per Lord Kinnear, that, to involve liability for the penalties under the section, the declaration must be not merely inaccurate but false and untruthful.

Revenue—Court of Exchequer—Jurisdiction—Penalties—Modification—Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), sec. 166—Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707 (6 Anne, cap. 53), sec. 23 (or cap. 26, sec. 15)—Public Revenue (Scotland) Act, 1833 (3 and 4 Will. IV. cap. 13), secs. 1, 4, and 8—Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. cap. 56), sec. 1.—Held on a construction of the above statutes that the Court of Session as the Court of Exchequer in Scotland has no jurisdiction to modify the penalties exigible under sec. 166 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842.

No. 177.

July 18, 1905.

Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

1ST DIVISION. Exchequer Cause. LdStormonth-Darling.

THE LORD ADVOCATE, on behalf of His Majesty, brought an information against George M'Laren, plumber, Edinburgh, claiming penalties in respect of two income-tax returns made by him.*

There were two counts in the information. The first count set forth that the defender "being liable to income-tax under the Acts 2 Edward VII. cap. 7, section 10, and 16 and 17 Victoria, cap. 34, did, by notice and declaration, dated 30th June 1902, and delivered or caused to be delivered by him to John Hamilton Fordie and William Bryce

* The Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), enacts, sec. 166, with regard to claims to exemption:—"If any person shall be guilty of any fraud or contrivance in making any such claim or in obtaining any such exemption or any such certificate as aforesaid, or shall fraudulently conceal or untruly declare any income or amount of income, . . . or if any such person shall fraudulently make a second claim for the same cause, every such person so offending in any of the cases aforesaid shall forfeit the sum of £20, and treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income, and as if such claim had not been allowed; . . ."

The Income-Tax Act, 1853 (16 and 17 Vict. cap. 34), enacts, sec. 28, that the provisions, rules, and regulations contained in the Income-Tax Act, 1842, in relation to exemption, shall apply to claims for relief.

The Finance Act, 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. cap. 30), sec. 34, grants exemption from income-tax where the income does not exceed £160; and the Finance Act, 1898 (61 and 62 Vict. cap. 10), sec. 8, grants relief from income-tax equal, if the total income does not exceed £500, to the amount of the income-tax upon £150.

The Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707 (6 Anne, c. 26, otherwise c. 53), which established a Court of Exchequer in Scotland after the English model to take the place of the former Court of Exchequer in Scotland, enacts, sec. 15 (or 23):—"Provided nevertheless that in case any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, his, her, or their heirs, successors, executors, or administrators, shall allege, plead, declare, or shew in the said Court of Exchequer in Scotland good perfect sufficient cause and matter in law, reason, or good conscience in bar or discharge of any fines, issues, amerciaments, forfeited recognisances, or any other forfeitures, debts, or duties due or payable to the Crown, or why such person or persons ought not to be charged or chargeable to or with the same, and the same cause and matter so alleged, pleaded, declared, or shewed sufficiently proved in the said Court of Exchequer in Scotland, that then the said Court shall have full power and authority to accept, adjudge, and allow the same, and wholly and clearly to acquit and discharge all and every the said persons which shall be impleaded or sued for the same, or to make and take any fitting and reasonable composition for the same as in the judgments and discretions of the Barons of the said Court of Exchequer upon hearing of the attorney or advocate-general or other learned counsel of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall be found and thought just and reasonable, and to proceed and act therein and give discharges thereupon in such sort and manner as hath been and is used and practised in the like cases in and by the Court of Exchequer in England, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

The Public Revenue (Scotland) Act, 1833 (3 and 4 Will. IV. cap. 13), transferred the administrative functions of the Barons of Exchequer in Scotland to the Treasury and the Commissioners of Taxes, reserving their judicial powers.

The Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. cap. 56), sec. 1, transferred "the whole power, authority, and jurisdiction" then "belonging to the Court of Exchequer in Scotland" to the Court of Session, and enacted that the Court of Session should be also the Court of Exchequer in Scotland.

No. 177.
July 18, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

Beveridge, joint assessors, Edinburgh, untruly declare that the whole of his income from every source whatsoever for the year ending 5th April 1903 amounted to the sum of £150, and this he did in making a claim for exemption or the relief to which he was entitled in respect of his income as so declared, contrary to the statutes in that case made and provided, and in particular to the provisions of sections 164 and 166 of the Act 5 and 6 Victoria, cap. 35, and section 28 of the Act 16 and 17 Victoria, cap. 34, whereby, and by force of the statutes in that case made and provided, the said George M'Laren so offending as aforesaid has forfeited the sum of £20, and also a sum of £187, 3s. 3d., or such other sum as may be found to be treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income."

The second count was in similar terms, the differences being (1) that it related to the return made by the defender for the year ending 5th April 1904, (2) that the sum at which the defender was alleged to have untruly declared his whole income was £230, and (3) that the sum claimed as treble duty was £137, 12s. 3d.

The sum claimed as treble duty in the first count was three times the duty payable on an income of £1000, 17s. 9d., at 1s. 3d. in the pound, being the rate in force for the year 1902-3. The sum claimed as treble duty in the second count was three times the duty payable on the same income at 11d. per pound, being the rate in force for the year 1903-4. The sum of £1000, 17s. 9d. was arrived at as follows:—It was admitted that the incomes of the defender and his wife, derived from sources other than his business (viz., rents and interests), amounted to £650. To this sum was added £350, being the amount at which the profits of the defender's business were assessed in each of the years in question. In this assessment of his profits the defender had acquiesced. Income-tax on the £650 was deducted at the source. The defender had in each year paid income-tax on £200, and in each year he had been allowed an abatement on £150.

The defender pleaded not guilty.

Proof was allowed, and led. The facts of the case, and the nature of the defender's defence, sufficiently appear from the opinion of the Lord Ordinary (Stormonth-Darling).

On 21st December 1904 the Lord Ordinary pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds for the pursuer on both counts of the information, No. 2 of process, to the extent that the defender has forfeited the sum of £20 sterling under each count, but finds that the defender has not forfeited any other sum under said counts: Adjudges the defender to pay to the pursuer the said two sums of £20 sterling, and decerns against the defender accordingly." *

---

* "OPINION.—This is an information at the instance of the Lord Advocate on behalf of the Crown, claiming penalties against the defender, a plumber in Edinburgh, in respect of two income-tax returns which he made for the years ending 5th April 1903 and 1904 respectively. The allegation is that, by the first of these returns, in making a claim of exemption for the financial year 1902-1903, the defender 'untruly declared' that the whole of his income from every source was £150. That is the first count of the information. The second count is that, in making a claim of abatement for the year 1903-1904, the defender untruly declared that the whole of his income from every source amounted to £230. The information is founded on sec. 166 of the Income-Tax Act of 1842, which relates to claims for exemption, and is made applicable to claims for abatement by sec. 28 of the Act of 1853.

"It is not disputed by the defender that in each of these years his total

No. 177.
July 18, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

The pursuer reclaimed, and argued;—(1) The sum upon which the treble duty was to be calculated was the whole income, not merely the part of the income upon which tax had not been paid or deducted at the source.[1] The terms of sec. 178 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842, did not assist the pursuer. Where the treble duty was to be calculated on the difference only, as under sec. 178, the statute expressly said so. (2) The Court had no jurisdiction to modify the penalties. A Court had in general no discretionary power to remit or modify statutory penalties imposed for a statutory offence if it was proved that the offence had been committed.[2] No such power was conferred upon the Court of Exchequer by the Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707.[3] "Penalties" were not mentioned in sec. 23 of that Act. "Fines" and penalties were to be distinguished. A "fine" was uncertain in amount, and was an alternative to imprisonment. The income from all sources was much larger than what he returned, and, indeed, that it was larger that any figure up to which abatement is allowed. Nor can it be disputed that he signed the declaration on the fourth page of the familiar return on yellow paper, which is headed 'Notice and Declaration of Claim of Exemption or Abatement,' or that thereby, having filled in £150 in the one year and £230 in the other as the total amount of his income from all sources, he claimed the relief to which he was entitled in respect of such income. That was the only part of the yellow paper which he did fill in, and, in particular, he made no return of the profits of his trade. But he says that all this was a blunder; that he intended to return £150 in the one case and £230 in the other as the profits of his trade; that he thought he was doing so; and that he had no intention to claim either exemption or abatement.

---

"When the return came into the hands of the Surveyor of Taxes, that officer happened to know that the defender had heritable property worth £130 a year. He also knew that for a number of years the defender had been assessed on £350 as the profits of his business, without appeal. Being thus satisfied that neither £150 nor £230 could possibly be the whole of the defender's income from every source, he thought it probable that the defender had intended the return to represent the profits of his business; but, even on that assumption, he discarded the return altogether, and treated the defender as having an income of £480, which entitled him to an abatement of £150. Accordingly, he sent the defender assessment notices in each year, shewing the amount of assessment as £350, and the deduction as £150, and bringing out the net amount chargeable as £200. In these assessment notices the defender acquiesced, and paid duty accordingly. It now appears from the defender's admissions, to which I have referred, that he was not entitled to any abatement for either year, and that he ought to have paid tax on the full amount of his business profits, whatever these were.

"That the defender's conduct in making the returns as he did was careless in the extreme he admits; indeed, that is the gist of his defence. For his defence is that he failed to fill in his business profits at the right place, and that he returned what he intended to represent business profits at the wrong place and under a wrong description, signing at the same time a claim for relief, which he never meant to make. If he had no intention of claiming abatement, it is rather remarkable that he should have accepted and

---

[1] Income-Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35), sec. 166, cf. secs. 164 and 165.

[2] Pendreigh's Trustee v. M'Laren & Co., May 9, 1871, 9 Macph. (H. L.) 49.

[3] 6 Anne, cap. 53, sec. 15 (otherwise cap. 26, sec. 23); Lord M'Laren's Procedure Acts, p. 17.

No. 177.

July 18, 1905. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

amount to be imposed was a matter for judicial discretion. A "penalty" was a pecuniary mulct, certain in amount, and fixed by statute.[1] Upon inquiry it had been ascertained that no such power of modification was "used and practised" in "the Court of Exchequer in England."[2] Power to modify was formerly granted by writ of Privy Seal.[3] This power lay now with the Commissioners of Inland Revenue and the Treasury.[4] The terms in which the power was conferred upon them shewed by implication that there was no such power in the Court. Jurisdiction in regard to taxes and penalties was not conferred upon the Court of Exchequer by the Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707,[2] but by sec. 54 of the Act 43 Geo. III. cap. 150, being the enactment referred to in sec. 185 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842. Under sec. 54 there was no discretionary power conferred upon the Court to modify penalties in such cases. Even assuming that power to modify such penalties as those here in question was conferred on the Court of Exchequer by the Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707, sec. 23, such power was a ministerial and not a paid on a return which set out that he was receiving an abatement of £150. But, according to the view which I take of the statute, I think I am relieved from the duty of considering whether the defender's conduct was morally culpable or not. Section 166 no doubt contains the word 'fraudulently' as qualifying some of the acts which it strikes at. Thus, concealment of any income in making a claim for exemption must be fraudulent if it is to incur a penalty. But when the statute speaks of 'declaring' the amount of any income, it merely uses the adverb 'untruly.' The difference in language is, I think, intelligible. At all events, I find it there; and therefore if a positive statement as to the amount of a man's income is untrue in the sense of being contrary to fact (of course, in some material respect), although it may not be fraudulent, but only inexcusably careless, I think the statute intends to make it, and does make it, an offence to which a penalty is attached. I quite admit that each penal section of a statute must be construed according to its own terms; but when I turn to sec. 178, which deals with the case of a false return of income as distinguished from a false claim for abatement, I find that the section strikes at 'wilful neglect' as well as at falsehood and fraud; and I see in that an instructive guide to the general policy of the statute.

---

"Next comes the question of the amount of the penalty. £20 for each count is clearly due. But when the advisers of the Crown ask in addition for the sum of £187, 3s. 3d. under the first count, and £137, 12s. 5d. under the second, it seems to me that they have not well considered the meaning of the section, for these sums are brought out by taking the defender's whole income, irrespective of whether it has already paid duty or not, and multiplying the duty by three. The words are 'treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income, and as if such claim had not been allowed.' That can never mean that you are to take any part of the offender's income which has paid duty already and charge the duty over again, because the duty in that case would not be 'chargeable.' Clearly the meaning is that you are only to take the man's whole income on which duty is still chargeable, and to charge treble duty upon it, notwithstanding that it would have been otherwise (owing to its amount) entitled to exemption or abate-

---

[1] Price on Law of Exchequer, (1830), p. 358.

[2] 6 Anne, cap. 53, sec. 23.

[3] Clerk and Scrope, Court of Exchequer, p. 251; Manning's Practice of Court of Exchequer, Revenue Branch, (1827), p. 319.

[4] Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. cap. 21), sec. 35.

No. 177.

July 18, 1905.

Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

judicial power. It was therefore, in any view, taken away from the Court of Exchequer by the Public Revenue (Scotland) Act, 1833, and did not pass to the Court of Session under the Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1856. Under sec. 6 of that Act the Court was bound to give decree according to law if the defender was found guilty. The decision of the Lord Ordinary in Lord Advocate v. Stewart[1] was erroneous.

Argued for the defender and respondent;—(1) The sum upon which the treble duty was to be calculated under sec. 166 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842, was the sum upon which the defender ought to have paid duty, but had not paid it. "Chargeable" could not refer to what had already paid duty. The provisions of sec. 178 of the Act shewed that this must be the meaning of sec. 166, because under sec. 178, which dealt with a more heinous offence than sec. 166, the treble duty was only to be charged on the difference between the sum on which the person had been charged and the sum on which he ought to have been charged. This was a penal enactment, and the ment. Again, let me refer to sec. 178 as containing a fuller exposition of what is briefly expressed in sec. 166 as 'treble the duty chargeable.' *

---

"In this case the defender's income from every source is made up for the most part of items from which tax has been deducted or paid, and the only part of his income on which duty is still chargeable is business profits. The onus of proving the amount of these business profits is on the Crown if they are to demand that part of the penalty which consists of treble the duty chargeable. They have led no proof on that point, except by shewing that the defender for several years acquiesced in an assessment of £350 as representing his trade profits. He has already paid tax on £200 of that sum, so that treble the duty on a balance of £150 would be a mere bagatelle compared with the large sums concluded for in the information. But, in my view, it is a sufficient answer to this part of the Crown's demand that the defender's claim for exemption or abatement was not 'allowed.' An abatement, no doubt, was allowed, but at the hand of the revenue officers, and not in terms of the defender's claim. Even if I thought otherwise on the construction of the statute, I should be of opinion that £20 under each of the two counts was a sufficient penalty for the defender's offence; and I have always held it quite within the competence of the Court of Exchequer to modify a penalty where it thought proper to do so in the interests of justice. I considered and discussed that question in Stewart's case, 30th March 1899, 6 S. L. T., p. 405, and I respectfully refer to my opinion as there reported.

"I shall therefore find that the defender did, by notice and declaration dated 30th June 1902, untruly declare that the whole of his income from every source whatsoever for the year ending 5th April 1903 amounted to the sum of £150, and that the defender did, by notice and declaration dated 3d July 1903, untruly declare that the whole of his income from every source whatsoever for the year ending 5th April 1904 amounted to the sum of £230, and that he has thereby forfeited the sum of £20 for each of the said offences, but that he has not forfeited any other sum for either of the said offences; and I shall find him liable in the expenses of process."

[1] March 30, 1899, 6 S. L. T. 405 (O.-H.).

---

* 5 and 6 Vict. c. 35, sec. 178, enacts that every person liable to a penalty under that section shall "be charged and assessed treble the amount of the charge which ought to have been made on such person if no such charge shall have been made; and if any such charge shall have been made which shall be less than the charge which ought to have been made on such person, then such person shall be assessed and charged over and above such former charge treble the amount of the difference."

No. 177.

July 18, 1905. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

less severe interpretation, if possible, must be adopted. (2) The Court had power to modify the penalties. Such power was conferred by sec. 23 of the Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707.[1] The power so conferred was a judicial power which passed to the Court of Session under sec. 1 of the Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1856.[2] If the absence of the word "penalties" was of any importance, it was to be noted that the word used in sec. 166 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842,[3] was "forfeit," and "forfeitures" were specially mentioned in sec. 23 of the Act of 1707.[1] In Revenue prosecutions brought in the inferior Courts these Courts had power to modify penalties.[4] It would therefore be very strange if the Supreme Court had no such power. (3) It was also maintained that the defender should have been found not guilty.

At advising,—

LORD ADAM.—The Lord Ordinary is of opinion that "the defender did, by notice and declaration, dated 30th June 1902, untruly declare that the whole of his income from every source whatsoever for the year ending 5th April 1903 amounted to the sum of £150, and that the defender did, by notice and declaration, dated 3d July 1903, untruly declare that the whole of his income from every source whatsoever for the year ending 5th April 1904 amounted to the sum of £230, and that he has thereby forfeited the sum of £20 for each of the said offences; but that he has not forfeited any other sum for either of the said offences."

I entirely agree with the Lord Ordinary in so far as he is of opinion that the defender has forfeited the sum of £20 for each of the said offences, and on the grounds on which he has arrived at that conclusion, and desire to add nothing to what he has said; but I differ from him in so far as he is of opinion that the defender has not forfeited any other sum for either of said offences.

The case depends on the construction principally of the 166th section of the Income-Tax Act of 1842.

That section, which relates to the making of claims of exemption, enacts that if any person shall be guilty of any fraud or contrivance in making such claim, or, inter alia, shall fraudulently conceal or untruly declare any income or amount of income, every such person so offending shall forfeit the sum of £20, and treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income, and as if such claim had not been allowed.

It will be observed, accordingly, that the Lord Ordinary, while finding the defender guilty of the offences charged, and forfeiting the sum of £20 for each offence, has stopped short there, and has not forfeited treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income—as the Act directs.

The Lord Ordinary, before stating the grounds on which he exempts the defender from this part of the penalty, proceeds to consider the amount of [1] 6 Anne, cap. 53; Lord M'Laren's Procedure Acts, Index, sub voce Jurisdiction, p. 627; Lord Advocate v. Stewart, 6 S. L. T. 405 (O.-H.).

[2] 19 and 20 Vict. cap. 56.

[3] 5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35.

[4] Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1881 (44 and 45 Vict. cap. 33), secs. 6 (a) and 11.

No. 177.
July 18, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

the penalty contemplated by the Act, which depends on the construction of the words "chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income." His Lordship thinks that that can never mean that you are to take any part of the offender's income which has paid duty already, and charge the duty over again, because the duty in that case would not be chargeable; and he construes the clause as if it had read treble the duty "still" chargeable—that is, still chargeable at the date I suppose of the judgment. I do not agree with that construction of the clause. I think the words "treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of the defender's income," mean treble the duty chargeable on the defender's whole income for the year of the assessment in question.

But the Lord Ordinary further thinks that no treble duty at all is exigible by the Crown, because the defender's claim for abatement or exemption was not allowed,—that is to say, that the penalties are not exigible unless the offending person's fraud or offence shall have been successful. But if this be so, I do not see why it should not as much apply to the £20 penalties, which have been forfeited, as to the treble duty. The two penalties seem to be in exactly the same position. But it is clear that the offence is committed and the penalties incurred when the untrue declaration of income is made, irrespective of its result. The Act says that if any person shall be guilty of any fraud or contrivance in making any such claim, or in obtaining any such exemption (that is to say, whether the claim shall be successful or not), or shall fraudulently conceal or untruly declare any income, the penalties shall be incurred.

But, further, the Lord Ordinary holds that it is within the competence of the Court of Exchequer to modify a penalty, when it is thought proper to do so in the interests of justice, and he has done so in this case by remitting the treble duty penalty altogether—if it should be legally exigible—and he refers to the case of Stewart[1] for his opinion on that question. I confess that it appears to me that when a statute says that an offender shall forfeit a particular sum (as in this case treble the duty chargeable) the Court must obey the direction, and pronounce an order accordingly. It may be, nevertheless, that the Court of Exchequer has power to modify such a penalty, but if so I think it must be made very clear that the Court has the power.

This claim, as I understand, is founded on the 23d section of the 6th of Queen Anne, cap. 53, which established the Court of Exchequer in Scotland. That section enacts that if any person shall plead or shew in the Court of Exchequer in Scotland good and sufficient cause and matter in law, reason or good conscience, in bar or discharge of any fines, issues, amercements, forfeited recognisances, or any other forfeitures, debts, or duties due or payable to the Crown, or why such person ought not to be charged or chargeable to or with the same, that the said Court shall have power to allow the same, and to acquit or discharge all persons sued for the same, or to make any reasonable composition for the same, as in the judgment and discretion of the Barons shall be found and thought just and reasonable, and to proceed and act therein as hath been and is used and

[1] 6 S. L. T., p. 405.

No. 177.
July 18, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

practised in the like cases in and by the Court of Exchequer in England. It is on this power of "making reasonable composition" that the respondent founds as conferring on the Court the power of modifying the penalty in question. It appears to me, however, that this does not refer to penalties such as this at all. The Court may remit or modify a penalty, but it does not make reasonable compositions with the offenders in such cases. No evidence was laid before us that the Court of Exchequer in England is, or had been, in use to remit or modify a penalty as has been done in this case. No authority was quoted to us except the case of Stewart[1] aforesaid, that it had ever been the practice in Scotland so to do, and on the whole matter I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary should have enforced the penalty of treble duty as directed by the statute.

LORD KINNEAR.—I also think that the interlocutor is right in so far as it finds the offence charged against the defender proved, but not in so far as it modifies the statutory penalty. I cannot agree with all that the Lord Ordinary has said as to the construction of the statute. The offence charged in terms of the 166th section is not, in my opinion, an inaccurate but a false or untruthful declaration. I should be slow to adopt a construction which should place innocent error in the same category and punish it with the same severity as the other offences defined in this section, namely, fraud or contrivance in making a claim or obtaining an exemption, and I do not think that this is within the ordinary meaning of the words of the enactment. A charge of untruly declaring seems to me to imply the intention to deceive, and the adverbial form of the phrase confirms this implication, because it directs attention to the action and intent of the declarant, and not merely to the contents of the declaration itself. When a man is said to make a declaration untruly, that means in ordinary language that the man himself is untrue, and not merely that his declaration is inaccurate. It makes no difficulty in my mind that the corresponding offence is described as fraudulently concealing, because non-disclosure does not necessarily imply wrongful intention; and it was therefore necessary, or at all events natural, to add the qualification "fraudulently," in order to bring the concealment into line with the other offences with which it is associated,—fraud, contrivance, and untrue declaration. But taking that to be the meaning of the enactment, I think the charge is proved, because the excuse put forward by the defender cannot in my judgment be accepted, and I rather think that the Lord Ordinary was of the same opinion. The words of the declaration have a perfectly plain meaning, and the defender must be held to have intended that meaning, unless he can displace the unfavourable inference by some much more convincing explanation than that which he has given.

The offence being proved, I agree with all that Lord Adam has said as to the penalty. I cannot say I have any doubt as to the meaning of the words "treble the duty chargeable in respect of all the sources of his income," and I cannot assent to the argument that the Crown's demand is excluded because the claim for abatement was not allowed. There are two offences

[1] 6 S. L. T., p. 405.

No. 177.
July 18, 1905.
Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

of quite different kinds described in the section. One is obtaining an exemption or abatement by fraud, and the other is fraudulently concealing or untruly declaring income, and the latter offence is complete in my judgment when a false declaration is made, whether the declarant succeeds in obtaining the exemption or abatement which he asks for or not. The words "as if such claim had not been allowed" appear to me to be entirely in accordance with this reading of the section. The statute includes a variety of offences, some of which may have been successful, so that a claim may have been allowed, and others may have been completed without the allowance of the claim; and when it goes on to say that the penalty is to be "treble the duty chargeable, and as if such claim had not been allowed," that only shews more clearly to my mind that the penalty is not to be measured by any gain which the taxpayer may have made by making a false return, but by his actual income, the total income for the year of charge.

As to the only remaining point, I also agree with Lord Adam that the Lord Ordinary's view cannot be sustained, and that it is not competent to modify the penalty. It is not left to the discretion of the Court, but is fixed absolutely by statute, and the Court can have no power to alter what is so fixed unless the statute confers it. The ground on which the Lord Ordinary has held the modification competent, as I understand his Lordship's exposition of it in the case to which he refers, is that a general and apparently arbitrary power to mitigate penalties has been conferred by the Act of Queen Anne. As I read the section in question, the jurisdiction which it confers arises only in the case of persons who have shewn good cause in bar or discharge of fines and duties; and if I had to read it for myself as a statute presented for construction for the first time I should find nothing in the language to support the Lord Ordinary's view that it gave the Court an absolute power of modification or mitigation of penalties "whenever," as the Lord Ordinary puts it, "the Court thinks proper to do so." The only ground of modification which is suggested in the present case is his Lordship's opinion that £20 is sufficient, but then the Legislature has determined that nothing shall be sufficient short of treble duty; and I cannot find any ground in the statute to enable us to override that conclusion of the Legislature. But then I do not think we are to construe this Act of Queen Anne as if it were a new Act, and as if we had to find out for ourselves for the first time what it means, because it gives us a guide for the exercise of the jurisdiction which it confers, by saying that we are to follow the use and practice of the Court of Exchequer in England. Now, we cannot tell of our own knowledge what the use and practice of that Court was, as if it were our own use and practice, except upon such evidence as we are accustomed to receive as to the use and practice of English Courts. It appears to me, therefore, that the party maintaining that this statute gives us the power to modify a penalty, was required to shew us that according to the use and practice referred to by the statute, such penalties were in practice modified. Nothing of the kind has been shewn, and on the contrary counsel for the Crown stated quite distinctly and positively that the practice of the Court of Exchequer in England is against the notion that the Court has any power to modify penalties of this kind, and I accept a statement of that kind, made by Crown counsel, as a statement made on the authority of the department which he represents in the case. I therefore agree with Lord Adam that, in so far as it modifies the penalty, the Lord Ordinary's judgment must be recalled, and the statutory penalty must be enforced.

No. 177.

July 18, 1905. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren.

LORD PRESIDENT.—I agree with your Lordships. The first question is after all a question of fact, and I should be slow to come to a different conclusion from that come to by the Lord Ordinary.

The second question is as to the true meaning of the word "chargeable." Now, if you were to adopt the Lord Ordinary's reading of the word "chargeable," the result would be that there would never be any charge in respect of income of such a character as lends itself to deduction at the source. But the heinousness of the crime or fault that is struck at by the penalty is the concealment of the true state of the man's income apart from tax, and a man who conceals £1000 of income which has tax deducted at the source conceals it just as wrongly when claiming total or partial exemption as he who conceals £1000 of income which is directly charged upon profits. I therefore agree with your Lordships in holding that the Legislature fixed that the penalty here should be treble the duty chargeable upon the whole income. Upon the third point, the Lord Ordinary's judgment in that other case to which his Lordship referred really turns, as his Lordship has said, upon the provisions of the Act of Queen Anne. I agree with what your Lordship who has last spoken says, but apart from that I find this—there is no doubt that the body dealt with in that Act had functions both administrative and judicial. There is also no doubt that we, sitting here as the Court of Exchequer, are, so to speak, the heirs of the judicial functions, not of the administrative, and I think this power of modifying the penalty, if it existed, was certainly part of the administrative functions, and is represented now by the undoubted power which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue have to modify any penalty they please. Further, with your Lordship I am greatly strengthened in this view by finding what I take to be proved by the authoritative statement at the Bar, namely, that the Court of Exchequer in England have never conceived that they had this general power of modifying any penalty. The interlocutor will be therefore to recall the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and to give decree in terms of the information, with expenses.

LORD M'LAREN was absent at the hearing.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Recall the said interlocutor [the interlocutor reclaimed against]: Find for the pursuer on both counts of the information No. 2 of process that the defender has forfeited the sum of £20, and also a sum of £187, 3s. 3d. of treble duty under the first count, and the sum of £20, and also a sum of £137, 12s. 5d. of treble duty under the second count: Decern against the defender for payment to the pursuer of the said sums, amounting in cumulo to £364, 15s. 8d.," &c.

SOLICITOR OF INLAND REVENUE—LISTER SHAND & LINDSAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

GOODWINS, JARDINE, & COMPANY, LIMITED, AND LIQUIDATOR, Pursuers (Reclaimers).—Clyde, K.C.—Hunter.
CHARLES BRAND & SON, Defenders (Respondents).—Campbell, K.C.—Murray.

No. 178.

July 19, 1905.

Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

Contract—Arbitration Clause—Arbitration Clause in Principal Contract incorporated in Subcontract.—A contractor, who had contracted with a railway company for the construction of certain works, entered into a subcontract for the execution of part of the work. In the contract between the principal contractor and the subcontractor it was stipulated that the work was to be executed "according to plans and specifications," which included a "general specification," forming part of the contract between the principal contractor and the railway company. This "general specification," contained a clause providing that disputes were to be submitted to arbitration.

In an action by the subcontractor against the principal contractor for certain sums alleged to be due under the subcontract, the principal contractor pleaded that the claims made in the action fell within the arbitration clause of the "general specification," which he maintained was imported into the subcontract.

Held that the arbitration clause of the general specification—while it was incorporated in the subcontract to the effect of making the decisions of an arbiter in questions between the railway company and the principal contractor binding upon the subcontractor—was not incorporated in the subcontract quoad matters which concerned only the rights inter se of the principal contractor and the subcontractor.

1ST DIVISION. Lord Kincairney.

GOODWINS, JARDINE, & COMPANY, LIMITED, in liquidation, having its registered office at 18 St Swithin's Lane, London, and James Watson Stewart, chartered accountant, Glasgow, the liquidator thereof, brought an action against Charles Brand & Son, contractors, 172 Buchanan Street, Glasgow, concluding for payment of (1) £10,915, under deduction of £5800 paid to account, and (2) £7002, under deduction of £1200 paid to account, being the balances alleged to be due by the defenders to the pursuers under a contract.

The defenders were contractors with the Caledonian Railway Company for the formation of portions of the Glasgow Central Railway, under two contracts, called the Bridgeton contract and the Trongate contract, and the pursuers contracted with the defenders for the supply of the girder work required for these contracts.

The contract between the pursuers and the defenders was constituted by an offer by the pursuers to execute the work at certain prices, and an acceptance by the defenders. The original schedule, containing a specification of the work, and the pursuers' tender with reference to the two contracts, was amissing, but a copy was produced. The copy shewed, at the end of the portion of it relative to the "Trongate contract," a docquet in the following terms:—"Fifty-three thousand one hundred and sixty-eight pounds two shillings and ninepence sterling net, erected complete, in conformity with drawings, specifications, and general conditions," and a docquet in similar terms appended at the end of the portion of the schedule relative to the Bridgeton contract.

The acceptance was contained in a letter, dated 20th June 1890, written by the defenders to the pursuers:—"Glasgow Central Railway —Contracts Nos. 1 and 2.—We hereby accept your tender for all the girder work on these contracts, as per schedule sent by you, and at the prices therein stated, less 2½ (say, two and a half) per cent.

No. 178.

July 19, 1905.
Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

"Should we elect to take delivery of any portion of these girders at the station, and erect the same, a reduction is to be made by you of 20s. (say, twenty shillings) per ton.

"The whole work to be executed to the satisfaction of the engineers of the railway company, and according to plans and specifications, and to be finished within the period mentioned in the specification.

"We shall furnish you within four weeks with copies of all the contract drawings of iron work, and will from time to time give you drawings or instructions of any alterations that may be ordered, and also instructions with reference to our requirements from time to time, it being understood that you will supply us with the iron as the works proceed.

"A formal minute of agreement to be entered into containing all usual and necessary clauses."

The defenders denied that the balances sued for were due, and in a statement of facts stated (Stat. 6):—"In their tenders, dated 11th June 1890, attached to the schedules filled up by them, the pursuers offered to complete the works 'in conformity with drawings, specifications, and general conditions.' The defenders accepted said tenders by letter dated 20th June 1890, and in said letter stipulated that the work should be executed 'according to plans and specifications.' The drawings, specifications, and conditions so referred to were those applicable to the contracts between the defenders and the Caledonian Railway Company. Previous to the pursuers tendering to the defenders for said work, they had before them the said drawings specifications, and conditions of said railway contracts, including the general specification of works. Said conditions and others were intended to and did form part of the contract made as aforesaid between the pursuers and defenders, and the pursuers' tender and the defenders' acceptance was made and given on the footing that said conditions and others were incorporated in the contract between them." The defenders set forth art. 180 of the said "general specification," * and averred that in terms of the clause of submission in

* Article 180 of the general specification was as follows:—"Should any disputes arise as to the true intent and meaning of this specification, and the relative plans, sections, drawings, detailed estimate and special specification, and the contract to follow thereon, or as to the extent of the works intended to be performed thereunder, as to the works having been duly and properly completed, or as to the expense of any additional work, or deduction from that specified, or any alteration which may be more or less expensive than the work specified, or as to the measurements of the works as executed, or as to any extension of time for the completion of the works beyond the date or dates mentioned in the special specification, or as to the liquidated and ascertained compensation payable by the contractor, in the event of delay in completing the works, or as to any claim of damages at the instance of the contractors against the Company, or as to any notice or plans requiring to be served or delivered by the Company, . . . or as to any other matter, claim, demand, or obligation whatever, arising out of or in connection with the contract, or as to any other matter specially referred to the arbiter in this, or in the special specification, the same shall . . . be referred to . . . and the decision, interim or final, of the said arbiter shall be finally binding and conclusive upon both parties; and the arbiter is hereby authorised and empowered to decern for such sum or sums, interim or final, as he may find to be due by the contractor to the Company, or by the Company to the contractor. . . ."

No. 178.

July 19, 1905.
Goodwins, Jardine & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

art. 180 all disputes and differences between the pursuers and defenders arising out of the contract between them fell to be determined by the arbiters named therein, and that the defenders were willing to refer the pursuers' claims accordingly.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) In respect that the pursuers' claims in the present action fall within the clause of submission which forms part of the contract between the said pursuers and defenders, the action should be sisted until the arbiter therein named has given his decision thereon.

On 30th January 1904 the Lord Ordinary (Kincairney) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds (1) that the clause of arbitration in the 180th section of the general specification of the works undertaken by the defenders in their contract with the Caledonian Railway Company, No. 27 of process, has been incorporated in the contract between the pursuers and the defenders; (2) that the questions between the pursuers and defenders in this action fall within the said clause of arbitration: Therefore sustains the first plea in law for the defenders, and sists the cause that the record may be submitted to one of the arbiters nominated in said general specification. . . ."*

The pursuers reclaimed.

---

* "OPINION.—This is an action on a subcontract by which the pursuers undertook to perform a part of the work for which the defenders had contracted with the Caledonian Railway Company. It is a contract carved, so to speak, out of that larger contract . . . I have now been asked to decide the question raised by the defenders' first plea, which is that the pursuers' claims fall under a clause of reference. The contract with the Railway Company contains a very wide and careful clause of reference, and, indeed, it seems clear that neither that original contract nor the contract between the pursuers and defenders to which this action relates could be worked out without great inconvenience and expense without the aid of a clause of reference. Now, there is no clause of reference in the contract between the pursuers and defenders. But the defenders contend that the clause of reference in the contract between the defenders and the Railway Company must be held to be incorporated in the contract between the present parties. There are certainly difficulties, but I think that that contention should be supported.

"There is in the process a letter by the defenders to the pursuers, dated 20th June 1890, which bears to be an acceptance by the defenders of the pursuers' tender, about which acceptance no difficulty has been raised. It bears—'The whole work to be executed to the satisfaction of the engineers of the Railway Company, and according to plans and specifications, and to be finished within the period mentioned in the specification.'

"There is no mention in this letter of a clause of reference nor even of conditions in the specification. The reference is to the specification generally, but I think that that reference to the whole specification is, in the circumstances, sufficient to incorporate its clauses regarding the contract under consideration as truly a part of the general contract.

"The defenders aver that 'in their tenders, dated 11th June 1890, attached to the schedules filled up by them, the pursuers offered to complete the works in conformity with drawings, specifications, and general conditions.' The reference here to the general specification is closer than in the defenders' letter, but the difficulty seems to be that the tenders or tender cannot be found, and nothing but alleged copies are produced. These are not very satisfactory copies, and I could not act on them without some inquiry, but I have come to think that that would be an unnecessary expense, and that I may proceed on the letter of the defenders, and may hold that the reference in that letter to the specification is, in the circum-

No. 178.

July 19, 1905. Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

On 2d July 1904 the First Division, on the motion of the defenders, and it having been admitted by counsel for the pursuers that the principal document, containing the tenders made by the pursuers, referred to in the defenders' letter of acceptance, had been lost and could not be found, before answer, allowed the defenders a proof of their averments as to the terms of the pursuers' tenders, mentioned in statement 6 of the statement of facts, and to the pursuers a conjunct probation.

The proof shewed that the copy of the pursuers' tender was correct.

Argued for the pursuers and reclaimers;—The defenders had made an independent contract with the pursuers, and the stipulation in the letter of acceptance of 20th June 1890, that the work was to be executed "according to plans and specifications," did not incorporate into the contract all the clauses, including the clause of arbitration, in the general specification. The pursuers were not parties to the general specification, and the terms of the clause of arbitration shewed that it referred only to questions arising between "the contractor" and the railway company, and did not cover questions arising between the contractor and a subcontractor. The case was similar to the class of cases in which it had been held that a reference in a bill of lading to the terms and conditions in the charter-party did not have the effect of making a clause of arbitration in the charter-party applicable to disputes under the bill of lading.[1] The case of Weir & Company v. Pirie & Company,[2] referred to by the Lord Ordinary, was inapplicable, since in that case it was clear from the form of the clause of arbitration that it was intended to operate between all the parties. At the most the only provisions of the general specification which could be held imported into the subcontract were those which dealt with the sufficiency of the materials supplied and kindred matters. But the questions at issue between the pursuers and defenders related merely to the prices and alleged overcharges in the separate contract between them under which the defenders made their own profit and paid the pursuers at agreed-upon rates.

Argued for the defenders and respondents;—The effect of the words "according to plans and specifications," in the letter of acceptance, and of the words "in conformity with drawings, specifications, and general conditions" in the docquet written by the pursuers' manager on the schedules, was clearly to incorporate into the subcontract all the clauses of the general specification. The arbitration clause in the specification could not be separated from the other clauses of the specification. It was said that the pursuers were not parties to the specification. That was true, but they had entered into a subcontract which incorporated the specification. There was no ground for the contention that the clause of arbitration was in any respect less applicable to the pursuers than any other clause in the specification, and it could scarcely be disputed that the clauses as to the quality and quantity of materials, &c. were binding on the stances, sufficient to incorporate the clause of arbitration. I suppose that the difficulty about the production of the tenders may yet be overcome.

---

"Counsel for the defenders quoted the case of Weir v. Pirie & Company (No. 1), 24th May 1898, 3 Com. Cases, 263, which appears to give very important support to his argument."

[1] Hamilton & Co. v. Mackie & Sons, 1889, 5 Times L. R. 677; Runciman & Co. v. Smyth & Co., 1904, 20 Times L. R. 625.

[2] 1898, 3 Comm. Cases, 263.

No. 178.
July 19, 1905.
Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

pursuers. The words of the clause of arbitration, "any disputes," &c., were of the most general character. The case of Weir & Company v. Pirie & Company,[1] was precisely similar to the present case, and proceeded on the simple ground that where one business contract incorporated another, it must incorporate the whole of it, not excluding an arbitration clause.

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this case Goodwins, Jardine, & Company sue Charles Brand & Son for the balance of prices under a contract which was entered into between them for the construction of some bridge work incidental to the formation of the Central Railway, Glasgow. Messrs Brand were the general contractors with the Caledonian Railway for the execution of the railway works, and not being persons who did bridge work themselves, they entered into a subcontract with the pursuers for the making of the bridge work. The bridge work was made, part of the price was paid, and this is an action for the balance.

The contract between the pursuers and the defenders was constituted by an offer and acceptance. The offer has been lost, but the acceptance is contained in a letter written by Messrs Brand to Goodwins, Jardine, & Company, which is in these terms:—"We hereby accept your tender for all the girder work on these contracts, as per schedule sent by you, and at the prices therein stated, less 2½ (say, two and a half) per cent. . . . The whole work to be executed to the satisfaction of the engineers of the Railway Company, and according to plans and specifications, and to be finished within the period mentioned in the specification." Now, "the plans and specifications," parties are agreed, were the plans and specifications which formed part of the general contract between the Caledonian Railway Company and the Messrs Brand. The defenders plead that they are not due the sum which the pursuers conclude for, but before answering further and going into inquiry on these matters they tabled a special plea that the inquiry must not be in Court, because such matters have been remitted to arbitration, in respect that the arbitration clause, which is one of the clauses of the general contract between Messrs Brand and the Caledonian Railway Company, has by the terms of this contract been incorporated into the contract between the pursuers and the defenders, and rules all matters between them. The Lord Ordinary upon these pleadings pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds (1) that the clause of arbitration in the 180th section of the general specification of the works undertaken by the defenders in their contract with the Caledonian Railway Company, No. 27 of process, has been incorporated in the contract between the pursuers and the defenders; (2) that the questions between the pursuers and defenders in this action fall within the said clause of arbitration," and therefore he sists the action in order that the matters may be submitted to one of the arbiters named. Against that interlocutor the reclaiming note was taken, and your Lordships on 2d July 1904 allowed the defenders a proof as to the terms of the pursuers' tenders mentioned in article 6 of the defenders' statement of facts. (His Lordship, after dealing with the proof, proceeded)—

There is no question but that the pursuers accepted this contract with [1] 1898, 3 Comm. Cases, 263.

No. 178.
July 19, 1905.
Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

reference not only to the special specification, but to the general specification. The whole question, of course, remains, upon the merits, what was the effect of that acceptance. I am therefore of opinion that your Lordships should proceed to consider the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor upon its merits.

Now, the Lord Ordinary in his note says,—"I think that that reference to the whole specification is in the circumstances sufficient to incorporate its clauses regarding the contract under consideration as truly a part of the general contract." It does not appear to me that that way of stating the question is really completely accurate. For some purposes there is no doubt that the arbitration clause is incorporated. It is, I think, quite clear that for anything in dispute between the Brands and the Caledonian Railway Company the arbitration clause has effect, and the result arrived at under that arbitration clause is binding on the pursuers. In that respect it is just like all the other clauses in the specification. But the point is not whether it is incorporated at all, but whether it is incorporated in regard to another matter altogether, namely, the dispute about prices between the pursuers and the defenders. That is a matter outside the relations of the defenders and the Caledonian Railway Company. What is binding on the one is not binding on the other. Accordingly on this part of the case I do not agree with the Lord Ordinary. I think the contract incorporated was the contract so far as it existed between the principal contractor and the employer—that is to say, the Brands and the Railway Company—but that you cannot over and above cut out of the provisions of that contract one clause and make it apply mutatis mutandis to the rights inter se of the principal contractor and the subcontractor—that is, the pursuers and the defenders—in a matter in which the employer never had and never can have any concern.

I am therefore for recalling the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, and remitting the case to him for proof.

LORD ADAM concurred.

LORD M'LAREN.—I think it is clear enough that no principal contractor for a railway company would ever enter into a contract with a subcontractor except on the condition that whatever the engineer or the referee decided as to the fulfilment of the contract between the principals should be binding on the subcontractor. If it were not binding on him, it would probably be a losing concern on the part of the principal contractor. The relations between the principal contractor and the Company are such that the Railway Company's engineer, if dissatisfied with any of the materials supplied either as to quality or dimensions, might require them to be altered, leaving for future consideration whether any allowance was to be made in respect of such alterations. It would be impossible to work a subcontract unless an order of this kind was binding on the subcontractor, as he alone supplies the materials. But then, I think it follows that, with regard to allowances to be made for extra work or for variations which in the course of the work have been found to be necessary, the decision of the arbiter upon such a point must always be binding on the subcontractor who supplies the materials, the sufficiency of which is under consideration. For these purposes I should hold that the clause of arbitration was incorporated as one of the conditions that are necessarily binding in such cases. But then there may be other questions which concern only the relations between the principal contractor and the subcontractor. As for instance, the rate of payment as between them, or the commission or discount; and again, where delay has occurred and there has been responsibility for delay, whether that delay is to be charged against the subcontractor. I only mention these as examples of possible questions between the principal contractor and the subcontractor which are in no way covered by the clause of arbitration, because they affect only these two, and do not cover the relations between them and the Railway Company.

No. 178.
July 19, 1905.
Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son.

I therefore agree with your Lordship that it is necessary to distinguish between these things, and while we do not hold the clause of arbitration universally binding, if proof is to be allowed it will no doubt shew that there are many things that are substantially covered by the clause of arbitration, because whatever was to be decided as to working material between the Caledonian Railway Company and the principal contractor would also affect the question of the calculation of prices with the subcontractor.

LORD KINNEAR concurred.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, allowed the parties a proof of their respective averments on record, and remitted to the Lord Ordinary to take the proof.

WEBSTER, WILL, & Co., S.S.C.—ALEX. MORISON & Co., W.S.—Agents.

No. 179.
July 19, 1905.
Buchanan v. Corporation of Glasgow.

JAMES BUCHANAN, Pursuer (Respondent).—Orr, K.C.—Anderson.

THE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF GLASGOW, Defenders (Reclaimers).—Mackenzie, K.C.—Macmillan.

Reparation—Malicious Prosecution—Facts and circumstances inferring malice.—In an action of damages against the Corporation of Glasgow, proprietors of the tramways, the pursuer made the following averments:—On 14th April two of the tramway inspectors employed by the defenders charged the pursuer, then a passenger in one of their cars, with having on 10th April contravened one of the statutory bye-laws by spitting on a car. On 21st April the inspectors reported the matter to the police, and on 22d April a complaint was served on the pursuer. The case was called in the Police Court on 26th April, when the pursuer was in attendance with his witnesses. The prosecutor then deserted the diet pro loco et tempore. The pursuer further averred that the charge and the report by the inspectors to the police were made falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause.

Held (1) that, the inspectors having been appointed to carry out the provisions of an Act of Parliament, it was necessary for the pursuer to aver facts and circumstances inferring malice; and (2) that the action was irrelevant in respect that no such facts and circumstances were averred.

1ST DIVISION. Lord Dundas.

THIS was an action at the instance of James Buchanan, 7 West George Street, Glasgow, against the Corporation of the City of Glasgow, concluding for £250 as damages.

The pursuer averred that the defenders were the owners of the tramway system in the city of Glasgow; that they were the employers of the officials engaged in connection with that system; and that they made bye-laws under the powers conferred by their Tramways Acts

No. 179.

July 19, 1905. Buchanan v. Corporation of Glasgow.

prohibiting, inter alia, passengers on tramcars from spitting in or upon said cars, and enacting that persons guilty of said acts shall be liable to fine or imprisonment, and they have in their employment inspectors charged with the duty, inter alia, of seeing that said bye-laws are not infringed, and that persons contravening them are proceeded against. (Cond. 2) "On Friday, 14th April 1905, the pursuer was travelling on a tramway car belonging to the defenders. . . . While he was on said car two tramcar inspectors in plain clothes . . . who were in the employment of the defenders, and entrusted by them with the duty above described in connection with said bye-laws, entered the said car and falsely and calumniously charged the pursuer with having committed the said offence of spitting in or upon a tramway car belonging to the defenders . . . on 10th April 1905, and further stated that he had been then charged with doing so, and that when so charged he had given a false name and address. Said charge was false and calumnious and illegal, and said statements were made openly in said car, in the presence and hearing of the pursuer and of William Gibb, Houston Street, Glasgow, and were uttered maliciously and without probable cause. The said inspectors before making said charge had called a policeman and brought him on to said car for the purpose of arresting the pursuer. They made the said charge and the said statements against the pursuer in the presence of said policeman, and then at once requested the policeman to arrest pursuer for said pretended offence said to have been committed on 10th April. The said action on the part of the inspectors was entirely unwarranted, and was wrongful and illegal. In making said charge against pursuer, and said statements in regard to him, and in ordering pursuer's arrest, said inspectors were acting within the scope of their employment as defenders' servants, and in the interest of the defenders. The pursuer assured the said inspectors and policeman, and it is the fact, that he was entirely innocent, and that the inspectors had made a mistake, but notwithstanding pursuer's explanations, the inspectors persisted in the said charge and the said assertions against him. Ultimately, when pursuer exhibited his diary and season ticket . . . the pursuer was allowed to go."

The pursuer further averred (Cond. 3) that notwithstanding the said explanation given on 14th April 1905 to the inspectors by the pursuer, the inspectors thereafter on 21st April 1905 unwarrantably, wrongfully, and illegally reported to the police that the pursuer had been guilty of the said offence on 10th April, with a view to the pursuer being prosecuted and fined or imprisoned; that said charge and report to the police was made maliciously and without probable cause; that in consequence of said charge and report to the police, a complaint that the pursuer had been guilty of said offence was served upon him; that the case was called at the Police Court on 26th April, when the pursuer was present along with witnesses to prove his innocence, but that the case did not go to trial, the diet having been deserted pro loco et tempore on the motion of the prosecutor.

The defenders in their answers explained that the inspectors had reasonable and probable cause to make the charge against the pursuer, and that, in making the charge, the inspectors were acting in the discharge of their duty to the public as well as to the defenders, and were privileged in so acting.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) No relevant case. (3) Privilege.

No. 179.

July 19, 1905.
Buchanan v. Corporation of Glasgow.

The pursuer proposed two issues.

On 24th June 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Dundas) disallowed the first issue proposed by the pursuer, and approved of the second issue proposed by him as amended.*

The amended issue, approved by the Lord Ordinary, was as follows:—"Whether, on or about 21st April 1905, two tramcar inspectors, servants of the defenders, acting within the scope of their employment as defenders' servants, falsely, calumniously, maliciously, and without probable cause, informed or caused information to be given to the police accusing the pursuer of having on 10th April 1905 committed the offence of spitting in or upon a tramcar belonging to the defenders in New City Road, Glasgow, to the pursuer's loss, injury, and damage?"

The defenders reclaimed, and argued;—In the case of an action based, as this action was, on the acts of public officials, it was not enough to make a bare averment of malice and insert the word "maliciously" in the issue; it was necessary, in addition, to aver facts and circumstances from which, if proved, malice could be inferred. The kind of facts and circumstances which it was necessary to aver was illustrated in Young v. Magistrates of Glasgow[1] and Douglas v.

---

* "OPINION.— . . . The second issue proposed by the pursuer seems to stand in a somewhat different position. The averments in support of it are contained in the 3d article of the condescendence, which sets forth that, notwithstanding what took place, as above stated, upon 14th April 1905, the said inspectors on or about 21st April reported, or caused to be reported, to the police that the pursuer had been guilty of the said contravention of the statutory bye-law, with a view to his being prosecuted, and fined or imprisoned; that, in consequence, a complaint was served upon the pursuer on 22d April; that the case was called on 26th April at the Northern Police Court in Glasgow, when the pursuer was in attendance with his agent and seven witnesses to prove his innocence; and that the case did not go to trial, the diet having been deserted pro loco et tempore by the prosecutor. The pursuer alleges that the report to the police was not only falsely made, but also maliciously and without probable cause. The defenders' counsel argued that all these allegations, assuming them to be correct, were merely the natural and necessary sequel of what had occurred on 14th April, and, as before, that the mere insertion of the adverb 'maliciously' would not suffice unless relevant averments from which malice might be reasonably inferred were forthcoming, which he contended were entirely absent from the record. He referred to the well-known case of Ivory, 14 R. 1057, and also to Young, 18 R. 825, where an issue against police constables was only allowed upon pretty strong and specific averments from which malice might reasonably be inferred. The present case seems to me to be rather a narrow one, but, upon the whole, I think that I ought to grant the pursuer an issue upon this head. I am not prepared to say that a jury might not reasonably infer something amounting to malice from the facts, if proved, that the inspectors, after hearing the pursuer's explanation on 14th April, saw fit to report the matter to the police a week later, and set quasi-criminal proceedings afoot, which, after he had incurred trouble and expense for his defence, were departed from, and have, so far as appears, not since been resuscitated. I shall therefore approve, as the issue for the trial of the cause, the second of the issues proposed by the pursuer, with such verbal alterations as are necessary, owing to the disallowance of the first issue, and with the insertion, to which the pursuer's counsel admitted that he must submit, of the words 'maliciously, and without probable cause.'"

[1] May 16, 1891, 18 R. 825.

No. 179.

July 19, 1905. Buchanan v. Corporation of Glasgow.

Main.[1] Here there were no facts averred from which it might legitimately be inferred that the inspectors had not acted in the discharge of their duty.[2] It was in the public interest that inspectors appointed to see to the enforcement of statutory bye-laws should be protected in order that they might be able to perform their duties fearlessly.

Argued for the pursuer;—A distinction fell to be made between cases founded on defamation proper and cases founded on malicious prosecution. The present case fell under the latter category, and in cases under this category a bare averment of malice was enough.[3] The giving of false information to the police without probable cause with a view to a prosecution was a valid ground for an action of damages against the person giving the information.[4] In the cases cited by the defenders, the public officials were all in a higher and more responsible position than the tramway inspectors, whose conduct was here in question, so that the degree of privilege was greater. In the record circumstances were averred sufficient to infer malice. The fact that the inspectors acted recklessly and without inquiry might be equivalent to, or indicate, malice.[5]

LORD PRESIDENT.—The case argued here is whether there is really any issuable matter on record, in respect that no special facts and circumstances inferring malice are averred. I have looked in vain for such special facts and circumstances. On the authorities it is clear that this is a case where such facts and circumstances require to be averred, because the inspectors, though not high officials, were nevertheless appointed to carry out the provisions of an Act of Parliament. The Corporation of Glasgow have an excellent bye-law prohibiting spitting in their cars, which could not be enforced unless such inspectors were appointed.

The pursuer's averments are that on 14th April, while he was travelling on a car, two inspectors accused him of having committed the offence of spitting on a car on the 10th of April, and of having, when charged with doing so, given a false name and address. The inspectors called up a policeman and requested him to take the pursuer in charge. The pursuer assured the inspectors he was innocent of the charge, and produced his diary and a season ticket as a proof of his identity.

On that the inspectors behaved in a perfectly sensible way, and did not arrest the pursuer, and afterwards reported the whole matter to the police. I do not see what else they could have done.

The pursuer now brings this action against the inspectors, and avers that they acted maliciously. But there was nothing in either their manner or method of acting from which one could extort any idea of malice at all.

The Lord Ordinary has already disallowed the first issue, and I propose that we should also disallow the second.

LORD ADAM.—It is not disputed that this is a case of privilege. Cases

[1] June 13, 1893, 20 R. 793.

[2] Beaton v. Ivory, July 19, 1887, 14 R. 1057; Macdonald v. M'Coll, July 18, 1901, 3 F. 1082.

[3] Innes v. Adamson, Oct. 25, 1889, 17 R. 11; Reid v. Moore, May 18, 1893, 20 R. 712; Beaton v. Ivory, cit. sup.

[4] Lightbody v. Gordon, June 15, 1882, 9 R. 934.

[5] Lee v. Ritchie, May 14, 1904, 6 F. 642.

No. 179.

July 19, 1905.
Buchanan v. Corporation of Glasgow.

of privilege vary from a high degree of privilege to a low degree; and the present case is not one of a very high degree of privilege. But being a case of privilege, it is not disputed that there must be an averment of malice.

The facts are that two tramcar inspectors—appointed by the Magistrates of Glasgow to see that the bye-laws, made by them under the powers conferred by their Tramways Acts, are not infringed—charged a person with committing an offence against these bye-laws by spitting in or upon a tramcar. He gave a name and address, which turned out to be false, and they allowed him to go. Four days afterwards they saw the present pursuer on a tramcar, and, supposing, rightly or wrongly, that he was the man who had been guilty of the offence, they summoned a policeman and charged him with the offence. The pursuer asserted his innocence, gave his name, and produced evidence of his identity. What were they doing wrong? Were they not doing just what it was their duty to do? Seven days afterwards they reported the offence to the police, who took apparently the usual proceedings in such cases. Where is there anything in all this from which we could presume malice? I do not know what a jury might do, but I do know what a jury ought to do. Accordingly I am clearly of opinion that there is no issuable matter in this record.

LORD M'LAREN.—I concur, and I have little to add. I had some doubts as to the case of Macdonald[1]—whether the Court had not gone too far in extending a special privilege to persons in authority, so that to found an action of damages against them it was necessary not only to aver malice but to aver special facts and circumstances from which the Court would judge whether there was issuable matter for a case of malicious injury. It is carrying that principle very far to apply it to police constables and tramway inspectors, but in the present state of the authorities there can be no doubt as to what our decision should be. I am reconciled to the principle of the case of Macdonald[1] by the consideration that without this extension of the privilege it would not be easy to protect the humbler classes of officials and their employers from groundless actions of damages. There is in England the great protection of "probable cause," which is there determined by the Judge. In our practice it is not, however, of much avail, since it goes to a jury who may or may not understand its effect, however clearly it is put to them by the presiding Judge. I agree with your Lordships and the Lord Ordinary that upon the facts stated on the record we should not hold that there was issuable matter for a case of malicious injury.

LORD KINNEAR.—I am unable to find any issuable matter in this record, and I concur in your Lordships' judgment.

THE COURT disallowed both issues, and dismissed the action.

CLARK & MACDONALD, S.S.C.—SIMPSON & MARWICK, W.S.—Agents.

---

[1] 3 F. 1082.

No. 180.

July 19, 1905.
Lumsden v. West Lothian Printing and Publishing Co., Limited.

ALEXANDER LUMSDEN, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Watt, K.C.—Spens.
WEST LOTHIAN PRINTING AND PUBLISHING COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Respondents).—T. B. Morison.

Reparation—Slander—Innuendo—Newspaper—Shebeening.—A newspaper contained a letter to the editor in which the writer, after criticising the action of the licensing authorities of the district in taking away a licence in B., a small town, on account of supplying liquor to an intoxicated person, continued—"Again, I should like to ask, if authorities are determined to be so rigorous, why, after convicting another licence-holder in B. of shebeening and fining him £10, they did not think it necessary to withdraw his licence? Surely shebeening was more heinous in the sight of the law; and I should like to ask if this was the first conviction against the same party."

A publican in B. brought an action of damages for slander against the publishers of the newspaper. The pursuer averred that he had once been convicted of shebeening, that he was the only person in B. who had ever been convicted of shebeening, and that the letter falsely represented that he had been more than once convicted of shebeening.

Held (rev. the judgment of Lord Johnston) that the pursuer was entitled to an issue whether the letter falsely represented that the pursuer had been more than once convicted of shebeening.

2D DIVISION. Ld. Johnston.

IN the issue of the West Lothian Courier for 10th February 1905 there appeared a letter to the editor in the following terms:—

"Forfeiture of the Gothenburg Licence.—Sir,—The forfeiture of this licence has aroused great surprise in the district, and little wonder, when we consider that the conviction took place without a defence. It is all the more surprising that the prosecution did not, as a matter of courtesy (outside of duty), notify the licencee that the case was to proceed, especially after the defence agreeing to a postponement on the 29th December last pending the recovery of their principal witness. And here I would like to know how it was possible to settle a date for the case being taken up when the man was lying ill. . . . Again, I should like to ask if authorities are determined to be so rigorous, why, after convicting another licence-holder in Broxburn of shebeening and fining him £10, they did not think it necessary to withdraw his licence? Surely shebeening was more heinous in the sight of the law; and I should like to ask if this was the first conviction against the same party. And, again, why did the same Court dismiss the Winchburgh case after the evidence led? These are matters people can't help taking notice of. The only parties who appear to be satisfied with the verdict are the publicans of the town, who are all smiles just now. You would think the same law did not apply to them, and perhaps it doesn't.—I am, &c., FAIRPLAY."

In March 1905 Alexander Lumsden, publican, residing at Clifton Buildings, Station Road, Broxburn, brought an action against the West Lothian Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, Bathgate, concluding for decree for £500 as damages for slander alleged to be contained in the letter above quoted.

The pursuer averred;—(Cond. 1) "The pursuer was, until recently, a wine and spirit merchant at Broxburn, and was licencee of the Central Bar there from 1900 to 1904. The defenders are the printers and publishers of the West Lothian Courier, which is published, inter alia, in the Broxburn district." (Cond. 2) "The pursuer had been in the licensed trade for some thirteen or fourteen years prior to 1904,

No. 180.

July 19, 1905.
Lumsden v. West Lothian Printing and Publishing Co., Limited.

and during that time was never either convicted of, or charged with, any offence under the Licensing Acts." (Cond. 3) "In or about June 1904 the pursuer was convicted of shebeening by the Justice of Peace Court at Linlithgow, and fined £10. The offence which the pursuer committed was supplying a regular customer with whisky from his house on a Sunday, and was not of a serious character, and was not so regarded by the Justices of the Peace. Thereafter the pursuer sold his business in Broxburn." The purchaser duly obtained a transfer of the licence. "The pursuer has not since been convicted of, or charged with, any offence against the Licensing Laws." (Cond. 4) "Early in February 1905 the Justice of Peace Court found it necessary to forfeit the licence of the Broxburn Gothenburg Public-House. Shortly thereafter, on 10th February 1905, the West Lothian Courier contained the following letter to the editor"—The pursuer then set forth the letter above quoted. "The defenders have been asked to disclose the name of the writer of this letter, and have refused." (Cond. 5) "The passage in the above letter relative to shebeening is written of and concerning the pursuer. It is made quite irrelevantly to the subject under discussion, and is false, calumnious, and malicious. In particular, the passage represents falsely that the pursuer—who is the only person ever convicted of shebeening at Broxburn—has been more than once convicted of shebeening and other offences, and that the offence of which he was convicted was a very grave one, and it was so understood by those who read it."

The defenders (Ans. 4) admitted that they had not disclosed the name of the writer of the letter. "Explained that the decision of the Licensing Authority in forfeiting said [Gothenburg] licence created much local indignation. . . . Accordingly when the defenders received from a respectable member of the public the letter of 10th February 1905, they had no hesitation in inserting it in their newspaper as an expression of the local feeling caused by the conduct of the Licensing Justices. They had no intention whatever of attacking the pursuer, and the purpose of the publication was fully achieved subsequently by the restoration of the Gothenburg licence by the Court of Appeal."

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The pursuer having suffered loss, injury, and damage through the wrongful actings of the defenders in printing and publishing the false, calumnious, and malicious statements condescended on, is entitled to decree as craved. (2) The defenders having slandered the pursuer as condescended on, the pursuer is entitled to decree as concluded for, with expenses.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The statements of the pursuer being irrelevant, the action should be dismissed. (2) The defenders not having slandered the pursuer, should be assoilzied.

The pursuer proposed the following issue for the trial of the cause:—"Whether the statements in the letter printed in the schedule annexed hereto are of and concerning the pursuer, and falsely and calumniously represent that the pursuer had been more than once convicted of shebeening,—to the loss, injury, and damage of the pursuer? Damages laid at £500 sterling."

On 23d May 1905 the Lord Ordinary (Johnston) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds that the summons does not disclose any issuable matter; therefore disallows the issue proposed by the pursuer, sustains the defences, dismisses the action, and decerns: Finds the defenders entitled to expenses, allows," &c.

No. 180.

July 19, 1905.
Lumsden v. West Lothian Printing and Publishing Co., Limited.

The undernoted authorities were cited at the hearing.[1]

At advising,—

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I have had considerable difficulty in making up my mind in this case. It is most undesirable that issues should be too readily allowed on statements made in newspaper letters, containing nothing in themselves libellous, and which can only be brought into the category of malicious slander by innuendo. But having had the advantage of consultation with your Lordships, I have come to the conclusion that in this case the Lord Ordinary has erred in refusing to allow an issue as in a relevant case.

The pursuer complains of a letter which appeared in the West Lothian Courier, in which a conviction against the pursuer for shebeening is referred to, and comparisons are made between the way in which the Licensing Court dealt with another case which came before them and that of the pursuer. The writer then proceeds thus:—"And I should like to ask whether this was the first conviction against the same party?" This phrase the pursuer proposes to innuendo as meaning that there was a previous conviction against him, which thus aggravated his offence. It appears to me that such an innuendo might fairly be deduced from the words used, and that the pursuer has stated a relevant case to entitle him to an issue, it being for the jury to say whether on the evidence the innuendo has been established, and what damage, nominal or substantial, has been incurred.

I am therefore in favour of recalling the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary and allowing the issue.

LORD KYLLACHY.—I should myself have been quite prepared to concur with the Lord Ordinary's judgment, but I feel the force of the view which your Lordships take, that the innuendo is not absolutely inadmissible, and that therefore the question is one rather for the jury than for the Court. I do not therefore dissent from the judgment proposed.

LORD KINCAIRNEY concurred.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—The Lord Ordinary has disallowed this issue on the ground that the summons does not disclose any issuable matter. The anonymous letter to the defenders' newspaper on which the issue is founded is evidently not written in any spirit hostile to the liquor trade as a whole, for its purport is to complain of the forfeiture of a particular licence in the village of Broxburn. And I do not wonder if his Lordship regarded the pursuer's complaint of a charge that he had been more than once convicted of shebeening, when he admits having been convicted once, as rather unsubstantial. The charge is spelled out of a passage in the letter which asks if the admitted conviction was "the first conviction against the same party," and the question is asked for the purpose of shewing that, inasmuch as it was not followed by forfeiture, the punishment meted out to the other licence-holder was unduly severe.

Still, whatever may have been the writer's motive, it was undoubtedly,

[1] Carmichael v. Cowan, Dec. 19, 1862, 1 Macph. 204, 35 Scot. Jur. 95; M'Kerchar v. Cameron, Jan. 19, 1892, 19 R. 383.

No. 180.

July 19, 1905.
Lumsden v. West Lothian Printing and Publishing Co., Limited.

though not perhaps very grossly, libellous to say or imply that the pursuer had been more than once convicted of shebeening if such was not the fact. And I cannot say that the words used, though used in the form of putting a question, were not capable of the meaning that the pursuer had been convicted more than once.

That being so, I think the pursuer is entitled to have the verdict of a jury on the question whether the words were used in that sense or not. The innuendo is not an unreasonable or forced one, and it is only when an innuendo is unreasonable or forced that a Court is entitled to reject it.

I am therefore for recalling the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor and allowing the issue.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, and approved of the issue proposed by the pursuer.

BRYSON & GRANT, S.S.C.—MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 181.

July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

MRS AGNES BOYLE OR WALSH, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Clyde, K.C.—Hunter.

PROVOST AND MAGISTRATES OF POLLOKSHAWS AND OTHERS, Defenders (Respondents).—C. N. Johnston, K.C.—Orr.

Public-House—Licensing Court—Certificate—Refusal to renew certificate—Discretion of Licensing Authority—Grounds on which reduction of the deliverance of a Licensing Court will be granted—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. c. 25), sec. 11.—A licence-holder, who had been refused a renewal of her certificate, raised an action for the reduction of the deliverance of the Licensing Court on the ground that their proceedings had been illegal, unjudicial, and oppressive. She averred that she had received no notice of any objection to the renewal of her certificate, and that no complaint had been made as to the conduct of her business or the sanitary condition of her premises; that at the Licensing Court formal objection having been taken to the renewal on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested, she was heard through her agent, and offered to carry out any recommendations the Court might make in regard to the sanitary arrangements of the premises; that thereupon the Court, without hearing evidence in support of the objections, refused to renew the certificate on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested. She further averred that the Magistrates who formed the Court had prejudged the question by having come to a resolution prior to the sitting of the Court to reduce the number of licensed premises in the district.

Held (1) that the Court cannot interfere with the discretion of the licensing authority exercised within the limits of its statutory jurisdiction, unless it has failed to give a judicial consideration to the application before it; (2) that the averments set forth disclosed no case of the licensing authority having exceeded their statutory jurisdiction or having failed to give a judicial consideration to the pursuer's application.

Lundie v. Magistrates of Falkirk, Oct. 31, 1890, 18 R. 60, commented on; Evans v. Conway Justices, [1900] 2 Q. B. 224, and Raven v. Southampton Justices, [1904] 1 K. B. 430, distinguished.

1st DIVISION. with three consulted Judges. Ld. Kyllachy.

MRS AGNES BOYLE OR WALSH, recently spirit merchant, 81 King Street, Pollokshaws, raised an action against (first) the Provost and Magistrates of Pollokshaws, as the licensing authority of the burgh, and (second) the members of the Licensing Appeal Court for the burgh that sat on 5th May 1904, in which she sought for reduction of (1) a deliverance of the Licensing Court of Pollokshaws, dated 12th April 1904, refusing her application for a renewal of her public-house certificate, and (2) a deliverance of the Licensing Appeal Court refusing her appeal against the foresaid deliverance. The summons also concluded for declaratory findings as to the defenders' duty "to hear and determine judicially the cause or matter raised by the pursuer's application for renewal," and of their failure to do so; and asked for decree ordaining them to hold a Court to do so, or otherwise to grant her a public-house certificate for the current year.

No. 181. July 19, 1905. Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

The pursuer set forth that she was the widow of a spirit merchant, and that, on her husband's death in February 1902, she had obtained a transfer of his certificate for licensed premises at 81 King Street, Pollokshaws, that that was her sole means of subsistence, and that the certificate had been renewed in 1902 and 1903. She stated that her husband had purchased the business in 1900, and that for fifty years previously the premises had been licensed in favour of her husband's predecessor and his father. She further averred;—(Cond. 4) "At the Licensing Court on 12th April 1904 applications were made for the renewal of thirty-five public-house certificates in the burgh. The Magistrates dealt with various of these applications in four groups. The first group consisted of six applications, the second group consisted of ten, the third of five, and the fourth of eight applications. The remainder of the thirty-five were treated separately. The pursuer's application was in the third group of five. These were first all called together. Each of the applicants was then heard separately. When pursuer's agent moved for the renewal, Inspector Alexander Geddes, of the Renfrewshire County Police, verbally objected to the renewal on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested. He did not in stating the objections give any explanation as to the alleged insanitary condition, and as to in what respect it consisted, but merely stated the pro forma objection, nor did he give any explanation as to the alleged congested condition of the district, and no questions were asked on these points by the Magistrates. The Procurator-fiscal for the burgh was present, but did not object. The said Alexander Geddes was not put on oath, and did not farther explain in what respect the premises were insanitary, and no evidence was led in support of either of said objections. After Inspector Geddes had verbally intimated his said objections, the pursuer's agent, in respect of the powers of the Licensing Court under the Act of 1903, sec. 42, subsec. 3, informed the Court that the pursuer would undertake, if her application were granted, to carry out any recommendation the Court might make in regard to the sanitary arrangements of the premises, but his offer was disregarded. In point of fact, as the Court knew nothing about the sanitary condition of the premises, and made no inquiry, they could make no recommendation. After hearing the agent for the pursuer, the members of the Court, without calling for evidence, retired to consider the pursuer's application along with the four applications in the same group by other persons for renewal of certificates for other premises, and on returning to the Court-Hall the said Provost Robert Wilson, as chairman, intimated that the Court refused two of the applications, including the pursuer's, on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested, and her application was accordingly refused by the said Court. No indication whatever was given, or has yet been given, in what respect pursuer's premises were insanitary." (Cond. 6) "Said refusal to renew pursuer's licence was in pursuance of a preconceived determination of the Magistrates of Pollokshaws adopted prior to the said Licensing Court. On 1st April 1904 the Town-clerk, acting on behalf of the Magistrates, sent a letter to the pursuer and each of the other licence-holders in the following terms:—'After full consideration of all circumstances, the Magistrates, at a meeting last night, were unanimously of opinion that the number of licensed premises in the burgh of Pollokshaws is greatly in excess of the reasonable requirements of the inhabitants.

No. 181.
July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

'In view of this they have instructed me to write to all certificate-holders in the burgh and inquire whether they have any scheme to propose or any suggestion to make whereby the number of licences may be reduced for the ensuing year.

'You are requested to let me have a reply to this communication not later than 7th inst.—Yours truly,

'ROBERT BRYCE WALKER, Town-clerk.'

The Magistrates in so acting and arriving at their unanimous opinion, and that before the statutory Licensing Court, exceeded their statutory powers and duties, acted illegally, and to the pursuer's serious loss and prejudice. To this circular letter the Magistrates received a reply from the licence-holders collectively and from individual licence-holders personally. As their replies did not satisfy them they arranged that Inspector Geddes should take objections to certain of the renewals in order to give them the opportunity of making the reduction on which they had determined. And at the said Licensing Court the Magistrates dealt with the applications without having any evidence before them that the district was over-supplied or which would enable them to discriminate among the various premises for the suppression of any of them, and in particular, having no evidence before them that the pursuer's premises were insanitary, but disposed of the applications entirely on their own preconceived determination." In Cond. 8 the pursuer averred that the members of the Licensing Court, before calling the applicants before them, received deputations from certain bodies hostile to the granting of public-house certificates. That the hearing of those deputations, who had no locus standi to object, was irregular, and had biassed the Court against renewing the pursuer's certificate.

Cond. 9 was as follows:—(Cond. 9) "The refusal to renew the pursuer's certificate was unwarranted, and the grounds given by the Magistrates were not such as they were entitled in law to proceed upon. Her premises were in the same condition, so far as sanitary arrangements are concerned, as they had been in for many years without any objection being taken thereto. The said defenders were bound, before proceeding upon such a ground to refuse a renewal of the pursuer's premises, to give her an opportunity of altering said premises to meet the requirements of the Magistrates. The action of the defenders was oppressive. Further, the defenders were not entitled to single out the pursuer's licence as they did and arbitrarily to refuse it on the ground that the district in which the pursuer's public-house was situated was congested."

In Cond. 10 the pursuer set forth that she had appealed to the Licensing Appeal Court, and that the Appeal Court "actuated by the same motives and in pursuance of the same preconceived determination" refused to reverse the deliverance appealed against. That no objector appeared in this appeal, and no evidence in support of any objection was heard, and that she had therefore a prima facie right to have her appeal sustained.

No. 181.
July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

The pursuer also averred that the Licensing Court were not entitled to entertain the objection stated by Inspector Geddes, as the superintendent of police was alone entitled, under sections 19 and 20 of the Licensing Act of 1903, to state objections without notice.

In their answers the defenders, while admitting the general accuracy of the pursuer's account of the procedure followed at the Licensing Court, stated that "the Magistrates had visited before the date in question all the licensed premises in the burgh, and were acquainted with the sanitary condition of the pursuer's premises." They also stated (Ans. 4), that Inspector Geddes was authorised in writing by the chief constable to state his (the chief constable's) objections to the renewal of the pursuer's certificate.

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The refusal of the pursuer's application, and the affirmance thereof by the Court of Appeal, should be reduced or declared of no effect in respect the proceedings complained of were outwith the statutes and unlawful. (2) The deliverance of the Magistrates refusing the pursuer a renewal of her certificate ought to be reduced on one or other of the following grounds:—(a) Because the Magistrates had previously to the Licensing Court prejudged the application, by forming a policy to reduce the number of certificates, and separatim, had acted thereon without judicially discriminating. (b) Because of the hearing of deputations adverse to the granting of the pursuer's certificate. (c) Because the said Alexander Geddes (he not being a chief constable or superintendent of police), was heard by the Magistrates without his having given notice of objection to the renewal of the pursuer's certificate. (d) Because the Magistrates had no evidence before them on the subject of the objections in respect of which they refused the pursuer's application for renewal. (e) Because the grounds stated by the Magistrates for the refusal to renew the pursuer's certificate were not grounds upon which they were entitled to proceed. (3) The pursuer, under the Licensing Acts and at common law, is, in respect of the special circumstances condescended on by her, entitled to decree or decrees in terms of the conclusions of the summons.

The defenders pleaded;—(2) No relevant case. (3) The whole actings of the said Magistrates in the matter libelled being lawful and regular, and being within their powers and discretion, the action is groundless, and these defenders should be assoilzied, with expenses. (4) The objections stated in the Licensing Court against pursuer's application being lawful and competent, the deliverance of the Magistrates is not open to reduction on the ground that said objections were heard by the Magistrates.

The Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy), on 24th December 1904, pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Lord Ordinary, having heard counsel in the Procedure-roll, finds that, apart from the pursuer's averments in condescendence 4 relating to the alleged departure by the Magistrates from the statutory enactments on receiving and entertaining an objection to the renewal of the pursuer's licence stated by Alexander Geddes therein designed, the pursuer has stated no relevant case for the interference of the Court: Therefore repels the pursuer's pleas except so far as founded on said alleged illegal procedure; and in respect

No. 181.
July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Polloksbaws.

that the parties are at issue as to the facts regarding the said procedure, and are agreed that the same must be ascertained by a proof before further answer, allows to both parties a proof of their respective averments as to said matter as contained in condescendence 4 and the defenders' answer thereto, and to the pursuer a conjunct probation. . . ."

The pursuer reclaimed, and, after the hearing, the Court ordered the case to be re-argued before a Court of seven Judges.

At the hearing before the seven Judges the pursuer argued;—The whole averments of the pursuer were relevant, and should have been admitted to probation. It was no doubt the case that the discretion of the licensing authority was absolute, and their refusal to renew a licence could not be reviewed on its merits, but their decision must be arrived at in a judicial manner or it would be subject to reduction. Here the pursuer's averments clearly set forth a non-judicial exercise of this discretion. The Magistrates had acted oppressively with regard to the alleged insanitary state of the premises. No notice of this objection had been given; the pursuer had been afforded no opportunity of remedying it; and her offer to do so had been ignored. By section 42, subsection (2), of the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903,* she could not remedy it herself, but could only do so with the consent of the Licensing Court; that consent had been refused, and this provision had thus been oppressively used to deprive the pursuer of her licence. The case of Lundie[1] was not conclusive of the matter, for that case dealt with illegal proceedings rather than with want of judicial consideration. In any event the law had been carried much further since that time by a series of English decisions following on Sharp v. Wakefield.[2] In these cases it was established that the Court must not proceed on a preconceived determination, and must have evidence on which to base its decisions. Although the English Licensing Acts differed in some particulars from the Scotch Acts, the principles underlying these decisions were equally applicable to Scotland. Here there were averments of preconceived determination and of absence of evidence sufficient to justify reduction. Even if congestion of the district were a sufficient reason for reducing the licences, there must be evidence to shew why the pursuer's licence should be selected for

---

* The Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. c. 25), enacts, sec. 11 (dealing with meetings at the Licensing Court at which certificates to keep public-houses are granted),—". . . Provided always that all such meetings shall be held with open doors, and that it shall not be competent to refuse the renewal of any certificate without hearing the party in support of the application for renewal in open Court, if such party shall think fit to attend, and any certificate granted otherwise than at such meetings shall be void and of no effect. . . ."

Sec. 42, subsec. (2), "Any reconstruction of or alteration in any licensed premises for the sale by retail of exciseable liquors to be consumed thereon, shall not be made without the consent of the Licensing Court . . . ; and if any such reconstruction or alteration is made, save under the order of some lawful authority, without such consent as aforesaid, the Sheriff . . . may by order declare the certificate to be forfeited, or direct that, within a time fixed by the order, the premises shall be restored to their original condition."

[1] Lundie v. Magistrates of Falkirk, Oct. 31, 1890, 18 R. 60.

[2] Sharp v. Wakefield, [1891] A. C. 173; Evans v. Conway Justices, [1900] 2 Q. B. 224; Rex v. Howard, [1902] 2 K. B. 363; Raven v. Southampton Justices, [1904] 1 K. B. 430.

No. 181. July 19, 1905. Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

tion" refused to reverse the deliverance appealed against. That no objector appeared in this appeal, and no evidence in support of any objection was heard, and that she had therefore a prima facie right to have her appeal sustained.

The pursuer also averred that the Licensing Court were not entitled to entertain the objection stated by Inspector Geddes, as the superintendent of police was alone entitled, under sections 19 and 20 of the Licensing Act of 1903, to state objections without notice.

In their answers the defenders, while admitting the general accuracy of the pursuer's account of the procedure followed at the Licensing Court, stated that "the Magistrates had visited before the date in question all the licensed premises in the burgh, and were acquainted with the sanitary condition of the pursuer's premises." They also stated (Ans. 4), that Inspector Geddes was authorised in writing by the chief constable to state his (the chief constable's) objections to the renewal of the pursuer's certificate.

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The refusal of the pursuer's application, and the affirmance thereof by the Court of Appeal, should be reduced or declared of no effect in respect the proceedings complained of were outwith the statutes and unlawful. (2) The deliverance of the Magistrates refusing the pursuer a renewal of her certificate ought to be reduced on one or other of the following grounds:—(a) Because the Magistrates had previously to the Licensing Court prejudged the application, by forming a policy to reduce the number of certificates, and separatim, had acted thereon without judicially discriminating. (b) Because of the hearing of deputations adverse to the granting of the pursuer's certificate. (c) Because the said Alexander Geddes (he not being a chief constable or superintendent of police), was heard by the Magistrates without his having given notice of objection to the renewal of the pursuer's certificate. (d) Because the Magistrates had no evidence before them on the subject of the objections in respect of which they refused the pursuer's application for renewal. (e) Because the grounds stated by the Magistrates for the refusal to renew the pursuer's certificate were not grounds upon which they were entitled to proceed. (3) The pursuer, under the Licensing Acts and at common law, is, in respect of the special circumstances condescended on by her, entitled to decree or decrees in terms of the conclusions of the summons.

The defenders pleaded;—(2) No relevant case. (3) The whole actings of the said Magistrates in the matter libelled being lawful and regular, and being within their powers and discretion, the action is groundless, and these defenders should be assoilzied, with expenses. (4) The objections stated in the Licensing Court against pursuer's application being lawful and competent, the deliverance of the Magistrates is not open to reduction on the ground that said objections were heard by the Magistrates.

The Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy), on 24th December 1904, pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Lord Ordinary, having heard counsel in the Procedure-roll, finds that, apart from the pursuer's averments in condescendence 4 relating to the alleged departure by the Magistrates from the statutory enactments on receiving and entertaining an objection to the renewal of the pursuer's licence stated by Alexander Geddes therein designed, the pursuer has stated no relevant case for the interference of the Court: Therefore repels the pursuer's pleas except so far as founded on said alleged illegal procedure; and in respect that the parties are at issue as to the facts regarding the said procedure, and are agreed that the same must be ascertained by a proof before further answer, allows to both parties a proof of their respective averments as to said matter as contained in condescendence 4 and the defenders' answer thereto, and to the pursuer a conjunct probation. . . ."

The pursuer reclaimed, and, after the hearing, the Court ordered the case to be re-argued before a Court of seven Judges.

At the hearing before the seven Judges the pursuer argued;—The whole averments of the pursuer were relevant, and should have been admitted to probation. It was no doubt the case that the discretion of the licensing authority was absolute, and their refusal to renew a licence could not be reviewed on its merits, but their decision must be arrived at in a judicial manner or it would be subject to reduction. Here the pursuer's averments clearly set forth a non-judicial exercise of this discretion. The Magistrates had acted oppressively with regard to the alleged insanitary state of the premises. No notice of this objection had been given; the pursuer had been afforded no opportunity of remedying it; and her offer to do so had been ignored. By section 42, subsection (2), of the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903,* she could not remedy it herself, but could only do so with the consent of the Licensing Court; that consent had been refused, and this provision had thus been oppressively used to deprive the pursuer of her licence. The case of Lundie[1] was not conclusive of the matter, for that case dealt with illegal proceedings rather than with want of judicial consideration. In any event the law had been carried much further since that time by a series of English decisions following on Sharp v. Wakefield.[2] In these cases it was established that the Court must not proceed on a preconceived determination, and must have evidence on which to base its decisions. Although the English Licensing Acts differed in some particulars from the Scotch Acts, the principles underlying these decisions were equally applicable to Scotland. Here there were averments of preconceived determination and of absence of evidence sufficient to justify reduction. Even if congestion of the district were a sufficient reason for reducing the licences, there must be evidence to shew why the pursuer's licence should be selected for

* The Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. VII. c. 25), enacts, sec. 11 (dealing with meetings at the Licensing Court at which certificates to keep public-houses are granted),—". . . Provided always that all such meetings shall be held with open doors, and that it shall not be competent to refuse the renewal of any certificate without hearing the party in support of the application for renewal in open Court, if such party shall think fit to attend, and any certificate granted otherwise than at such meetings shall be void and of no effect. . . ."

Sec. 42, subsec. (2), "Any reconstruction of or alteration in any licensed premises for the sale by retail of exciseable liquors to be consumed thereon, shall not be made without the consent of the Licensing Court . . . ; and if any such reconstruction or alteration is made, save under the order of some lawful authority, without such consent as aforesaid, the Sheriff . . . may by order declare the certificate to be forfeited, or direct that, within a time fixed by the order, the premises shall be restored to their original condition."

[1] Lundie v. Magistrates of Falkirk, Oct. 31, 1890, 18 R. 60.

[2] Sharp v. Wakefield, [1891] A. C. 173; Evans v. Conway Justices, [1900] 2 Q. B. 224; Rex v. Howard, [1902] 2 K. B. 363; Raven v. Southampton Justices, [1904] 1 K. B. 430.

No. 181. refusal. The decision of the Licensing Appeal Court was not decisive, for the same principles were applicable to its decisions also.[1]

July 19, 1905. Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

The respondents, while not objecting to the limited allowance of proof that the Lord Ordinary had allowed, argued;—In Scotland the licensing authority had absolute discretion to refuse renewal of a licence merely because they were of opinion that the district was congested. They were under no obligation to state the reasons for their refusal. Even if a reason for determination were necessary they had one here in the fact that these premises were the least satisfactory from a sanitary point of view. They were under no obligation to allow the pursuer to reconstruct her premises, and even had they allowed it, it did not follow that she would of right have been entitled to a renewal. As far as Scotch authority went the Magistrates' discretion could not be interfered with so long as they had not exceeded their statutory jurisdiction.[2] The English authorities cited were inapplicable, as they all turned on the procedure enactments of the English Acts, which were different from those in the Scotch Acts. The corresponding provisions in the Scotch Act of 1903 were in section 11, which provided for the hearing of the applicant in open Court, and that had been done here. Subject to that provision the Licensing Court had absolute discretion, and it was incompetent to inquire into the reasons or methods of its decisions.[3]

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this case the pursuer is a Mrs Walsh, who until recently was a licence-holder in a shop in Pollokshaws. The defenders are the licensing authorities of Pollokshaws, constituted under the recent Act, and the Appeal Court of the burgh of Pollokshaws and county of Renfrew, who are the appeal authority under the same Act. The pursuer got a renewal of the licence in the premises which she recently occupied in the years 1902 and 1903. She succeeded her husband, deceased, who had acquired the business about two years before, the business being at that time an old one, and having, as we are told, had a licence for a period of about fifty years. At the Licensing Court in April 1904 the pursuer was refused a renewal of her licence, and the present action is brought by her, and directed against the licensing authority, and seeks for reduction of the proceedings then carried through, upon various grounds which are set forth in her condescendence.

Now, the averments in the condescendence are contained specially in cond. 4 and following articles. I shall not read them at length to your Lordships, but for practical purposes they may be summarised thus—the pursuer says that before her appearance at the Court, where I need not remind you she was about to seek renewal of the licence, no objection had ever been taken to the way in which she conducted her business in any respect, but that, when she got to the Court, she heard for the first time an objection stated, which was stated by a certain inspector, Alexander Geddes, of the Renfrewshire County Police. The objection stated by him was [1] Evans v. Conway Justices, supra.

[2] Lundie v. Magistrates of Falkirk, 18 R. 60; Millar v. Campbell, Jan. 17, 1849, 11 D. 355; Cameron v. Magistrates of Glasgow, Feb. 20, 1903, 5 F. 490.

[3] Boulter v. Kent Justices, [1897] A. C. 556.

No. 181.

July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

twofold, and was that the pursuer's premises were insanitary, and the district congested.

Now, I ought to explain that Alexander Geddes was, as I have said, an inspector; but he was not the chief constable. Your Lordships will remember that under the provisions of the Act it is laid down that no objection shall be dealt with of which due notice, as prescribed by the Act, has not been given, except that there are certain privileged persons who may state objections on the spot, of whom the chief constable is one. Alexander Geddes, we are told, affected to act on behalf of the chief constable, but was not the chief constable himself. In that state of the averments Lord Kyllachy, before whom the case depended, pronounced this interlocutor—"Finds that apart from the pursuer's averments in cond. 4 relating to the alleged departure by the Magistrates from the statutory enactments on receiving and entertaining an objection to the renewal of the pursuer's licence stated by Alexander Geddes therein designed, the pursuer has stated no relevant case for the interference of the Court: Therefore repels the pursuer's pleas except so far as founded on said alleged illegal procedure; and in respect that the parties are at issue as to the facts regarding the said procedure, and are agreed that the same must be ascertained by a proof before further answer, allows to both parties a proof of their respective averments as to said matter as contained in cond. 4 and the defender's answer thereto, and to the pursuer a conjunct probation." Against that interlocutor this reclaiming note has been taken, the pursuer urging that she should be entitled to a proof of the whole of her averments on record. The respondents do not desire to disturb the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, and therefore in any case there must be a proof upon the limited matter allowed.

The Lord Ordinary's interlocutor is confessedly based upon the judgment which was pronounced by this Division of the Court in the case of Lundie v. Magistrates of Falkirk.[1] The facts in that case are these:—Lundie, who was a public-house keeper, and had applied in ordinary form for a renewal of his certificate, had his certificate refused, and the ground on which it was refused was that he had improperly conducted his house; and the way in which that was sought to be proved in Court was that two constables deponed to having seen drunk persons issuing from the public-house, and that state of facts was corroborated by the personal knowledge of the presiding member of the Licensing Court at that time. Lundie complained that he had not had an opportunity of shewing, as he said he was prepared to shew, that these drunk persons had not been supplied with liquor by him, and that so far consequently from the fact of these drunk persons having been seen issuing from his public-house being evidence of the bad keeping of the public-house, it really, if the facts had been truly known, would have proved something quite the other way, namely, that in his anxiety to obey the conditions of his certificate by maintaining good order and rule in his premises, he had properly turned away men who had entered his premises intoxicated without supplying them with further liquor, so as not to contravene the statute. He complained that, though he could prove all these facts, he never had an opportunity of doing so, and judgment had been pronounced de plano against him. Now, the reasons that are alleged why the application of Lundie's[1] case to the present case should be considered or reconsidered are these—in the first place, that that case was under a different Act, for, as your Lordships know, a recent Act has passed since that date; and secondly, that that case was decided upon 31st October 1890, whereas the well-known case of Sharp v. Wakefield,[2] in the House of Lords, was not decided until 1891.

[1] 18 R. 60.

No. 181. July 19, 1905. Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

As regards the first point—I mean the point of the difference of the two Acts—there is no doubt one specialty in Lundie's case,[1] which does not apply to this. Lord President Inglis, who delivered the judgment of the Court in Lundie's case, says at one portion of his judgment,—"When an appeal is given to a particular tribunal, that would in ordinary circumstances impliedly exclude any other appeal; but in the present case the statutes do not leave the matter there, for they provide not only that there shall be an appeal to the Quarter-Sessions, but by the 34th section of the Act 25 and 26 Vict. cap. 35"—that being the ruling licensing Act in this country at that date—"it is further provided that no warrant, sentence, order, decree, judgment, or decision made or given by any Quarter-Sessions, Sheriff, Justice or Justices of the Peace, or Magistrate in any matter under the authority of these Acts shall be subject to reduction, or appeal, or any other form of review, on any ground or for any reason whatever, other than by this Act provided." So that to a certain extent, no doubt, the Lord President in that case did go upon the finality clause, and he held that, as this was a judgment given by the Justices of the Peace and Quarter-Sessions, the finality clause applied. Now, that cannot be said of the present Act, because the finality clause in the present Act is in somewhat different terms. The finality clause of the present Act is embodied in section 103, and it is this,—"No warrant, sentence, order, decree, judgment, or decision made or given by any Quarter-Sessions, Sheriff, Justice, or Justices of the Peace, or Magistrate in any cause, prosecution, or complaint, or in any other matter under the authority of this Act, shall be subject to reduction," and so on. Now, it is clear on the construction of that section that that applies to matters such as prosecutions, and that it does not apply to decisions given by a Licensing Court, because a Licensing Court is a specially constituted Court under the Act and does not come under the nomenclature of Quarter-Sessions, Sheriff, or Justices of the Peace, or Magistrates; and accordingly the pursuer is probably entitled to say that in so far as Lord President Inglis' judgment in Lundie's case[1] rested on the finality clause, she has been able to make good a distinction between the state of the law as it existed then and the state of the law as it exists now. But that I think is all that can be said upon the differences between the two cases. As your Lordships know, the recent Act made no difference, on what may be called the general scheme of licensing, from the old law. It altered the tribunal, making a specially constituted tribunal instead of Justices of Peace in counties and Magistrates in cities, which was the old tribunal, and it constituted a new Appeal Court; but it left the [1] 18 R. 60. [2] [1891] A. C. 173.

No. 181.
July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

general scheme of the law as to the granting of licences, and in particular it left the whole question as to discretion, precisely where it found it. Accordingly the subsequent remarks of Lord President Inglis may be right or may be wrong, but I do not think that they can be fairly put aside because they were made under a different Act. I think, for his purpose, they might just as well have been made under the present Act. His Lordship goes on thus. He says,—"I cannot comprehend upon what ground we are asked to entertain this reduction. The true nature of the action is not disguised. We are asked to reduce the proceedings of the Justices upon their merits—perhaps not in this sense, that the pursuer of the reduction takes up the position that the Court came to a wrong conclusion upon the evidence before it. It may be that the ground of objection is that the defenders did not take the proper evidence to enable them to decide the question before them, or that they excluded evidence which ought to have been admitted, or allowed evidence which ought to have been excluded. But all these things are within the jurisdiction of the Court to whom is committed a privity of jurisdiction under the statutes, and we have nothing to do with the way in which that Court conducts its inquiry, or with the propriety of its proceedings, any more than we have with the general result at which it may arrive. In short, we are not entitled to touch a judgment of the Justices or of the Quarter-Sessions unless it can be shewn that these tribunals, or either of them, have exceeded their statutory jurisdiction, and I cannot find any relevant averment in the present case that they have done so."

Now, it remains for us therefore to see whether or not, in the light of what I think now must be considered a supreme authority, namely, in the light of what the Lord Chancellor said in the case of Sharp v. Wakefield,[1] there is anything to take back from this observation of Lord President Inglis. I am bound to say I do not think there is, except to this extent, that there may be a criticism on the actual form of the words used, especially where he says that the tribunals cannot be touched unless they have exceeded their statutory jurisdiction. But even then I think a good deal depends on how you construe these words, "exceeded their statutory jurisdiction." The leading passage in the case of Sharp v. Wakefield[1] is a passage in the judgment of Lord Halsbury, the Lord Chancellor, on page 179, where his Lordship says this,—"An extensive power is confided to the Justices in their capacity as Justices to be exercised judicially; and 'discretion' means, when it is said that something is to be done within the discretion of the authorities, that that something is to be done according to the rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion . . . according to law and not humour. It is to be not arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular." If, consequently, you were to read the words "exceed their statutory jurisdiction" in their very narrowest sense, then I admit that I think the words used by Lord President Inglis would require reconsideration, but I am not at all sure that his Lordship used them in their narrowest sense, and I have not the slightest doubt that, if the question could have been put to him, he would have quite admitted that if the

[1] [1891] A. C. 173.

No. 181.
July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

Justices or tribunal he was then dealing with—and the same is to be said of the tribunal we are now dealing with—should have so flagrantly violated all conditions which shew a judicial spirit, they might be interfered with to the extent of being told that they must consider the matter in a judicial frame of mind.

But as regards the merits it seems to me that the judgment of Lord President Inglis remains, that no change is made by the recent Act, and that on the merits the tribunals are absolute Judges. And when I say "the merits," I mean not an adjudication of right on the one side or on the other, but the right to say "Aye" or "No" to an application, after having given a judicial consideration to the request. As I have said, I think that, on the question of evidence, there might be such a flagrant departure from all laws and practice of judicial consideration as to admit of interference by this Court. I think the analogy is very close between this matter and one on which there is much authority, namely, where the Court will interfere with the proceedings of an arbiter, and, without citing further authority on that I will only say that I know no authority from which may better be gathered the true rules under which this Court will proceed than by a contrast of the circumstances of the two old but well-known cases of Mitchell[1] and Mowbray,[2] which are both reported in the tenth volume of Dunlop.

Now, what is it that is said here? It is said that there was no evidence allowed as to the insanitary condition of these premises, but, on the other hand, one is not entitled to disregard the fact that these persons were local gentlemen, and that they might have personal knowledge of the subject which made it in their view useless for them to insist upon evidence in the matter. Then it is also said that there was an offer to put the premises right. Now, if putting them right would have given the licence-holder a right to the licence, then certainly I should have been of opinion that the disregarding of that offer would have amounted to substantial injustice. But if the premises had been put right it gave the licence-holder no absolute right in law to have his licence. The licensing authorities were perfectly entitled, if they chose, to go upon this view, that the district was what they called congested—that is to say, in other words, that there were more public-houses than the public required, and I think all that they needed over and above that was that they must give personal consideration—I mean in the sense of not mixing it up with other cases—to the case on hand. They were entitled to refuse A or B or C for any reason that seemed best to them, as long as they had truly considered the cases of A and B and C, and, whether in my view it would have been a good reason or not, I cannot say that I think it is an illegal reason, that they refused A and preferred B upon the ground that, in the past, A's premises had not been in such a good sanitary condition as B's, even although they were met with a standing offer on the part of A that, if they chose, A would put his premises in as good a condition as B's were. They did in this case all that they were bound to do under section 11 of the Act, which, dealing with the granting

[1] Mitchell v. Cubla, June 17, 1848, 10 D. 1297.
[2] Mowbray v. Dickson, June 2, 1848, 10 D. 1102.

No. 181.

July 19, 1905.
Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

of certificates, provides that it shall not be lawful to refuse a certificate without hearing the party in support of the application in open Court. Now, if they had contravened that provision, then I think this Court would have had a jurisdiction to interfere, but they did not do that, and, for the reasons I have stated, I do not think that here we could interfere upon the ground that, if we had to form our opinions, we would have liked more evidence on this matter or the other. These are my views formed on the Act.

But the pursuer here urged very strongly upon your Lordships, and that very rightly, certain decisions which have been come to in England, which, though not binding on us, are, I need scarcely say, entitled to the very greatest respect. The decisions which she brought before our notice were, first, the decision of Evans v. The Justices of Conway.[1] The rubric, which is short, brings out the point of the case well enough. It is this:—"On an appeal to Quarter-Sessions against the refusal of Licensing Justices to renew a licence, the Quarter-Sessions are not entitled to refuse to renew the licence without evidence of any ground of objection to its renewal." And the case was followed in the case of Raven v. Justices of Southampton,[2] where although there was not in one sense no evidence at all, there was something which the Court held tantamount to no evidence. There was the mere production of a map shewing public-houses upon it, but not shewing anything about one particular house as against another. Now, the reclaimer argued that these cases were decided after Sharp v. Wakefield[3]—in other words, that they would live with Sharp v. Wakefield,[3] but were explanatory of the discretion as set forth in Sharp v. Wakefield[3]—and she asked your Lordships to come to the same conclusion in this case. But without for one moment saying that I, if I had been on that bench, would not have agreed with these judgments, I am bound to say I think they were pronounced upon a law which differs in one very important particular from the law which we are now administering. The section on which much turns on this matter is the 42d section of the Licensing Act of 1872.[4] I am of course referring to the English Act. Now, that section has provisions as to the renewal of licences, and is in the following terms:—"Where a licensed person applies for the renewal of his licence the following provisions shall have effect:—(1) He need not attend in person . . . unless he is required by the Licensing Justices so to attend. (2) The Justices shall not entertain any objection to the renewal of such licence, or take any evidence with respect to the renewal thereof, unless written notice of an intention to oppose the renewal of such licence has been served on such holder not less than seven days before the commencement of the General Annual Licensing Meeting . . . (3) The Justices shall not receive any evidence with respect to the renewal of such licence which is not given on oath"; and then it goes on to say,—"Subject as aforesaid, licences shall be renewed and the powers and discretion of Justices relative to such renewal shall be exercised as heretofore." I need scarcely point out that we have nothing at all corresponding to that section. That section

[1] [1900] 2 Q. B. 224.
[2] [1904] 1 K. B. 430.
[3] [1891] A. C. 173.
[4] 35 and 36 Vict. c. 94.

No. 181. July 19, 1905. Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws.

was greatly canvassed in the case of Sharp v. Wakefield,[1] because of course it was really a strong point of those who argued against the decision of Sharp v. Wakefield[1] as it was eventually given. They argued, naturally enough, that these words which I have read at the end of the section left no discretion in the Justices at all, but shewed that if these things were not done the right to renewal was an absolute right. The House of Lords held otherwise, and it assigned to section 42 its proper place. It said, 42 is a procedure section, and that procedure must be followed; but subject to that procedure being followed, then the Justices have got full discretion.

Now, I think, in the light of the decision in Sharp v. Wakefield[1] when it is properly considered, it is not at all difficult to see the true ground of judgment in Evans v. The Conway Justices[2] and Raven v. The Justices of Southampton.[3] These decisions simply amount to this, and nothing more, that they are a finding that in these cases the provisions of section 42 had not been followed, and accordingly, if they had been disregarded, I say no doubt the Court was perfectly right in setting aside the judgment, just as if we had a completely analogous case here, I should think we would be right in setting aside the judgment if the provisions of that particular procedure section I have referred to, section 11, had not been followed in this case. I should have been prepared then to interfere with the judgment, just as they did there, but I do not think these decisions can be raised beyond that, looking to the interpretation authoritatively given to section 42 by the House of Lords in the case of Wakefield.[1]

Accordingly, I have come to the conclusion on the whole matter that the judgment of Lord Kyllachy was right, and that we ought to adhere thereto.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK, LORD ADAM, LORD M'LAREN, LORD KINNEAR, LORD KINCAIRNEY, and LORD STORMONTH-DARLING concurred.

THE COURT adhered.

JAMES PURVES, S.S.C.—INGLIS, ORR, & BRUCE, W.S.—Agents.

No. 182. July 19, 1905. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

CALEDONIAN RAILWAY COMPANY, Pursuers.—Clyde, K.C.—Cooper, K.C.—King.

CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF GLASGOW AND ANOTHER, Defenders.—Campbell, K.C.—Wilson, K.C.—M. P. Fraser.

Process—Statutory Remedy—Sheriff—Declarator and reduction pending statutory appeal—Competency—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.), sec. 9 (2).—The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, by sec. 9 (2), directs that a Register of Streets shall be prepared, in which, inter alia, the width of streets may be entered, and that any proprietor aggrieved by any entry in the register may appeal to the Sheriff, whose decision shall be final.

A proprietor of subjects fronting on various streets in Glasgow brought an action in the Court of Session for declarator that the width of streets entered in the register must be the actual width, and that the width entered in certain cases opposite his properties was not the actual width, with conclusions for deletion of the entries and for interdict, and reduction. On the same date he appealed to the Sheriff against these entries.

[1] [1891] A. C. 173. [2] [1900] 2 Q. B. 224.
[3] [1904] 1 K. B. 430.

No. 182.

July 19, 1905.

Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

Held (by First Division with three consulted Judges) that the action, although not incompetent, was premature, and fell to be dismissed.

Police—Street—Building Regulations—Width of Street—Burgh—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.), secs. 4, 9 (2), and 20.—Opinion (per cur.) that in preparing the Register of Streets provided for by sec. 9 (2) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, "the width" of streets when entered therein must be the actual width of the street at the various points in its course, and not an ideal width fixed with a view to a public improvement.

1st Division. with three consulted Judges. Lord Low.

THE CALEDONIAN RAILWAY COMPANY, on 30th July 1904, brought an action against the Corporation of the City of Glasgow and Thomas Nisbet, Registrar of Public Streets, appointed under the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,* in which the pursuers concluded,

---

* The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.), enacts:—Sec. 4, inter alia,—"'Public Street' means any road, street, lane, vennel, wynd, alley, bridge, quay, passage, square, or other place within the city used either by carts or foot-passengers which has been maintained by the Corporation, or which is by the Police Acts or shall hereafter in pursuance thereof be declared to be a public street."

"'Width' in relation to street or lane means the width of the carriageway and foot-pavements taken together."

Part II.—Streets.—Sec. 9 (1) "(Register of Public Streets).—'The Register of Public Streets' kept under the Act of 1866, with the additions and alterations made or to be made thereon, shall continue in force until the new Register of Public Streets hereinafter provided for is completed."

(2) (a). "(Register and Map of Streets).—The Corporation shall on or before the 1st day of January in the year 1902, or as soon as conveniently may be thereafter, cause a register (hereinafter referred to as 'The Register') to be prepared of all the public streets then in existence in the city, in which may be entered with regard to each such street:—(1) The name; (2) the situation by reference to numbers or other marks on the map hereinafter mentioned; (3) the point of commencement and termination; (4) the width; (5) the distance between the centre of the street and the building line, where such building line is fixed by statute, decree of the Sheriff or the Dean of Guild, or any resolution of the Sheriff or the Dean of Guild, or any resolution of the Corporation under or in pursuance of the provisions of this Act; (6) the character, whether an ordinary street, or a lane or court, and whether formerly a turnpike road, statute-labour road, or highway; (7) any other particulars which the Corporation may prescribe in pursuance of agreements between the Corporation and the owners of lands and heritages adjoining to and having a right of access by such street or in pursuance of any decree of the Dean of Guild.

"The Corporation shall further, on or before the said first day of January in the year 1902, or as soon as conveniently may be thereafter, cause the said streets to be marked and the area thereof coloured upon an Ordnance Survey map (hereinafter referred to as 'the map')."

(b) contains provisions as to public exhibition of the register for two months after notice by advertisement, and directs intimation by post to owners of lands.

(c). "Any proprietor who may be aggrieved by any entry in the register, or omission therefrom, or by any relative marking on the map, may, within the said period of two months, appeal to the Sheriff against the same. The Sheriff shall, after the expiry of the said period of two months, deal with any such appeal in a summary manner, and may order any entry in the register or relative marking on the map to be deleted or inter alia, for declarator (1) "that the defenders are not entitled to insert in the Register of Public Streets prepared under and in terms of the said Act, section 9, subsection (2) (a), under the heading 'Width of Street,' any entry stating, or to make on the Ordnance Survey map referred to in the said section of the said Act any marking shewing the width of street to be greater than the actual width thereof, where the railways, works, or properties of the pursuers front or abut on the same, or where the pursuers are interested therein, and that the width stated in the entries under the said heading and shewn on the said map to be the widths of streets are not the actual width of the following streets, where railways, works, or properties of the pursuers front or abut thereon, or where the pursuers are interested therein, viz.:"—(Then followed a list of streets).

No. 182. July 19, 1905. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

There were also conclusions for deletion of the entries and markings on the map referred to; for interdict against the defenders making or retaining or reinserting in the said register or map any of altered, or direct such other or further entry to be made in the register or marking to be made on the map as he shall think fit, and his decision shall be final. Where any appeal is taken, or where, within the said period of two months, any representation is made to the Corporation with regard to any entry, omission, or marking, the Corporation may, with the consent of the Sheriff, make any alteration on the register and map which may appear necessary."

---

(e). "The register and map, with any deletion, alteration, correction, or addition that may be made on appeal or representatioh as aforesaid, or that may hereafter be made as above provided for, shall be docqueted by the Clerk to the Corporation and the Master of Works, and shall immediately thereon come into operation, and shall fix conclusively the particulars as aforesaid of the streets therein entered."

Sec. 18. "(Grounds for refusal to sanction plans of streets).—The Dean of Guild shall not, except with the consent of the Corporation, and subject to such conditions, if any, as the Corporation may prescribe, grant decree for the formation or laying out of any street:—

"(1) Where the width of such street proposed to be formed or laid out—

(a) Is less than 50 feet; or

(b) Where the width in case of a street the distance of the building lines whereof is at least 30 feet from the centre is less than 36 feet; or

(c) Where the width in case of a street which from the configuration of the ground cannot be built upon except on one side thereof is less than 30 feet. . . ."

Sec. 20. "(Restraining erections within certain distance in streets).—The Dean of Guild shall not, without the consent of the Corporation, grant decree for the erection or re-erection of any building upon ground adjoining any street unless on the condition that one half of the width of such street, measuring such half from the centre of such street towards such ground, shall be cleared of all structures, if any, existing thereon, and shall, subject to the provisions of the Police Acts, be wholly dedicated to the public for street purposes, and this condition shall be presumed to be made by the Dean of Guild in every decree granted by him.

"Where the Dean of Guild shall, with the consent of the Corporation, grant any decree for the erection or re-erection of any such building nearer to the centre of such street than one-half of the width thereof, it shall be a condition of such decree that the space between such building and the centre of such street shall be cleared of all structures, if any, existing thereon, and shall, subject to the provisions of the Police Acts, be wholly

No. 182.

July 19, 1905. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

the foresaid entries or markings; and if necessary for reduction of the said entries and markings.

The register and map prepared under section 9 (2) (a) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, were placed on completion in the office of the clerk to the Corporation on 28th May 1904, and the pursuers received a large number of notices as owners of certain lands and heritages in terms of section 9 (2) (b).

The pursuers set forth in a schedule appended to the summons excerpts from the register of streets of the entries of the several streets in which the pursuers were interested. With regard to these entries the pursuers averred:—(Cond. 7) "In the case of the undernamed streets set forth in the said Schedule No. 1, the width stated in the register under the heading 'Width of Street,' and coloured on the Ordnance Survey map relative to the said register referred to in the said subsection (2) (a) of section 9 of the said Act, is not the width of the street as it actually exists where the pursuers' railways and works or properties are situated or where they front or abut thereon. There is no authority under the statutes in force in the city of Glasgow or otherwise for stating the width of the streets at a different width from that actually existing. In certain cases the width of street as stated in the register and shewn on the map includes not only parts of areas of unbuilt-upon land in front of property belonging to the pursuers, although not actually used as street, but also includes the railways, works, and buildings, and the solum thereof belonging to the pursuers. The following are the streets referred to, viz."—(Then followed a list of streets).*

In answer, the defenders stated:—(Ans. 7) "Admitted that in the case of certain of the streets here specifically enumerated the width in the register under the heading 'Width of street' is not the width of the street as it actually exists where the pursuers' railways, works, and properties are situated, or where they front or abut thereon.

---

dedicated to the public for street purposes, and this condition shall be presumed to be made by the Dean of Guild in every such decree.

"For the purposes of this section the width of a public street shall be the width set forth in the register, where such width is entered therein. And the width of a private street formed with the authority of the Dean of Guild shall be the width specified in the decree authorising the formation or laying out of such street or the width shewn on the plans on which such decree proceeded. And the width of any public street of which the dimensions are not set forth in the register, and of any private street of which the dimensions are not specified or shewn as aforesaid, shall be fixed by the Master of Works. And the position of the centre of any such street shall be defined by the Master of Works with reference to any application which may be made to the Dean of Guild for a lining to erect or re-erect any such building."

Sec. 21. "(Appeal as to width and centre of streets).—Any person deeming himself aggrieved by any determination of the Master of Works under the immediately preceding section, may appeal to the Dean of Guild within fourteen days thereafter, and the Dean of Guild shall thereupon have power to fix such width and define such centre of such street, and in fixing such width the Dean of Guild shall, as far as conveniently may be, have regard to the provisions as to width of streets contained in the section of this Act whereof the marginal note is 'Grounds for refusal to sanction plans of streets'" (viz., sec. 18).

* An example of an entry in the Register and its effect are given in the Lord President's opinion, infra, p. 1028.

No. 182.
July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

Explained that the width of such streets is in all cases properly entered in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, and particularly of sections 9, 18, 20, and 21, and that the colouring on the Ordnance Survey map, relative to the said register, referred to in subsection (2) (a) of section 9 of that Act shews in each case the width of the street as it actually exists opposite the respective properties in those streets. Explained that it is impossible to enter in said register the actual or existing widths of every public street in the city at every point in such streets. In a great number of instances such streets vary in width at numerous points, and would require as many as one hundred entries for one street. The pursuers are called upon to specify in detail the parts of areas of unbuilt-upon land in front of property belonging to them not actually used as street, and also the railway, works, and buildings, and the solum thereof belonging to them which they allege are included in the width of streets. Without such detailed information the defenders are unable to answer more specifically."

The defenders also founded on the fact that the pursuers on 30th July 1904 had appealed to the Sheriff of Lanarkshire under section 9 (2) (c) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, in respect of all entries in the Register of Streets which were objected to in this action, and that these appeals were still pending.

The pursuers pleaded;—(1) The entries in the said register . . . and the markings on the said Ordnance map, being in the respects condescended on unauthorised by the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, it is ultra vires of the defenders to insert them in the Register of Public Streets and mark them on the said Ordnance Survey map, and decree of declarator should be granted as concluded for.

There were also pleas in support of the conclusions for deletion, interdict, and reduction.

The defenders pleaded;—(1) Lis alibi pendens. (2) The action is irrelevant. (3) The action is incompetent, and is excluded in respect the said Glasgow Building Regulations Act determines the pursuers' rights by providing a remedy by appeal to the Sheriff of Lanarkshire at the instance of any proprietor who may be aggrieved by any entry in the register or omission therefrom, or by any relative marking on the map, and the decision of said Sheriff is declared to be final. (4) The pursuers having exercised their right of appeal regarding the whole entries complained of in terms of section 9 (2) (c) of said Act, are barred from suing this action. (5) The entries complained of being authorised by the provisions of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, the defenders should be assoilzied, with expenses.

The case was reported to the First Division by the Lord Ordinary (Low).

On 10th March 1905 the First Division, in respect of the importance of the question raised in the case, appointed the cause to be argued before seven Judges.

The case was heard before the Judges of the First Division, and Lords Kyllachy, Stormonth-Darling, and Low, at the same time as the case of Hamilton v. Nisbet, reported infra, p. 1034.

Argued for the defenders;—(1) In view of the special appeal to the Sheriff provided for by section 9 (2) (c) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,[1] the present action was incompetent, or at [1] 63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.

No. 182.

July 19, 1905.

Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

least premature. Where as here there was a new subject-matter as to which the Courts of law had no jurisdiction originally, and a statutory remedy was provided, that remedy was exclusive even where excess of power was alleged.[1] The register was still inchoate. It was not complete until the Sheriff had considered the appeals against the entries complained against.[2] There was here no invasion of any right of property. The case of Lord Advocate v. Police Commissioners of Perth[3] was really in contrast to the present. (2) Sections 9, 20, and 21 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,[4] must be read together. If so read, it was plain that the "width" to be entered on the register was not the tape measure width, but that the authorities had a certain discretion, and were intended to fix one general mean width for each street. If the width was the tape measure width, and there was no discretionary power, then the appeals provided for to the Sheriff and the Dean of Guild were useless; and the provisions in sec. 21 as to the Dean of Guild having regard to the provisions of sec. 18 were meaningless. The defenders did not maintain that they had power to fix an ideal width, but they claimed that they were not confined to the actual width, which in many cases differed at different points in the street. They were entitled to fix one general width for each street, even if this involved shewing ground as street in the register which never had been street de facto or de jure. Sec. 24 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,[4] only applied where the Corporation desired at once to acquire a building, and were not willing to wait until the owner proposed to rebuild. The case of M'Dougall v. Nisbet[5] was rightly decided, and should not be overruled. If not overruled it was conclusive in favour of the defenders' contention. [LORD KYLLACHY referred to Bruce v. Corporation of Glasgow.[6]] If it were objected that the width as entered in the register and as shewn on the map were not the same, and that consequently in framing the register the enactments of the statute had been disregarded, the answer was that the register overruled the map.

Counsel for the defenders also referred to the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1903,[7] sec. 5 (an enactment to the same effect as sec. 9 (2) (a) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900[4]); Neilson v. R. B. Wilson & Co.;[8] Plumstead Board of Works v. Spackman.[9]

Argued for the pursuers;—(1) The register was meant to be a register of actual existing streets, not of imaginary ideal streets. It

---

[1] Craigie v. Mill, Feb. 11, 1826, 4 S. 447 (453), aff. June 25, 1827, 2 W. and S. 642; Campbell v. Mill, June 28, 1823, 2 S. 440 (392); Alexander v. Seymour, Dec. 2, 1828, 7 S. 117; Aberdeen Road Trustees v. Knowles, June 12, 1811, Hume, 262; Crawford v. Lennox, July 15, 1852, 14 D. 1029, 24 Scot. Jur. 629; Leith Police Commissioners v. Campbell, Dec. 21, 1866, 5 Macph. 247, per L. J.-C. Inglis, at p. 251, 39 Scot. Jur., at p. 102; Magistrates of Portobello v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, Nov. 9, 1882, 10 R. 130, per L. J.-C. Moncreiff, at p. 137; Milne & Co. v. Aberdeen District Committee, Nov. 30, 1899, 2 F. 220, per Lord M'Laren, at p. 229, and Lord Kinnear, at p. 231.

[2] Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 9 (2) (e).

[3] Dec. 7, 1869, 8 Macph. 244, 42 Scot. Jur. 106.

[4] 63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.

[5] Nov. 17, 1904, ante, p. 55.

[6] Nov. 12, 1903, 6 F. 94.

[7] 3 Edw. VII. cap. 33.

[8] Nov. 17, 1904, ante, p. 60.

[9] 1884, L. R., 13 Q. B. D. 878, 1885, L. R., 10 App. Cas. 229.

No. 182.
July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

was admitted that as regards width the width stated was not the actual width. Here in constructing the register there had not merely been no due compliance with the statute, but no compliance at all, and total disregard of its provisions. In such circumstances the decisions quoted by the defenders on the question of competency, and the rule upon which they were founded, did not apply.[1] (2) The width to be inserted in the register was the actual width, not an ideal non-existent width. An appeal might be necessary although the only question was what was the actual width. Questions of some intricacy might arise as to the terminus a quo or ad quem, or where the sides of the street were not parallel, or where the limits of the street were not physically defined. In respect of the admission given by the defenders as to the principle upon which the register had been made up, and the want of specification otherwise, the defences were irrelevant, and the pursuers were entitled to decree.

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—In this action, reported to your Lordships by the Lord Ordinary, Lord Low, and heard before seven Judges, in respect of the intrinsic importance of the case, the Caledonian Railway Company are the pursuers and the Corporation of Glasgow are the defenders. The matter of the controversy is as to certain entries made in the Register of Streets which the corporation are bound to cause to be prepared under the provisions of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act of 1900. The action contains declaratory and reductive conclusions. The declaratory conclusions are framed to express what the pursuers conceive to be a just interpretation of the provisions of the Act, and the reductive conclusions are directed against entries which they conceive violate those provisions. I shall presently examine with some minuteness the provisions of the statute, but in the meantime in order to explain the contention of the pursuers, I shall give a general description of them. Part II. of the Act, which has the general heading "Streets," provides by section 9 for the formation by the defenders of a register of public streets in which are to be entered various particulars as regards the streets, and, inter alia, the point of commencement and termination and the width. It also enjoins the marking of such streets and the area thereof on an Ordnance Survey map. When completed, the register and map are to be laid in a place where they can be inspected, and notice is to be given in the newspapers that they are there for inspection, and then if no objection is made, the register and map are deemed conclusively to fix the particulars as aforesaid of every public street. But there is provision for anyone aggrieved going to the Sheriff, and the Sheriff is, after the expiry of the period of two months, to deal with any appeal on that matter in a summary manner, and his decision is to be final. At first sight the statement of the width of a street might seem to be a matter of no great moment, but its vital importance really depends on the provisions of a section which follows, namely, section 20. Now that section, with the marginal note of "restraining erections within certain distance in streets," provides that "the [1] Lord Advocate v. Police Commissioners of Perth, 8 Macph. 244, 42 Scot. Jur. 106; Stirling v. Hutcheon, May 25, 1874, 1 R. 935; Shand v. Henderson, July 28, 1814, 2 Dow, 519.

No. 182.
July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

Dean of Guild shall not, without special consent of the Corporation, grant decree for the erection or re-erection of any building upon ground adjoining any street unless on the condition that one-half of the width of such street, measuring such half from the centre of such street towards such ground, shall be cleared of all structures, if any, existing thereon." It goes on to say that, "for the purpose of this section, the width of a public street shall be the width set forth in the register, where such width is entered therein." The effect of this is that where the width is fixed no proprietor can ever have any building nearer to the street than what I may call the edge of the street as so fixed.

Now, the Caledonian Railway Company aver that under the guise of fixing the width, the Corporation have not had regard to actual width, but have laid down what may be termed an ideal width, totally irrespective of the actual condition of affairs. The averments of the pursuers are as follows in condescendence 7:—"In the case of the undernamed streets set forth in the said schedule No. 1, the width stated in the register under the heading 'width of street,' and coloured on the Ordnance Survey map relative to the said register referred to in the said subsection (2) (a) of section 9 of the said Act, is not the width of the street as it actually exists where the pursuers' railways and works or properties are situated, or where they front or abut thereon." I leave out a passage which is a statement of law and not a statement of fact. "In certain cases the width of street as stated in the register and shewn on the map includes not only parts of areas of unbuilt-upon land in front of property belonging to the pursuers, although not actually used as street, but also includes the railways, works, and buildings, and the solum thereof belonging to the pursuers." There then follows a long list of streets in which they say these things have occurred. The interest of the Company to raise this action is obvious, because in view of the provisions of section 20, which I have already summarised, if the entries in the register are correctly described and are allowed to stand, the moment the Caledonian Railway Company come to erect or re-erect any building they will be bound to surrender large slices of their property, and throw them into the public street without any compensation.

Such being the conclusions of the summons and the averments of the pursuers, what is the attitude taken up by the defenders? In limine founding on the provision as to appeal which I have quoted, they say that the action is incompetent. I do not mean to examine the authorities cited upon this matter, because I think that the principle underlying those authorities is not doubtful. So long as the defenders keep within the lines prescribed by the statute, the Court will give effect to the finality clause, and will not interfere by way of a declaratory finding or reduction, but if under the name and guise of statutory proceeding the defenders attempt to do something quite different from what the statute allows, then they are doing an ultra vires act, and no finality clause will or can protect their illegal acting from the restraint of the Supreme Court. Now, I am of opinion that the averment of the pursuers is a good averment, because if the construction of the statute on which it is based is correct, and the allegations are in fact true, then under the guise of entering width the defenders are not entering the width at all, but are fixing an ideal street, which by the operation of section 20

No. 182.

July 19, 1905. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

will be turned into a real street the moment the pursuers wish to build, to their great loss and detriment. It therefore becomes of the first importance to see what is the answer of the defenders to the pursuers' averment. The answer of the defenders to the pursuers' averment, which I have quoted in the condescendence, is as follows:—"Admitted that in the case of certain of the streets here specifically enumerated the width in the register under the heading 'width of street' is not the width of the street as it actually exists where the pursuers' railways, works, and properties are situated, or where they front or abut thereon. Explained that the width of such streets is in all cases properly entered in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, and particularly of sections 9, 18, 20, and 21, and that the colouring on the Ordnance Survey map, relative to the said register, referred to in subsection (2) (a) of section 9 of that Act, shews in each case the width of the street as it actually exists opposite the respective properties in those streets. Explained that it is impossible to enter in said register the actual or existing widths of every public street in the city at every point in such streets. In a great number of instances such streets vary in width at numerous points, and would require as many as one hundred entries for one street." I point out to your Lordships that this is a very peculiar answer. It is entirely negative. It admits that the entry of the streets is not an entry of the actual width, but it does not go on to say upon what view the register has been prepared. I need scarcely say that a mere averment that the widths are properly entered in accordance with the provisions of section so-and-so is really no averment in fact at all. In the course of the discussion I pressed the learned counsel for the defenders again and again to say what was the theory upon which they said that the register was constructed. I cannot say that I was met with any frankness of statement on the matter. Sometimes what one cannot discover in the abstract one can discover in the concrete, and what is left vague in generalisation may be made plain in the particular. There is a portion of Buchanan Street which is well known to many of your Lordships, where the street, which for the most of its length is broad, is constricted at the end near Argyle Street. If your Lordships will look at the foot of page 23 in the schedule annexed to the summons you will find that the entry in the register as to Buchanan Street is "From Argyle Street to Bath Street, width 70 feet, distance between centre of street and building line 35 feet." In other words, that constriction is completely ignored so far as the register is concerned. Now, the ground there in question is very valuable ground, and there is little doubt but that the extent is very considerable: probably, looking at the map, it is not less than 60 or 70 square yards. It needs no speculation to see that the value of that ground in what is certainly one of the very best situations of Glasgow for shops is represented by a very large sum of money. Indeed, we were informed that the corresponding piece on the other side of the street which was bought by the Corporation and then removed did cost a very large sum of money. When I proceeded to ask the learned counsel if on the next building or rebuilding of that side of the street that ground, upon the argument of the defenders, was to be confiscated, Mr Campbell, who appeared for the defenders, answered that he could not deny that it would

No. 182.
July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

then be thrown into the public street, but that he preferred to call it "the transference of private property to public uses." When counsel of the eminence of Mr Campbell makes such a statement on a matter which he well knows is at the root of the whole case (because that was explained to parties at the time this case was sent to the seven Judges), I am bound to assume that he makes that statement on instructions, and the result to my mind is, to put it at the very lowest, that I am satisfied that it would not be safe to assume that this register had not been framed with a view, in the supposed interests of the public in general, to effect this compulsory transference without payment, which plain people are accustomed to call confiscation. I need hardly say that if the proceeding is one warranted by Act of Parliament your Lordships have nothing to do with the question of whether it is confiscation or not: your duty is to give effect to what the Legislature has ordained. But none the less are you the guardians of justice to private rights, and as such entitled closely to scrutinise Acts of Parliament to see whether they have brought about a result so repugnant to the principles on which Acts of Parliament usually proceed. If the doctrine of fortius contra proferentem is to be given effect to at all, it should be given effect to in a case of this sort where the Act is promoted as a private bill by a corporation, and does not receive the general discussion which ordinary public Acts of Parliament receive.

I accordingly proceed to examine the provisions of the Act. The 9th section is as follows:—(His Lordship then read sec. 9 (1) and (2) (a)).* Then follow clauses providing for the lodging of this map and register, objections being made, the appeal to the Sheriff, and the deciding by the Sheriff in a summary manner, which I need not read at length.

Some aid to the meaning of the section may be taken from certain portions of the interpretation clause, clause 4. In that clause it is stated that "public street" means any road, street, "lane, vennel, wynd, alley, bridge, quay, passage, square, or other place within the city used either by carts or foot-passengers which has been maintained by the Corporation, or which is by the Police Acts or shall hereafter in pursuance thereof be declared to be a public street."

Further width is thus defined,—"'Width' in relation to street or lane means the width of the carriageway and foot-pavements taken together."

On section 9 the following remarks seem to suggest themselves:—

(1) The said register is prima facie to come in place of the register of 1866. Now, the register of 1866 was only a list. It came in place of a still older register, and I am not sure that there was not even an older one before that. The purpose of these older registers was simply to set forth what were public streets in contradistinction to the private streets.

(2) The register with its accompanying map has to be made once for all, and after provisions for corrections it is a completed document.

(3) The register is to be made of streets then in existence.

(4) The particulars other than the width de quo queritur are de facto particulars describing actual and existing things, not prospective and ideal

* Quoted supra, p. 1021, note.

No. 182. July 19, 1905. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

things. The definition of width in the interpretation clause also describes an existing state of circumstances.

(5) The register and map are not contradictory, but are ancillary documents, the one proceeding by description and the other by delineation.

All this points clearly and plainly in one direction, namely, that width, like the other particulars, has reference to an existing state of affairs and not to an ideal or future state of affairs, however desirable that state of affairs might be. Indeed on this section the defenders have but little to say. Their only argument on that section is an argument ab inconvenienti; it is embodied in that portion of their averments which I have read, saying that it might require as many as one hundred entries for one street. But see what they say as to the map. They say that although it would be so very difficult, and indeed almost impossible, to describe such a street in the register, the colouring on the map shews the width of the street exactly as it exists. I need scarcely point out to your Lordships that in making the map different from the register, they seem to me to have gone clean in the teeth of the statute, but at the same time I cannot think that what can be done on a map cannot be done on a register, and I am not in any degree alarmed by the prospect of there being even so many as one hundred entries in one street. After all, the rights of individuals, of whom there may be more than a hundred in a street, are to be very gravely affected in this matter, and I cannot say that it is any argument for the Corporation to say that they have neither paper nor time to make one hundred entries in one street.

The strength of the defenders' argument is really not rested on a consideration of the 9th section at all, but is rested on the provisions of sections 20 and 21, and the reference in section 21 to section 18. I would remind your Lordships that section 20 has the heading of "Restraining erections within certain distance in streets," and I have already read the first portion of the section which prohibits building within half of the street nearest the side where the buildings are to be. But then it goes on thus:—"For the purposes of this section the width of a public street shall be the width set forth in the register, where such width is entered therein. And the width of a private street, formed with the authority of the Dean of Guild, shall be the width specified in the decree authorising the formation or laying out of such street, or the width shewn on the plans on which such decree proceeded. And the width of any public street of which the dimensions are not set forth in the register, and of any private street of which the dimensions are not specified or shewn as aforesaid, shall be fixed by the Master of Works. And the position of the centre of any such street shall be defined by the Master of Works with reference to any application which may be made to the Dean of Guild for a lining to erect or re-erect any such building." Section 21 says:—"Any person deeming himself aggrieved by any determination of the Master of Works under the immediately preceding section may appeal to the Dean of Guild within fourteen days thereafter, and the Dean of Guild shall thereupon have power to fix such width and define such centre of such street, and in fixing such width the Dean of Guild shall, as far as conveniently may be, have regard to the provisions as to width of streets contained in the section of this Act,

No. 182.

July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

whereof the marginal note is 'Grounds for refusal to sanction plans of streets.'"

The section of this Act referred to is section 18. It belongs to a fasciculus of sections which have to do with the laying out of new streets, and it is in these terms:—"The Dean of Guild shall not, except with the consent of the Corporation, and subject to such conditions, if any, as the Corporation may prescribe, grant decree for the formation or laying out of any street—

"(1) Where the width of such street proposed to be formed or laid out—

"(a) Is less than 50 feet; or

"(b) Where the width in case of a street the distance of the building lines whereof is at least 30 feet from the centre is less than 36 feet; or

"(c) Where the width in case of a street which from the configuration of the ground cannot be built upon except on one side thereof is less than 30 feet."

The grammar of that section makes it nonsense, but I think one can see the meaning of it, and it is this—"(a) is less than 50 feet; or"—and that is alternatively—"Where the width in case of a street the distance of the building lines whereof is at least 30 feet from the centre is less than 36 feet." As it is expressed, the second case would never occur, because it would all come within the first, but I do not see that your Lordships will have any doubt as to the real meaning of that. I need not read the rest of the section, because it does not deal with width at all.

The defenders' argument on these sections can be summarised thus: the Master of Works is, in lack of the width in the register, to fix the width and centre of a public street; an appeal is given to the Dean of Guild, from whom at common law there lies an appeal to the Court of Session; if the question was one of mere measurement such a prolonged appeal would be absurd. "Fix," therefore, means that he is to have a discretion. This is made clear from the terms of section 21, which, if he was merely to measure, would be unintelligible. Lastly, if he, the Dean of Guild, can do all this when there is no entry in the register, in order to supply that entry, the Corporation can do the same in the original register, subject only to the possible correction by the Sheriff on the merits, which they say is protection enough. If upon a consideration of section 9 I come to the conclusion that its construction is not to give a discretion, I confess I should be slow to import into it a distinctly opposite meaning by implication from another section which prima facie is concerned with other matters and only deals incidentally with the fixing of widths. Obviously the portion of section 20 as to fixing the width of a public street only applies to a period of interregnum. I have already pointed out that the register is to be finished once for all. New public streets are not dealt with by section 20, but are dealt with by section 11. I do not think that considering the enormous interests involved in a city of the magnitude of Glasgow, it is at all likely that to all proprietors on the register, in other words, prima facie the whole city, the only appeal in such a matter which is of such vital pecuniary importance should be an appeal to the Sheriff to be dealt with in a summary manner, while to the fortunate few who happen to build before the register is quite complete,

No. 182.
July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

and find their property unmarked, you are to give an appeal not only to the Dean of Guild but also to this Court.

If the sections are inconsistent I should hold that in this matter section 9 was the ruling section, but to my mind the sections are not inconsistent, and no such implication as is suggested is to be derived from sections 20 and 21 for the following reasons:—(1) The word "fix" is equivalent to "determine," and is equally applicable to finding a fact as to exercising a discretion; (2) There is in truth no absurdity in supposing an appeal on what is called mere measurement. Even in measurement, that is in stretching and reading a tape, mistakes may occur which would have a serious consequence if stereotyped. But apart from that there may be material for real contention as to the terminus a quo and the terminus ad quem. Even the definition of width in the interpretation clause, clear as it is, does not avoid this, because in a city like Glasgow all streets are not accurately defined as to pavement and roadway; (3) The words at the end of section 21, with the reference to section 18, are by themselves hopelessly inappropriate to the fixing of the breadth of an existing street. It would mean the abolition altogether of some of the smaller streets—that is to say, not the abolition of the streets, but the destruction of the houses abutting on the streets. The draughtsman of the sections must have had some glimmering of suspicion that this was so, and he introduced the words "as far as conveniently may be." But after all the clause may find application in the solitary instance of a new private street for which the Dean of Guild has granted a decree, which is silent as to dimensions, and the plan, per incuriam or for want of a scale, does not specify the breadth. Such a street being new, it might well be subjected to the same conditions as other new streets.

But further, seeing that the fixing of width is only a temporary matter contained in an ancillary provision, I think it is in such a case appropriate to see first what section 9 means, and then to draw inferences from that as to what is to be done with section 20. As to inequity of result, though that, I admit, is not conclusive, there can be no doubt, and I need not expatiate on such considerations, but the argument is at least aided by a consideration of these matters. As regards new streets where there is no such inequity (the proprietor being the owner of the whole ground which is being laid out), the Corporation have most ample and drastic powers, not conferred by a side-wind but in plain and unambiguous terms. I refer to sections 17, 18, and 22, but I need not read these sections. They practically make the Corporation entirely masters of the situation as to the dimensions of any new street, and they absolutely prohibit anyone from laying out a new street or building opposite a new street without having got the approval of the Corporation. Further, if reference is made to the interests of the public, I would refer to the ample powers which are given to the Corporation by section 24, where there is a most drastic power to take land compulsorily without going through the ordinary provisions of a Provisional Order, but by mere application to the Sheriff and putting in force the compulsory clauses of the Lands Clauses Act, which would enable the Corporation to take any land they chose for public improvement, subject of course to always paying compensation.

Such being my interpretation of the Act, I proceed to consider what

No. 182.
July 19, 1905.
Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation.

ought to be done with the action. I have already said that I think the pursuers' averments relevant for reduction, but it is clear, I think, that reduction could not be pronounced without a proof, because, although I have commented unfavourably on the averments made by the defenders, yet it would not be right to reduce the register without being quite sure that it was really in fraudem of the provisions of the Act of Parliament and amounting in essence to an ultra vires act. But I think there is another objection to the action as it stands, and that is that it is premature. The register is not yet complete; it is only lying before the Sheriff, and the appeals are still undisposed of. Now, if the register so far departs from its proper function as the pursuers say, we cannot assume that the Sheriff will not correct it, and it seems to me that to reduce it de plano would be to make that assumption. It is true that the Sheriff might go wrong on such a question, but I am entitled to assume that he would take the correct view of the Act, and I am quite sure that with the loyal adherence to the law as laid down by the Supreme Court which the Sheriff has always shewn, he would not set up for himself a construction of the Act different from that which a bench of seven Judges has declared to be the true one. I assume that he will approach the question with the view of your Lordships clearly expressed that width means actual width, not necessarily a measurement of scientific and mathematical accuracy, but a width fixed with regard to actual conditions, and not based on theories as to what would be a public improvement. If he applies that view, his determination will render any such action as this unnecessary. But if, for argument's sake, we assume that the Sheriff did not do so, and the register when finished and authenticated contained some deviations from the actual state of matters, then the register would be still open to reduction, because no imprimatur of the Sheriff could make intra vires what was an ultra vires act of the Corporation.

I am therefore of opinion that the action should be dismissed, but as the defenders have not succeeded in making good their plea of incompetency, and have taken up what I consider an unjustifiable attitude on record, I am of opinion that no expenses should be found due to either party.

LORD ADAM, LORD M'LAREN, LORD KINNEAR, LORD KYLLACHY, and LORD STORMONTH-DARLING concurred.

The LORD PRESIDENT intimated that LORD LOW, who was absent at the advising, also concurred.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"The Lords of the First Division, along with Lords Kyllachy, Low, and Stormonth-Darling, having considered the cause and heard counsel for the parties, dismiss the action as being premature, and decern."

HOPE, TODD, & KIRK, W.S.—CAMPBELL & SMITH, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 183.

July 19, 1905. Hamilton v. Nisbet.

DAVID HAMILTON AND OTHERS, Appellants.—Mackenzie, K.C.—Hunter.
THOMAS NISBET (Master of Works, Glasgow), Respondent.—Campbell, K.C.—Wilson, K.C.—M. P. Fraser.

Police—Street—Building Regulations—Width of Street—Burgh—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.), secs. 4, 9 (2), 18, 20, and 21.—Held (by the First Division with three consulted Judges) that, under secs. 20 and 21 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, the Master of Works and the Dean of Guild on appeal from him are not entitled in fixing the width of an existing street to fix such width at anything else than the actual existing width of the street.

M'Dougall v. Nisbet, ante, p. 55, overruled.

1ST DIVISION, with three consulted Judges. Dean of Guild, Glasgow.

MESSRS DAVID HAMILTON AND OTHERS, sole partners of and trustees for their firm of J. & D. Hamilton, oil refiners and merchants, and paint and colour manufacturers, Glasgow, in February 1904 presented a petition in the Dean of Guild Court, Glasgow, craving a warrant and decree of lining for erections and additions to existing buildings on property belonging to them at Port Dundas, Glasgow, and described as bounded "on the east by Port Dundas Road."

Objections to the petition were lodged by the Master of Works.

Port Dundas Road was a public street of the city of Glasgow in the sense of the Glasgow Police Acts. Its dimensions were not set forth in the Register of Public Streets existing at the date of the presentation of the petition, viz., the Register of Streets kept under the Glasgow Police Act, 1866 (29 and 30 Vict. cap. cclxxiii.). The new Register of Public Streets under the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, had not then come into force.

In the course of the proceedings the Master of Works, acting under the powers conferred upon him by the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,* section 20, issued a determination fixing the width of Port Dundas Road at 72 feet ex adverso of the property of Messrs Hamilton, Nos. 117 to 125 of said road, and defining the position of the centre of said street as a line 36 feet to the east of and parallel to the face of the front wall of the Messrs Hamilton's existing building.

The existing building line of Messrs Hamilton's property was 12 feet to the west of a wall which bounded the existing roadway of the Port Dundas Road on the west. Of this 12 feet the westmost 6 feet was according to their titles the property of Messrs Hamilton, but by their titles it was restricted against building. The eastmost 6 feet was apparently still the property of Messrs Hamilton's superior. To the east of the wall above mentioned there was 48 feet which had always been roadway since before 1824. To the east of the 48 feet there was 12 feet, which in 1824 was feued to the trustees under the Port Dundas Road Acts. It now belonged to the Corporation of Glasgow, and formed part of the existing roadway of Port Dundas Road. This 12 feet was bounded on the east by the building line of the buildings on the east side of that road, which was thus at this point 60 feet in width as actually existing.

The effect of the Master of Works' determination as to the width of Port Dundas Road was to include in the width of the road as so fixed, the space between the wall, above mentioned as bounding the road as at present existing on the west, and the building line of Messrs Hamilton's buildings. The centre fixed by the Master of Works was not the centre of the road as at present existing, but the centre of the proposed 72 feet road, which was also the centre of the original 48 feet road.

* See the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.), secs. 4, 9 (2), 20, and 21, which are quoted ante, pp. 1021-3, note.

Messrs Hamilton appealed to the Dean of Guild under section 21 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,* against the Master of Works' determination fixing the width and defining the centre of Port Dundas Road. Certain other neighbouring proprietors also appealed against the determination.

By interlocutor, dated 26th May 1904, the Dean of Guild (Lord Inverclyde) allowed the Master of Works to lodge a statement of data used by him in fixing the width and centre of Port Dundas Road, and the other parties to lodge answers thereto. A statement of data and answers were lodged accordingly,† and the record in the appeal against the Master of Works' determination having been closed and parties heard thereon, the Dean of Guild, on 4th August 1904, pronounced this interlocutor:—"Sustains the determination of the Master of Works, and dismisses the appeals: Fixes the width of the public street, called Port Dundas Road, at 72 feet: Defines the centre of the said street to be along the red ink line marked on the said plan, No. 11 of process," &c.‡

The appellants Messrs Hamilton, and also two other appellants against the Master of Works' determination, appealed to the First Division of the Court of Session.

The case was heard before the First Division on 28th February and 1st March 1905.

By interlocutor, dated 10th March 1905, the cause was appointed to be reargued before the Judges of the First Division along with three other Judges.

The case was accordingly argued before the Judges of the First Division and Lord Kyllachy, Lord Stormonth-Darling, and Lord Low. It was heard at the same time as the immediately preceding case of Caledonian Railway Company v. Corporation of Glasgow (ante, p. 1020).

The appellants adopted the argument as to the meaning of "width" in sections 9, 20, and 21 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,§ which was presented for the pursuers in Caledonian Railway Company v. Glasgow Corporation, ante, p. 1026. With regard to the case of M'Dougall v. Nisbet,[1] they pointed out that in that case the

---

* Quoted ante, p. 1023, note.

† The Master of Works founded, inter alia, upon the Act 5 and 6 Will. IV. cap. cix. (an Act, inter alia, for improving and maintaining Port Dundas Road), sec. 19, which enacts:—" . . . No house, building, or other erection whatever shall be put up or erected within 40 feet from the centre of the said road from the city of Glasgow to Port Dundas. . . ."

‡ "NOTE.— . . . The Dean ultimately founds his determination upon the Act of Parliament founded on by the Master of Works (5 and 6 Will. IV. cap. cix. sec. 19), and whatever criticism may have been passed upon this Act there is no trace of any plea that a reference to it is incompetent. The Dean also founds his determination on the view he holds of the public requirements as to the road in question. . . ."

§ Quoted ante, pp. 1021-3, note.

[1] Nov. 17, 1904, ante, p. 55.

No. 183. July 19, 1905. Hamilton v. Nisbet.

provisions of section 9 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,[1] were not considered, and that the street there was treated as being a new street, and not an existing street. But if M'Dougall[2] was to be regarded as an authority for the proposition that in fixing the width of an existing street anything but the existing actual width could be regarded then it was wrongly decided, and ought to be overruled.

The respondent's argument upon the question as to the meaning of "width" in secs. 9, 20, and 21 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900,[1] is stated in the argument for the defenders in Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation, ante, p. 1020, at p. 1025. He founded upon M'Dougall v. Nisbet,[2] as being directly in point in this case, and maintained that that case was rightly decided, and ought not to be overruled.

At advising,—

LORD PRESIDENT.—The judgment which your Lordships have just pronounced in the last case[3] really rules this case, because it is perfectly clear on the face of it that the Master of Works and the Dean of Guild have not here taken the actual breadth of the street. I am aware that this judgment conflicts with the judgment pronounced in this Division of the Court in the case of M'Dougall v. Nisbet.[2] I have been unable to agree with that judgment, which of course was meant to be considered in the present judgment, but while saying so, I feel less diffidence than I otherwise would, because it is impossible to read the report of that judgment without seeing that that case was decided on an isolated view of the 20th section without any argument addressed to the Court upon the provisions of the 9th section. There is no trace of the Court having had brought before it what would be the extreme consequences of holding the 9th section to be construed according to the opposite contention. Further, it is impossible to read Lord M'Laren's opinion in that case without seeing that it had been argued as a case where it was not a question of an old street, but of laying out for the first time a street in a new neighbourhood. I should like to say also that quite apart from that I do not think the judgment of the Dean of Guild could have been supported on the merits, because on the merits he went clearly upon the provisions of an old Act of Parliament dealing with a road, and I think he there confused two perfectly different things—a provision prohibiting building within a certain distance of the road with a provision dedicating to the road itself the land over which this, so to speak, statutory servitude had been constituted. There is no ground for any such dedication. I think the interlocutor in this case will necessarily be to remit to the Dean of Guild to fix the breadth of the street in terms of the opinion which has just been pronounced.

LORD ADAM concurred.

LORD M'LAREN.—It is quite true that in considering the case of M'Dougall v. Nisbet[2] our attention was not particularly called to those provisions about streets that are on the register, and it is not improbable that if we had considered the bearing of the case then before us upon the width

[1] 63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl.
[2] Ante, p. 55.
[3] Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation, ante, p. 1020.

No. 183.
July 19, 1905.
Hamilton v. Nisbet.

of the old streets that are on the register we should have seen that a principle of construction that seemed to be reasonable when applied to suburban thoroughfares would break down when applied to the narrow and irregular thoroughfares in the ancient city. Be that as it may, we have now had an opportunity of considering this question in a Court consisting of a larger number of Judges and with the benefit of the application of fresh minds to its solution. I have come to be satisfied that no sound distinction can be taken between this case and the case of the Caledonian Railway Company[1] which we have just decided. Your Lordship pointed out in deciding the case of the Caledonian Railway Company[1] that in the case of streets that had never been built upon, but were merely in course of being laid out, the authority of the Dean of Guild was absolute. He can fix their width, and can thereby secure that all provision desirable shall be made for traffic. That is a different case, because it does not involve any substantial interference with private property, but only such appropriation of property to means of communication as any sensible proprietor would be disposed to make of his own accord. I agree in the decision.

LORD KINNEAR, LORD KYLLACHY, and LORD STORMONTH-DARLING concurred with the Lord President.

The LORD PRESIDENT intimated that LORD LOW, who was absent at the advising, also concurred.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"19th July 1905.—The Lords . . . recall the interlocutor of the Lord Dean of Guild, dated 4th August 1904, and in respect of the opinions delivered on this date in the case of the Caledonian Railway Company against The Corporation of the City of Glasgow, remit to the Dean of Guild to proceed in the cause."

AULD & MACDONALD, W.S.—CAMPBELL & SMITH, S.S.C.—Agents.

No. 184.
July 20, 1905.
Browning's Factor.

WILLIAM JOHN TAYLOR (Browning's Judicial Factor), Petitioner.—Horne.

Judicial Factor—Special Powers—Permission to retain shares involving liability for calls—Distinction between position of a Judicial Factor on a trust-estate and a Curator Bonis.—A judicial factor presented a petition for authority to retain for two years shares in a limited company which were subject to a liability for possible calls of £8, 10s. per share, and which could only be disposed of by payment of £3 per share. The petitioner stated that the prospects of the company were improving.

On the report of the Junior Lord Ordinary the Court, in the circumstances, authorised the factor to retain the shares, but only hoc statu and for no definite time, and directed the factor, should any change occur in the circumstances of the company, to communicate with the Accountant of Court.

Observations (per the Lord Ordinary, Johnston) as to the distinction between the position of a judicial factor appointed on a trust-estate and a curator bonis or factor loco tutoris, with regard to his powers and responsibilities and his right to apply to the Court for instructions.

---

[1] Ante, p. 1020.

No. 184.

July 20, 1905. Browning's Factor.

Bill-Chamber. 1ST DIVISION. Ld. Johnston.

MR WILLIAM J. TAYLOR, judicial factor on the trust-estate of the deceased Alexander Mackinnon Browning, to which he had been appointed in place of trustees who were desirous of resigning, presented a note in the Bill-Chamber to the Junior Lord Ordinary (Johnston) asking for authority to continue to hold certain shares, which formed part of the trust-estate, and on which there was a large liability for calls.

The Lord Ordinary (Johnston), by interlocutor dated 1st July 1905, reported the cause to the First Division. The circumstances of the case are fully narrated in his Lordship's opinion.*

---

* "OPINION.—The late Mr Alexander Mackinnon Browning, formerly of Blantyre, died on 3d April 1902, in Australia, during a temporary residence there, survived by his widow and an only child, Miss Robina Frazer Browning. Mrs and Miss Browning have continued to reside in Australia.

"Mr Browning left a settlement under which he conveyed his whole estate to Robert Parlane, Bonhill, Dumbartonshire, and Joseph M. Taylor, LL.D., writer, Glasgow, as trustees. Substantially, the purposes of the trust were for payment to Mrs Browning of the free annual income of the estate for her alimentary liferent use only, and, in the contingency of there being only one child, to hold and convey the residue, subject to her mother's liferent, to Miss Browning, under the declaration that in the event of her predeceasing her mother, leaving issue, the fee destined to her should be held not to have vested, and should be payable to, and equally among, her issue. Accordingly, Mrs Browning is restricted to an alimentary liferent, while Miss Browning has a fee which at best is subject to defeasance, and which, if certain other clauses, which it is not necessary to narrate, are considered, may be not even vested subject to defeasance, but may prove to be entirely suspended. I refer to the above in order to make it clear, with reference to the question at issue, that Mrs and Miss Browning have no such rights in the estate as would enable them by their consents to empower the parties administering the estate to deviate in any way from the strict lines of trust administration, or to give any effectual indemnity to the parties administering, should the necessities of the estate require them to undertake abnormal responsibilities.

"The deceased's estate may be taken as of the value of £8000, excluding from consideration one asset, which is truly not an asset except negatively, but a very grave liability. For the testator left at his death 1696 ordinary shares of £9 each, 10s. paid, in the New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company. The liability for calls on these shares at £8, 10s. per share was therefore £14,416, or nearly double the whole other estate. The circumstances of this company have long been, and still are, such that this liability for calls is a very real anxiety to those involved as shareholders. Not only are the shares unrealisable in the ordinary sense, but they could not be got rid of except on payment of a very large sum to anyone taking them with their liability. In these circumstances, although the trustees nominate accepted the trust and confirmed, they very soon came to the conclusion that they would not take the responsibility of managing the estate, and, accordingly, they applied for the appointment of a judicial factor in January 1904, in order to their own resignation. Mr William John Taylor, C.A., Glasgow, was appointed judicial factor on the estate on 2d February 1904, and he has found caution, given up a factorial inventory, and entered on the administration of the estate.

"The factor found, on investigating into the circumstances, that, at the time of his appointment, he could not get rid of the New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company shares and their liability for calls, except upon a payment of £4 per share, amounting to nearly £6800, a payment which would have substantially exhausted the estate, and left only about

No. 184.

July 20, 1905.

Browning's Factor.

The Court having expressed a desire to be informed as to the English practice in such matters, a letter was obtained from an English firm of solicitors in which, after stating that they had consulted one of the Masters of the Supreme Court and also the official solicitor, they summed up the result of their inquiries thus:—"Therefore we have no hesitation in advising that the practice of the English Courts is to give ordinary trustees liberty to hold shares involving liability for uncalled capital for a limited period (to be renewed on reasons justifying the application), so long as there is kept in hand sufficient estate to meet the calls should they be made. In deciding upon similar cases the English Court invariably gives great weight to the reasonable wishes of the persons for the time being entitled to the property in question."

Counsel for the judicial factor stated that the parties at present in right of the trust funds consented to the course proposed. He also referred to the case of Lindsay.[1]

---

£1200 for the widow's liferent and for the daughter, or whomsoever it may ultimately concern, in fee. He has, during the last twelvemonth, continued to watch the situation, and, owing to the prospects of Australasian affairs generally, and of those of the New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company in particular, having improved with a change of seasons, he has found that he could now probably get rid of the shares for a payment of £3 per share, involving the sacrifice of about £5100 of the general estate, leaving him with a balance of about £2900. He himself is of opinion that, in the interests of the estate, he should continue to hold the shares, but he is not unnaturally averse to undertake the very grave responsibility involved at his own hand, and he has accordingly presented a note in the factory asking the Court to authorise him to hold the shares in question 'for at least the space of two years, and during such further period as the Accountant of Court shall authorise.' In his report the Accountant commits himself to no opinion, but he states that he is not aware of such powers having been granted, and therefore reports the matter to the Court. I have, however, had an interview with the Accountant, and discussed the matter with him, and he has informed me that, had the factor taken the reverse course, and craved authority to apply the necessary portion of the estate in getting rid of the shares in question, and freeing the estate from the corresponding liability, he would have felt himself justified in recommending that the power craved should not be conferred, at least in hoc statu. I have felt the situation to be so exceptional that I have not thought myself justified in dealing with the application without reporting it to the Inner-House. I have been led to the conclusion that I ought to take this course, because, while, if I acted on my own responsibility, I should grant the application, though only sub modo, the result one way or the other is of such grave importance to the estate and to those interested therein, and more particularly because, there being no contradictor, there would be no prospect of bringing my judgment under review.

"The point raised by the application is whether the factor is entitled to ask the Court to sanction the course which he proposes to take, so as to relieve him a priori of responsibility, or whether the factor must either act on his own responsibility or relieve himself by resigning. The question whether, should the Court entertain the application, it will sanction the course proposed, is subsidiary and depends on practical considerations.

"In determining the preliminary question, the first point for consideration is the precise relation of the Court to the judicial factor and the estate. In appointing a judicial factor on a lapsed trust, and that is virtually the

---

[1] Dec. 9, 1848, 11 D. 232.

No. 184.

July 20, 1905. Browning's Factor.

LORD PRESIDENT.—This is a report by Lord Johnston, the Lord Ordinary on the Bills, upon a note presented by a Mr Taylor, a judicial factor, asking for special powers. Mr Taylor was appointed judicial factor upon the trust-estate of the late Mr Browning, who, by settlement, conveyed his whole estate to two gentlemen in Glasgow as trustees. For reasons which will shortly appear, the trustees found that they were unwilling to hold the estate of the testator and resigned, and the present petitioner was appointed judicial factor on the trust-estate. What then happened may be conveniently taken from the narrative which the Lord Ordinary gives in his opinion, which is this :—(His Lordship then quoted the 3d and 4th paragraphs of the Lord Ordinary's opinion).

I think that gives your Lordships the whole of the material facts upon which you have to come to a decision, with this addition, that we are told now that the prospects of the Company have still further improved, and position in the present case, while the factor appointed is to certain effects the officer of the Court and responsible to it, the Court does not undertake the administration of the estate, or make itself the trustee, and treat the factor merely as its agent. I may refer to the case of Ferguson v. Murray, 15 D. 682; where in the course of administration of a lapsed trust, part of the estate being heritable property subject to a bond, the bondholders resorted to an action of maills and duties, thereby summarily dispossessing the factor, who hitherto had been managing the property. It was held that the estate was not by the appointment of the factor in manibus curiæ, so that the freedom of creditors to proceed in ordinary course of law should be in any way interfered with. I refer to the case not because its circumstances are analogous to those of the present, but only for the expression of opinion of the Court in defining the position of the factor. 'We must look to the object and nature of the appointment,' per Lord President (Colonsay). 'The matter depends entirely upon the nature of the appointment. There is merely a failure of the family trust, and the appointment was made to defend the interests under that trust,' per Lord Fullerton. 'It appears to me quite clear that the powers of a judicial factor appointed to supply the place of trustees in a lapsed trust can never be greater than those of the party over whose estate he is appointed. The measure of a factor's power is exactly the same as that of the trustee, in whose place he comes, would have been, had the trust subsisted. The factor takes the estate with all its burdens, as if the trust had subsisted, and his duty is to execute the trust. The Court have always held the measure of his power to be the same as that of a trustee,' per Lord Ivory. These expressions are naturally limited by the subject-matter of the case which the Court had been considering, but I think that they support the view that not merely the powers but also the duties and the responsibilities of a factor appointed in lieu of trustees, are the same as those of the trustees whose place he supplies. There are, it is true, superadded safeguards, in respect that the factor now reports to and is under the supervision of the Court, through the Accountant of Court, but I do not think that he is in any way relieved of any of his trust functions to the effect of throwing the administration of the estate on the Court. I refer to Hutton v. Annan, 25 R. (H. L.) 23, where it was held that the passing of certain investments by the Accountant of Court, at his annual audit of the accounts of a curator bonis, did not relieve the latter from responsibility for an improper investment.

---

"The chief difficulty which I have experienced in dealing with the case has arisen from the doubt—which I am personally satisfied is well founded—whether a judicial factor, in room of trustees, does not stand in a different position, in relation to the Court, from a curator bonis, factor loco tutoris,

No. 184.

July 20, 1905.
Browning's Factor.

that, although of course the liability for uncalled capital remains, yet at the same time the Company at present has succeeded in paying up the arrears of interest upon its debenture stock, and that, accordingly, if affairs continue as they seem likely to continue as at present, there is every reason to believe that the Company will resume paying a dividend upon its ordinary capital. We are also told that the prayer of the petition here is concurred in and urged by the beneficiaries who have at this moment an interest in the estate. I say at this moment, because from the way in which the trust-settlement is conceived, the liferenter is certain, but the ultimate fiar is not absolutely certain until certain events have happened.

There is no doubt that this is a novel application, and that it is one of considerable difficulty. Undoubtedly your Lordships would be the very last to countenance the idea that an officer of the Court, such as a judicial factor, should be encouraged to hold speculative investments, and I do not

---

&c., who are more entirely the creatures of the equitable jurisdiction of the Court; and whether the former class of factors is entitled to come to the Court for instructions and powers in the same circumstances, and to the same effect, as are factors of the latter class, or are not bound to act on their own discretion in the same degree as the trustees whom they replace.

"The pupil or the lunatic is in a sense a ward of Court—though in Scotland Chancery terms are not used, nor does the Court exercise such extensive intervention or accept such extensive responsibility as does the Court of Chancery. But a trust-estate, even where a judicial factor is appointed in room of the trustees, is still a trust-estate governed by the deed of the deceased. I am, of course, not referring to the case where an estate is sequestrated for any cause and placed under judicial management. Then it becomes property in manibus curiæ.

"It is as well therefore to see what is the express provision of Mr Browning's settlement empowering his trustees in the matter of investment.

"It is this:—'That my trustees in the execution of the trust shall be entitled to the fullest powers, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by gratuitous trustees, with power to them to invest my estate in the purchase of heritable property, to borrow money on security thereof, and to appoint any one of their own number to be law-agent or factor to the trust; and my trustees shall have power of sale by public roup or private bargain, and persons transacting with them shall have no right to inquire into or see to the application of moneys paid to them, but shall be satisfied by their receipt therefor alone; and I declare that they shall not be liable for any omissions nor neglect of management so long as they act honourably and in good faith.' Accordingly, the powers and duties of Mr Browning's trustees were of the most common law kind, and the present question is not affected one way or the other by his settlement.

"In the next place, I do not find that the position of a judicial factor, vice trustees declining, resigning, or otherwise failing, is to any effect defined by statute or Act of Sederunt.

"The appointment of judicial factors was originally dependent entirely on the nobile officium of the Court. But though the Court was, I understand, early in use to supply the failure of trustees, it is to be noticed that the Act of Sederunt, 13th February 1730, was in terms confined to factors of the class loco tutoris, &c.

"This Act of Sederunt was virtually superseded by the Pupils Protection Act, 1849, 12 and 13 Vict. cap. 51, which was also in terms confined to the same class of factors, and section 7 provides pointedly for the application by such factors for special powers, and with reason, for the powers of such factors are derived from the Court solely. They neither represent a

No. 184.

July 20, 1905.
Browning's Factor.

think it is too much to say that it is clearly the duty of a judicial factor in ordinary circumstances to get rid at once of all investments which, by having uncalled capital, subject the estate under his charge to a future and uncertain liability. I think that would be his duty even although the selling of the shares might involve what, in ordinary words, is called "a considerable sacrifice"—that is to say, that the shares might not bring in what the truster had paid for them. But, of course, that is a different set of circumstances from the question of having to sacrifice a large amount of the trust-estate in order to get rid of the liability. Even that might, I think, in some circumstances be the duty of a factor. But it is, I think, obviously a question of degree, and indeed the only authority which has been brought before our notice—and I am satisfied that Mr Horne has truster, nor take their powers derivatively from him, in succession to his trustees nominate. This Act established for the first time the office of Accountant of Court.

---

"Prior to 1856 there was no statutory provision for the appointment of judicial factors on the estates of deceased persons, whether testate or intestate, and no express provision for the regulation of such factories. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1856, section 164, provision was made for the appointment of factors on the estates of deceased persons. But its object, though its terms might receive wider application, was to provide summarily for the administration only of estates left derelict and subject to claims, though not necessarily bankrupt, on the death. And realisation and division according to a scheme to be approved was all that was contemplated, not a continuing administration. The only thing which was, as I read the section, subjected to the direction of the Court, as precedent to the factor's action, was the realisation of heritage.

"It was the Trusts Act, 1867, that incidentally made statutory the method of appointing, as in the present case, 'a judicial factor to administer the trust,' where trustees desired to resign and could not otherwise provide for the continuance of the trust after their resignation. But it does not appear that there is any special provision either in the statute or by Act of Sederunt in any way further defining the position, functions, &c. of such factors. I think accordingly that such factors stand exactly where they were prior to the statutory enactments above referred to.

"I have further considered the few cases which have occurred, where the liability of judicial factors in realising and investing factorial estates has been in question. The Accountant of Court v. Baird, 20 D. 1176; Crabbe v. White, 18 R. 1065; Cowan's Trustees (in Ferrie's Curatory), 24 R. 590, and Hutton v. Annan, supra, were all cases of factors loco tutoris or curators bonis. Guild v. Glasgow Endowment Board, 14 R. 944, was the case of a judicial factor on an executry estate.

"From these it would appear that factors loco tutoris and curators bonis, and therefore a fortiori judicial factors on trust-estates, have substantially the same responsibility as trustees in the matter of investments. And I may here note that the Trusts Act, 1884, widening the powers of trustees in the matter of investments, includes under the definition of 'trustee' all classes of judicial factors.

"Lastly, it is necessary to look at the cases in which the Court has intervened to give directions or approval regarding investments on the application of factors or otherwise.

"In the old case of Wright, 1701, M. 7429, the Court very markedly refused directions, and left a factor to act on his own discretion and on his own responsibility.

"The case of Bontine's Curator, 8 Macph. 976, was that of a curator bonis to a lunatic. And the ward being involved as partner in the lease and

No. 184.

July 20, 1905.

Browning's Factor.

diligently searched for authorities on this matter—the only authority he has been able to find touching the question at all is just a case of that sort. It is the case of Lindsay,[1] where a factor loco tutoris had a certain amount of shares on which there was uncalled capital, and the other shareholders—for it seems to have been a sort of semi-private company—offered to take over the shares, and discharge all liability upon payment of the small sum of £158. The Court granted the application, and allowed him to pay away that £158 so as to get rid of the liability. But as I have said, that is not the question here.

Now, after all, one, I think, is entitled to begin the consideration of this question by thinking what an ordinary prudent man of business would do if the shares were his own. Of course as long as the shares are kept there is a risk. But I have no doubt upon the facts I have narrated, that an ordinary prudent man of business in the circumstances would not pay £3 a working of a Welsh slate quarry, which had not proved successful, the curator obtained powers to unite with the other partners in turning the business into a limited company, with a view of limiting his ward's liability, as he could not apparently extricate his estate from the adventure entirely.

---

"In Grainger's Curator, 3 R. 479, the curator having made certain investments on the security of local rates, the Accountant of Court required him to realise these investments, but at the desire of the curator, requested instructions from the Lord Ordinary, and on report by the Lord Ordinary, the Inner-House approved the investments, and instructed the Accountant to withdraw his requisition for realisation.

"In Lloyd's Curator, 5 R. 289, an investment in railway debentures was brought in the same way before the Court at the request of a curator bonis, but the Court disposed of the case by finding that debentures of railway companies were securities which the Accountant of Court may sanction as investments for funds in the hands of a curator bonis, provided he is satisfied that the special investment is a good and safe one of its class.

"In the case of Dunn v. Chambers, 25 R. 247, where the validity of the sale under direction of the Accountant of Court of the ward's shares in a mercantile company by her curator bonis was in question, it was incidentally observed by Lord M'Laren, page 250,—'To begin, the Accountant's opinion was not absolutely binding on the curator bonis. Mr Mowat was an officer of Court, and he might have applied to the Lord Ordinary, and if necessary, to the Court, for authority to hold the shares for a definite term, or until he should be able to test their value.' It does not, however, appear that this has ever been done except in the solitary instance to be now mentioned.

"The Accountant of Court has also informed me that he finds that in the case of Barr's Curator Bonis in 1898 (unreported), where the ward was sole partner of a bonded warehouse business, power was given in the Outer-House, on strong representations as to the absence of risk in such businesses, first to float the concern as a limited company, accepting payment for the ward's interest chiefly in shares, and afterwards to retain the shares for a year, and for such time thereafter as the Accountant of Court might approve. These are the only cases I have been able to find bearing on the Court's intervention in the matter of investments, and it will be observed that they are all cases of curators bonis, between whose position and that of factors on trust-estates I conceive, as I have above indicated, that there is a difference.

"But notwithstanding that difference, I should myself be disposed to say, though the general rule is that it is the duty of judicial factors of all kinds to realise funds of the estate involved in business ventures or otherwise

---

[1] 11 D. 232.

No. 184.

July 20, 1905. Browning's Factor.

share to get rid of these shares, that is to say, if his estate consisted only of the amount represented by this estate. If he were a wealthy man he might perhaps pay that sum, but if you suppose a man with a capital equivalent to the capital of this estate I do not think that he would pay this amount of money, and so reduce his capital in order to get rid of his liability for these shares. Therefore it really comes to this, whether your Lordships feel yourselves bound to prevent this judicial factor doing what an ordinary prudent man of business would do. For myself I do not find myself compelled to go that length.

Your Lordships were anxious to discover if there was any practice in England to help us. There seems nothing to be found in the ordinary text-books, but we have the advantage of a very sensible letter from a London solicitor, who has made inquiry into the matter, and which points to this, that although the question might not arise in the same way, yet in special circumstances in England persons have been allowed to keep shares on which there was a liability for a limited term. This is an investment which must be watched, and if things were taking a turn the other way it might become the duty of the factor to save the little that would be left of the estate rather than lose it all. But in the meantime I do not think we would be stretching the powers of the Court in allowing this judicial factor to do what a prudent man would do, and that being so, I would suggest that your Lordships should take the suggestion of the Lord Ordinary and grant the prayer of the petition in the form suggested by his Lordship rather than in the form suggested by the petitioner.

His Lordship says this:—"I should therefore be disposed to authorise the factor to retain the shares, but only in hoc statu and for no definite term, with instructions to communicate with the Accountant of Court, not merely in his annual reports, but at any time should any change of circumstances occur."

I think we should grant the prayer of the petition in that form, but I desire to make it excessively clear that we are not sanctioning any speculation, and I think that the moment these shares can be got rid of without sacrificing the rest of the trust-estate, that then they ought to be sold or transferred at once, and should not be held on the speculative prospects of a rise in their value.

LORD M'LAREN.—I agree. I look upon this as a point of considerable speculatively invested, that where such realisation involves so serious a question of responsibility, the factor, even though a factor vice trustees under a settlement, is entitled to the direction of the Court as to the course he should follow. Otherwise, for his own safety, the factor may be compelled to relieve himself by prematurely parting with the major part of the trust-estate to effect the realisation of the loss upon the particular asset, against the real interest of the estate, or be compelled to resign, in which case presumably no other satisfactory factor would be likely to accept the position.

---

"I should therefore be disposed to authorise the factor to retain the shares, but only in hoc statu, and for no definite term, with instructions to communicate with the Accountant of Court, not merely in his annual reports, but at any time should any change of circumstances occur.

"But, as above mentioned, I have thought it proper to report the matter to your Lordships for instructions."

No. 184.

July 20, 1905.
Browning's Factor.

importance in the judicial administration of estates where the estate consists of shares on which there is uncalled capital. Even when such shares are paying a dividend it is the recognised duty of a factor to realise prudently, because such stock is not suitable for trust investment. On the other hand, where there is reasonable expediency for keeping the shares the Court has sometimes authorised their retention. When it comes to paying a sum of money to an outside person to take the shares off the hands of a judicial factor, I hardly think that is a step which he would be entitled to take on his own responsibility, and I agree that this is an application for special powers which we ought to entertain, and to deal with according to our belief of what is best for the estate. A prudent man of business would hold the investment for a year or two years rather than give a sum of money to a transferee to take it over. What a prudent man would do in his own affairs, not by way of speculation, but for the purpose of lessening loss to his estate, is, I think, a proceeding which in the interests of this estate the Court has power to authorise.

LORD ADAM and LORD KINNEAR concurred.

THE COURT pronounced this interlocutor:—"Find that in the circumstances of the case the factor is entitled, and is hereby allowed, to retain the shares, but only in hoc statu and for no definite time, and direct the factor, should any change occur in the circumstances of the New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency Company, Limited, at any time to communicate with the Accountant of Court as to his continuing to hold said shares: With this finding and direction remit to the Lord Ordinary to grant the prayer of the note on the conditions specified, and to proceed."

BONAR, HUNTER, & JOHNSTONE, W.S., Agents.

No. 185.

July 20, 1905.*
Earl of Lauderdale v. Scrymgeour Wedderburn.

FREDERICK HENRY, EARL OF LAUDERDALE, Pursuer.—Campbell, K.C.—Macphail.
HENRY SCRYMGEOUR WEDDERBURN, Defender.—Johnston, K.C.—Stevenson—Hunter.

Process—Proof—Diligence and Recovery of Writs—Hereditary Office—Fishing Diligence to prove Pedigree.—In an action by Lord Lauderdale against Scrymgeour Wedderburn for declarator that the pursuer had the sole right to the office of Hereditary Royal Standard-Bearer for Scotland, the defender stated that he was heir-male of a Scrymgeour to whom the office had been confirmed and of new granted in 1600, and heir-male of the original grantee of the office, to whom it was said to have been granted between 1057 and 1124. Proof having been allowed, the defender, with the view of ascertaining and proving his pedigree, moved for a diligence for recovery of documents under a specification which did not specify any particular document, and in effect embraced all documents relating to the family of Scrymgeour now in the possession of Lord Lauderdale or others on his behalf, provided that they were not titles of any lands now possessed by him. The Court granted the diligence.

FREDERICK HENRY, EARL OF LAUDERDALE, brought an action against Henry Scrymgeour Wedderburn of Wedderburn, in which the pur-

1ST DIVISION.

* Decided Dec. 16, 1904.

No. 185.
July 20, 1905.
Earl of Laudredale v. Scrymgeour Wedderburn.

suer concluded, inter alia, for declarator (1) that the pursuer had the only good right to the hereditary office of Royal Standard-Bearer for Scotland, (2) that the defender had no right to that office.

The pursuer alleged that the office of Hereditary Royal Standard-Bearer was confirmed and of new granted to Sir James Scrymgeour of Dudhope and his heirs-male by Act of Parliament 1600, cap. 44; and that John Scrymgeour, Earl of Dundee, to whom the office of Standard-Bearer belonged as heir-male and successor of Sir James Scrymgeour of Dudhope, having died in 1668 without issue or heirs-male, the office reverted to the Crown as ultimus hæres, and was granted to the pursuer's ancestor, Charles Maitland of Hatton, afterwards Earl of Lauderdale, by charter from the Crown in 1670. He also founded on a charter of recognition in favour of the same ancestor, and charters following upon sundry apprisings, and on Acts of Parliament sanctioning the grants in his ancestor's favour.

The defender averred that the hereditary office of Royal Standard-Bearer for Scotland was granted by the King to Sir Alexander Carron in return for an act of bravery either in the time of Malcolm III. (1057-1093) or of Alexander I. (1106-1124), and that the name of the family was then changed from Carron to Scrymgeour. He referred to a charter of lands dated in 1298 in favour of Alexander Scrymgeour for his past services as Royal Standard-Bearer, and a charter dated in 1458 in favour of the burgh of Dundee in which James Scrymgeour was named as "Vexillator domini nostri regis," and averred that there were numerous other evidences that the office of Standard-Bearer had been hereditary in the defender's family for centuries before the date of the Act 1600, cap. 44. (Ans. 3) "The defender is direct heir in male line of the Scrymgeours of Kirkton, a branch of the Scrymgeour family which is now the senior line of said family, and as such he is heir-male of the Sir James Scrymgeour mentioned in the Act 1600, cap. 44, and of the original grantee of the office of Hereditary Royal Standard-Bearer of Scotland."

The defender did not set forth any pedigree. He alleged that after the death of John Scrymgeour, Earl of Dundee, the Duke of Lauderdale, brother of Maitland of Hatton, surrounded the house of Dudhope, into possession of which John Scrymgeour of Kirkton had entered as heir, and seized all the family papers and records.

By interlocutor, dated 29th November 1904, the First Division allowed the parties a proof of their respective averments, and to the pursuer a conjunct probation.

On 16th December 1904 the defender moved for a diligence to recover documents under the following specification:—

"1. All charters, dispositions, conveyances, patents, gifts, presentations, assignations, warrants, signatures, procuratories and instruments of resignation, precepts and instruments of clare constat, and of sasine, of or relating to heritable offices, lands, baronies, teinds, patronages, and other heritages belonging to or possessed by the Scrymgeours, Constables of Dundee, or by other members of the Scrymgeour family, or otherwise by persons of the name of Scrymgeour.

"2. All general and special services and retours of the Scrymgeours, Constables of Dundee, or other members of the Scrymgeour family, or otherwise of persons of the name of Scrymgeour.

"3. All wadsets, contracts, bonds and other obligations, and reversions, renunciations, and discharges thereof; all charges, letters of [illegible]ning, inhibitions, and other diligences; all apprisings and adjudica-

No. 185.
July 20, 1905.
Earl of Lauderdale v. Scrymgeour Wedderburn.

tions; all rentals, tacks, and leases, and all petitions, summonses, interlocutors, and decreets to which the Scrymgeours, Constables of Dundee, or other members of the Scrymgeour family, or otherwise persons of the name of Scrymgeour, were parties, which were granted or pronounced in favour of, or which were directed or pronounced against, the said Scrymgeours, Constables of Dundee, or others of the name of Scrymgeour.

"4. All tailzies, settlements, wills, testaments, letters, memoranda, or other documents of or relating to Scrymgeours, Constables of Dundee, or others of the Scrymgeour family, or otherwise of or relating to persons of the name of Scrymgeour; [all which charters and other documents enumerated in the foregoing being those] which fell into the hands of the pursuer's authors at or after the death of John, Earl of Dundee, in 1668, or otherwise are now in the hands of the pursuer or others on his behalf [and which are not the titles of any lands now possessed by the pursuer]."

The words in square brackets were added by amendment made at the Bar.

Counsel for the pursuer objected to the diligence being granted, and argued;—The defender's demand here was not for particular documents or classes of documents, but for a warrant to search the pursuer's charter-chest in order that he might be able to make out a case which as yet he was not able even to aver. That was altogether incompetent.[1] The defender had not set forth any pedigree. His purpose now was to see if there was anything in the pursuer's charter-chest which would enable him to do so. If ever there was a fishing diligence it was this one. It was not admitted that the papers called for had been violently seized, but even if they were they had been in the peaceable possession of the pursuer and his predecessors for 200 years.

Argued for the defender;—The documents called for had a purely historical interest for the pursuer. His title did not depend on them, but upon the grants upon which he founded. The pursuer was in possession of Scrymgeour documents.[2] Indeed, this was admitted, and he had printed and produced some of them. It was not fair that he should have the choice as to which he should produce. These documents had been taken by force. The defender only claimed documents relating to the family of Scrymgeour. These were documents of the defender's family to which he had right of access, not only for proof but for information. The defender did not ask for any document which was a title of any lands now held by the pursuer.

LORD PRESIDENT.*—We have heard a full and anxious argument in this case, and undoubtedly it is a case of a great peculiarity. It is right to keep in view that the call is not made to support a claim to lands, but to a dignity. I could understand that a person in peaceable possession of lands would be well entitled to say,—"I will not be deprived of my estates except by someone who can at least aver a better title without ransacking my charter-chest to enable him to do so." But considerations of that kind

[1] Duke of Hamilton v. Douglas, 1761, Mor. Dict. 3966, at p. 3968; Ersk. Inst. iv. 1, 52; Richardson v. Fleming, March 12, 1867, 5 Macph. 586, 39 Scot. Jur. 295; Lord Lovat v. Fraser, Dec. 19, 1840, 16 F. C. (Oct.)

[2] Historical Manuscripts Commission (5th Report, 1876), App. p. 612.

* Lord Kinross.

No. 185.
July 20, 1905.
Earl of Lauderdale v. Scrymgeour Wedderburn.

are not of the same weight in the case of a claim to a dignity. It has also to be observed that many things are proper evidence in a claim to a dignity which would not be evidence in a claim to lands. I am in favour of granting the specification as it stands, subject to the restriction made at the Bar by Mr Johnston. Beyond the general objection to the granting of this diligence with which I have dealt, I did not understand that there was any particular objection to any special item of the specification.

LORD ADAM.—This is certainly a peculiar case, and the documents now called for are called for simply as historical documents. Mr Johnston is willing to amend his specification so that it includes no documents which can affect the title of Lord Lauderdale to lands now possessed by him. The documents are wanted for two purposes :—(1) in so far as they refer to the office of Standard-Bearer, and (2) in order that he may obtain information as to his own pedigree. It is the latter point that is more special. If the case were one of recent pedigree there might be difficulty. But it appears from statements on record that Mr Johnston's client, in order to establish his right, has to go back to an ancestor in the 15th century, and for this purpose it is clear that he may very legitimately have recourse to all available historical documents. Here it is said that these are documents which on the face of them belong to the Scrymgeour family, defender's ancestors, and necessary to prove his descent. I think he is entitled to recover them.

LORD M'LAREN.—I agree that the diligence should be granted. I think with your Lordships that nothing that we do in this case can affect the rules or throw any doubt on the practice with regard to access to titles in cases of proper competition as to heritable rights, where in general a party will not be allowed to make an examination of his opponent's charter-chest, but only to call for specified writings or deeds. Here no documents are asked for falling within the category of titles to any heritable property belonging to Lord Lauderdale; what are asked for are in fact historical documents. It is said, however, that this specification is not sufficiently limited, but it appears to me that it has this very specific limitation, viz., that the name Scrymgeour appears in every article of it, and this shews quite clearly that no such documents are asked for as would bring this specification under the rules affecting the recovery of the adverse party's title-deeds, as in the case of competing brieves. It is also to be noticed that if Mr Scrymgeour Wedderburn fails to make out his pedigree his whole case fails, while Lord Lauderdale does not assert any prior independent title in himself, but rests his case entirely on the failure of heirs-male of the Scrymgeour family. I would not have said so much on a question of granting a diligence, had it not been that in this case the granting of this diligence is a matter of great importance to the parties, and raises a question of principle.

LORD KINNEAR concurred.

THE COURT granted "diligence at the instance of the defender against havers for the recovery of the documents specified in his specification," as amended at the Bar.

TODS, MURRAY, & JAMIESON, W.S.—WILLIAM DUNCAN, S.S.C.—Agents.

COUNTY AUDITOR OF THE COUNTY OF LANARK, Pursuer (Appellant).—Mackenzie, K.C.—J. A. T. Robertson.
ROBERT LAMBIE AND OTHERS, Defenders (Respondents).—Campbell, K.C.—Constable.

No. 186.
July 20, 1905.*
County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

Local Government—Audit of County Council Accounts—Illegal Payments—Surcharge by Secretary for Scotland on persons "making" the payments—Finality of Secretary's determination—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50), secs. 70 and 75.—The Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, with respect to the audit of county council accounts, enacts, sec. 70, subsec. (5), that if it shall appear to any county auditor that any payment is contrary to law and should be disallowed, he shall report to the Secretary for Scotland, who after due inquiry shall decide all questions raised by the report and shall "disallow all illegal payments, and surcharge the same on the person or persons making them."

Sec. 75, subsec. (1), enacts, that "all cheques for payment of moneys shall be signed by two members of the Finance Committee, and be countersigned by the county clerk or by a deputy approved by the council."

The Secretary for Scotland, on a report by a county auditor, under sec. 70, subsec. (5), of the Act, disallowed certain payments made out of county funds, and surcharged them upon the individuals who signed and countersigned the cheques in terms of sec. 75, subsec. (1).

The county auditor having brought an action in the Sheriff Court against the persons surcharged by the Secretary for Scotland for decree for the amounts of the cheques, the defenders maintained that they were not liable on the grounds (1) that the Secretary's determination was not final as regarded the legality of the payments in question, and that the payments were legal, and (2) that, in any view, the Secretary's determination was ultra vires in so far as it surcharged the defenders, in respect that they were not the persons "making" the payments within the meaning of the Act, since they had acted merely ministerially in signing and countersigning the cheques.

Held (1) that as regarded the legality of the payments in question the determination of the Secretary for Scotland was final and not open to review; and (2) that the defenders had rightly been surcharged, in respect that, being the persons who had signed or countersigned the cheques, they were the persons "making" the payments in the sense of the Act.

2D DIVISION. Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

IN the course of his audit of the accounts of the County Council of Lanark for the year ending 15th May 1902, the auditor of the county, appointed under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889,† found

---

* Decided June 7, 1905.

† The Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50), enacts:—

Sec. 69. "The Secretary for Scotland shall from time to time appoint one or more fit persons (in this Act referred to as county auditors) to audit the accounts of each county council (including those of the district committees), and may remove any county auditor. . . .

"Subject to the regulations hereinafter contained, the Secretary for Scotland may make, and when made may revoke and vary, rules for the guidance of county auditors in the discharge of their duties: Provided that no such rules when made or varied shall be in force until they have lain for not less than one month on the table of both Houses of Parliament."

Sec. 70. "The following regulations with respect to audit shall be observed —that is to say," inter alia,—

"(5) If it shall appear to any county auditor acting in pursuance of this section that any payment is in his opinion contrary to law certain payments which, in his opinion, were contrary to law, and should be disallowed, and in accordance with sec. 70, subsec. (5), of the Act, he submitted to the Secretary for Scotland an interim report dealing with these payments.

No. 186. July 20, 1905. County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

The payments were in respect of the following, viz.:—

(1) Expenses to London, amounting in all to £50, 4s. 3d., of two officials and one County Councillor on the matter of the Police Superannuation (Scotland) Bill, charged on the Police Assessments.—Payment of these expenses was made by four cheques, signed respectively by two of the following County Councillors, who were also members of the Finance Committee of the Council, viz.:—Messrs Robert Lambie, William Neilson, William Templeton, John D. Scott, and A. G. Barns Graham, and all countersigned by Mr Thomas Munro, deputy county clerk. With respect to these payments the County Auditor in his report stated—"The nature of expenditure which may and should be disallowed or that any sum, which in his opinion ought to have been, is not brought into account by any person, whether such payment or failure to account has been made matter of objection or not, he shall by an interim report under his hand report thereon to the Secretary for Scotland, setting forth the grounds of his opinion as aforesaid; and the Secretary for Scotland shall cause such interim report to be intimated to the objector, if any, and to the officer or other person affected thereby; and after due inquiry the Secretary for Scotland shall decide all questions raised by such interim report, and shall disallow all illegal payments and surcharge the same on the person or persons making them, and shall allow all sums which ought to have been but have not been brought into account.

---

"(6) If the Secretary for Scotland shall be of opinion that, although a disallowance or surcharge might be lawfully made, the subject-matter thereof was incurred under such circumstances as to make it fair and equitable that the disallowance or surcharge should not be made, he may abstain from making the same.

"(7) Every sum determined by the Secretary for Scotland under this Act to be due from any person shall be paid by such person to the county council within fourteen days after such determination has been intimated to him, and if such sum is not so paid it shall be the duty of the county auditor to recover the same, and the county council shall reimburse him for his expenses, including a reasonable allowance for his time in so far as not recovered from the person surcharged."

Sec. 75. "(1) All payments to and out of the county fund shall be made to and by the county treasurer, and all payments out of the fund shall, unless made in pursuance of the specific requirement of an Act of Parliament or of a decree of a competent Court, or on the requisition of any district committee or standing joint committee, or for the periodical payment of salaries and wages, be made in pursuance of an order of the council signed by three members of the finance committee and countersigned by the county clerk, and the same order may include several payments. Moreover, all cheques for payment of moneys shall be signed by two members of the finance committee and be countersigned by the county clerk or by a deputy approved by the council.

"(2) Any such order may be stayed by note of suspension in the Bill-Chamber, and may be wholly or partly disallowed or confirmed with or without expenses.

"county council shall annually appoint a finance committee

No. 186.
July 20, 1905.
County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

be defrayed out of the Police Assessments is defined by the Police (Scotland) Act, 1857, sections 27, 28, 29, 40, 55, and 57, and by the Police (Scotland) Act, 1890, section 19. The above payments do not appear to fall within the scope of any of these sections."

(2) Expenses to London, amounting in all to £52, 5s. 6d., of a deputation of four County Councillors and one official in the matter of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, Continuation Act, 1901, charged on the General Purposes Assessment.—Payment of these expenses was made by five cheques, signed by Messrs Lambie and Neilson, and countersigned by Mr Alston Dykes, the County Clerk. With respect to these payments the County Auditor reported—"The above expenditure does not appear to me to have been made in the execution of any Act administered by the County Council."

On 4th June 1903 the Secretary for Scotland issued a determination, under section 70 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, with regard to the above payments. By this determination, on the narrative of the interim report by the auditor, and on the further narrative that "such interim report has been intimated to the persons affected thereby, and due inquiry made in terms of the aforesaid section," the Secretary for Scotland determined that the payments in question "are illegal, and I hereby disallow such payments, and surcharge the same upon the persons undermentioned, as the persons by whom the payments were made, they having signed the cheques by which payment was effected." Then followed a list setting forth with respect to each cheque the name of the payee, the amount of the cheque, and the "persons surcharged" the latter being the two County Councillors who had signed, and the County Clerk or Deputy County Clerk who had countersigned, the particular cheque.

The persons surcharged not having within fourteen days of the date of the determination paid the sums found to be due from them, the County Auditor brought an action under section 70, subsection (7), of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, in the Sheriff Court at Hamilton, praying for decree "against (first) the defenders Robert Lambie, William Neilson, and Thomas Munro, ordaining them, conjunctly and severally, or severally, and according to their respective liabilities, to make payment to the pursuer as County Auditor foresaid, or otherwise, to make payment to the County Council of the county of Lanark, of the sum of £18, 2s. 3d.," being the amount of a cheque signed by Messrs Lambie and Neilson, and countersigned by Mr Munro. Then followed similar prayers for decree, mutatis mutandis, identical with respect to each of the other cheques.

The pursuer set forth his interim report and the determination of the Secretary for Scotland, and pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The sums concluded for in the petition having been determined by the Secretary for Scotland, in virtue of the powers conferred on him by "The Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889," to have been illegally paid, and the said sums having been disallowed by him and surcharged on the for regulating and controlling the finance of their county; and an order for the payment of a sum out of the county fund, whether on account of capital or income, shall not, save in the cases mentioned in the first subsection of this section, be made by a county council except in pursuance of a resolution of the council passed on the recommendation of the finance committee, and any expenses, debt, or liability exceeding fifty pounds shall not, save as aforesaid, be incurred except upon a resolution of the council passed on an estimate submitted by the finance committee."

No. 186. July 20, 1905. County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

defenders, the defenders are conjunctly or severally liable to make payment of the respective sums surcharged upon them.

The defenders averred, inter alia;—(Ans. 4) " . . . Explained that the said determination is ultra vires, inept, wrongful, and disconform to the statute, in respect:—

" (1) That the payments disallowed were not illegal, but were properly made to defray expenses incurred, as regards the first four items, by the instructions of the Standing Joint Committee, in accordance with its duty as the authority administering the Police Pension Fund for the county of Lanark; and as regards the remaining five items, by the direct instructions of the County Council in accordance with its duty as the authority entitled to receive the Imperial grants in aid payable in respect of the reduction of rates under the Agricultural Rates, &c., Act, 1896. . . . The County Authorities, including the Commissioners of Supply and the County Council of Lanark, have always been in the practice of laying their views with reference to measures of administration affecting the interests of the county before Committees and Members of Parliament and Government departments or officials, with advantage to the county—as in the present cases — and to the legislation which supervened, and charges of expenses arising out of communings similar to those now in question have uniformly been charged against the County Fund without challenge,—a system which prevails throughout Scotland.

" (2) That in any event the Secretary for Scotland is not by virtue of section 70, subsection (5) of the Act of 1889, constituted the final Judge of what is a legal charge against the County Fund. . . . The jurisdiction of the Secretary for Scotland . . . does not extend beyond matters of taxation, or otherwise beyond determining whether payments have been duly authorised by the appropriate authority.

" (3) That even if the payments were illegal, they have not been surcharged on the person or persons making them in terms of the statute. The Standing Joint Committee made the first four payments, and the County Council the remaining five, both by the medium of the Finance Committee. Under section 75 of the Act of 1889 all cheques for the payment of money from the county funds must be signed by two members of the Finance Committee, and countersigned by the County Clerk, or by a deputy approved by the Council. In such a case the persons signing the cheques are not the persons making the payment. The individual members of the Finance Committee who signed the cheques in question have no veto or responsibility as such apart from their committee, and their signing the said cheques was merely a method of carrying out a payment made by the County Council or said committees, and a certification that the payment had received the sanction of the Finance Committee. It was in no sense a payment made by such members. The County Clerk and Deputy County Clerk, whose signatures appear on the said respective cheques, were bound to obey the instructions of the Finance Committee in granting said cheques, but they did not sign them as the said determination alleges. One or other of them countersigned the said cheques as required by section 75 (1) of the Act of 1889, to attest the authenticity of the signatures of the members of the Finance Committee signing them, and the fact that they were such members. Beyond verifying these facts, these officials incurred no responsibility by countersigning."

No. 186.
July 20, 1905.
County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(4) The payments disallowed being lawfully and properly charged against the County Council, et separatim, their legal chargeability not being within the competence of the Secretary for Scotland to decide, the determination of the Secretary for Scotland is ultra vires and inept, and decree of absolvitor should be granted. (5) The defenders not being within the meaning of the statute the persons making the payments challenged, should not have been surcharged therewith, and are entitled to be assoilzied, with expenses. (8) Separatim, the defenders William Alston Dykes and Thomas Munro not having signed said cheques, and in any event being bound to obey, and having acted under the instructions of their constituents, are not personally bound to pay the amounts surcharged upon them, and should be assoilzied, with expenses.

On 30th March 1904 the Sheriff-substitute (Thomson) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds that the defences stated are incompetent in the Sheriff Court, repels the same accordingly, and grants decree against the several defenders, conjunctly and severally, for payment to the pursuer of the several sums in terms of the prayer of the petition: Finds the defenders all conjunctly and severally liable to the pursuer in expenses," &c.

On 6th August 1904 the Sheriff (Guthrie) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds that the pursuer has not stated facts and circumstances relevant and sufficient to support the prayer of the petition: Therefore recalls the interlocutor of 30th March last, dismisses the petition, and decerns: Finds the appellants entitled to expenses," &c.*

---

* "NOTE.—. . . I decide the case on the assumption which, though it is not formally disposed of, is probably well founded, that the payments disallowed by the Secretary for Scotland are improper and beyond the powers of the County Council and the Joint Standing Committee. It may also be the case, though that also need not be decided here, that the statute commits to the Secretary for Scotland authority to determine finally whether these payments are or are not improper or ultra vires. There is room for argument as to the meaning of the Act on that point, although I am inclined to agree with Sheriff Thomson that the statute intends his determination to be conclusive, and the suit for recovery to be similar to an action to enforce a decree-arbitral.

"But in an action upon such a decree or determination,—and this is an ordinary action in a Court having jurisdiction to enforce the demand, and from which there is an appeal to the Supreme Court,—it is proper and incumbent upon the Judge to examine the decree-arbitral or determination which is the foundation of the suit in order to see whether it is valid and within the statute. . . .

"It humbly appears to me that the payments were not 'made' by the persons who signed and countersigned the cheques, except in a sense that a payment is made or goods delivered to John Smith by a messenger who is sent to pay or deliver by his employer. Suppose that employer be a banker or a lawyer directed to make a payment for a client, and that by mistake he pays through his messenger to a wrong person, the client's recourse is not against the messenger who did what he was ordered, and was bound to do, but against the banker or lawyer. In this case, which when analysed appears to be equally simple, the gentlemen who signed the cheques were merely the hands of the County Council who ordered the illegal payments to be made. This becomes clear when we turn to section 75 of the Act, which enacts (section 75 (1)), that all payments out of the County Fund shall be made by the County Treasurer, and except in certain specified cases, not including those now in question, that all payments out

No. 186.

July 20, 1905. County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

The pursuer appealed, and argued;—The determination of the Secretary was final both as regarded the legality of the payments and as regarded the persons on whom the surcharge was to be laid.[1] In any view the determination was right on both points. The meaning and policy of the Act was to leave the whole matter to the discretion of the Secretary for Scotland. If indeed the Secretary had gone flagrantly wrong, e.g., by laying the surcharge on persons who on no reasonable view could be regarded as the persons "making" the payment, a different question would be presented. There was no question of that sort here. To hold that persons who had signed and countersigned the cheque were the persons "making" the payment, provided a good working rule, and was a reasonable construction of the Act. In any case a reduction would be necessary, since a determination of the Secretary for Scotland was not a deed which could be reduced ope exceptionis under the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1877, section 11.[2]

The pursuer in the course of the hearing stated that he was willing that the argument should proceed on the footing that the defenders had brought a reduction of the Secretary's determination.

Argued for the defenders;—(1) The determination of the Secretary for Scotland was not final as regarded the legality of the payments in question. The Act 1889, section 70, subsection (5), dealt with pay-of the fund are to be made in pursuance of an order (see section 75 (3)), of the Council signed by three members of the Finance Committee and countersigned by the County Clerk. That is followed by a direction that cheques shall be signed by two members of the Finance Committee, &c. Obviously the duty of the person signing the cheques is only to see that the sum being paid falls under one of the heads enumerated in section 75 (1) or under an order of the Council, and they have not to do with the validity or legality of that order. It may even happen, as with the defendant Lovering in Attorney-General v. Tottenham Local Board, 27 L. Times R. 440, cited by Mr Smith, that they had voted against the payments for which in an executive capacity they signed the cheque. The accurate application of the rule would lead to the Treasurer's clerk being surcharged with 10s. paid by him by the Council's direction to a carriage-hirer for driving the members of a deputation in question to the railway station. It appears therefore that the rule respondeat superior must here be applied in construing the words in section 70, 'persons making them,' i.e., the payments, and that the pursuer has failed in his condescendence to set forth any case against the defenders. He avers (Art. 4) that notice was given to 'each of the defenders being the persons who had signed the several cheques,' but entirely forgets that the real responsibility rested on those who ordered the payments of which the cheques were but the means or the signs. It is not alleged that the objection was ever notified to those truly responsible, for there is not,—as I have tried to shew,—reason or justice in saying that the defenders in respect of the ministerial act of signing the cheques were the 'officers or persons' to whom, as 'affected thereby' notice of the objection should be made. The result of sustaining the relevancy would be, if a decree were ultimately given against them, that the defenders would be forced to raise other actions for their relief, whether against the persons receiving the moneys or against the individual councillors who authorised the payment it is unnecessary now to inquire."

---

[1] Maclachlan & Mackinnon v. Cameron, March 12, 1899, see infra, p. 1058, note.

[2] 40 and 41 Vict. cap. 50; Neill v. M'Nair, June 11, 1901, 3 F. (J. C.) 85, 3 Adam, 384.

ments that were "contrary to law," and empowered the Secretary for Scotland to disallow "all illegal payments"—not "all payments which he might judge to be illegal,"—and it was for the Courts of law, prima facie, to determine whether any payments were or were not illegal. It was contrary to general policy that there should not be a right of appeal to a Court of law on a question involving rights to property. Such a right of appeal would be held as excluded only by express enactment or by the clearest implication,[1] and there was neither here. On the contrary, the Act, section 75, subsection (2), plainly contemplated an appeal to the Courts, and the analogy of the English Local Government Act of 1888[2] bore out the same conclusion. The payments here were legal.[3] (2) In any view the determination of the Secretary for Scotland was ultra vires, in so far as it surcharged the payments on the defenders. Assuming that the payments were illegal or, what came to the same thing, that the Secretary was final on that point, there was nothing in the Act to suggest that the Secretary was entitled without appeal to surcharge the payments on any persons he thought fit. It was for the Court when called on to enforce the Secretary's determination, to say whether the right persons had been surcharged. It was not necessary to bring a reduction to raise this question.[4] The Act, sec. 70, subsec. (7), provided a form of action for the recovery of illegal payments, and if the payments were illegal, either because the Court held so, or because the Secretary's determination was final on that point, it was doubtful whether the defenders had a title to bring a reduction of the determination, since their only interest was to see that decree did not go out against them if they were not the persons liable.[5] But all difficulty as to the form of the action had been removed by the pursuers' concession that the argument was to be taken on the footing that a reduction had been brought. The Court undoubtedly had jurisdiction to reduce a determination of the Secretary which was ultra vires.[6] The defenders were not the persons "making" these payments; they were the mere hands by which the payments were made. The Act itself said that all payments were to be "made" by the County Treasurer; but the true view was, looking to the substance of the thing, that the payments were made by the persons by whom the payments were authorised—that was to say, the members of the County Council or of the particular committee as individuals, for, of course, to lay the surcharge on the County Council or the committee as such would mean laying the surcharge on the County Council accounts, which would be meaningless. Delivery of a cheque was not payment; the actual payment was made by the bank-teller who gave cash for the cheque, so that if the actual fact of payment was the test the surcharge ought to have been laid on the bank-teller, which was a reductio ad absurdum. In

---

[1] Hardcastle on Statutes, 3d edit., p. 134.

[2] 51 and 52 Vict. cap. 41, sec. 71, subsec. 3.

[3] Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon, 1878, L. R., 10 Ch. Div. 204; Magistrates of Leith v. Leith Dock Commissioners, July 25, 1899, 1 F. (H. L.) 65.

[4] Russell v. Magistrates of Hamilton, Dec. 17, 1897, 25 R. 350; Smith v. Magistrates of Irvine, Nov. 14, 1892, 5 F. 113.

[5] Nivison v. Howat, Nov. 22, 1883, 11 R. 182.

[6] Eastern District Committee of Dumbartonshire County Council v. Police Commissioners of Clydebank, Oct. 19, 1893, 21 R. 12.

No. 186.
July 20, 1905.
County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

any view, the county clerk and the deputy county clerk were not liable, in the first place, because countersigning a cheque was not signing the cheque, it was merely certifying the signatures of those who signed; and in the second place, because the county clerk and the deputy county clerk had no discretion or option in the matter, they were merely the servants of the County Council.

At advising,—

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Sheriff of Lanarkshire dismissing as irrelevant an action brought by the Auditor of that county for recovery of the sums surcharged upon the defenders by a determination of the then Secretary for Scotland, dated 4th June 1903. This determination bears to have been made under sec. 70 (5) of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, which requires the Secretary for Scotland, on receiving an interim report from the County Auditor that any payment is, in his opinion, contrary to law, and should be disallowed, to intimate the report, and after due inquiry to "decide all questions" raised thereby, and to "disallow all illegal payments, and surcharge the same on the person or persons making them." The payments in question were charged in the accounts of the County Council for the year ending 15th May 1902, and consisted of sums amounting to £50, 4s. 3d. and £52, 5s. 6d. respectively, for expenses of certain County Councillors and officials on visits to London in connection with Parliamentary proceedings. The Secretary for Scotland, after intimation to the defenders and due inquiry, determined that these payments were illegal, disallowed them, and surcharged the same upon the defenders as the persons by whom the payments were made, "they having signed the cheques by which payment was effected."

The defenders challenge the determination upon two main grounds. They say (1) that the Secretary for Scotland is not final as to the illegality of the payments; and (2) that, even if he were, he has surcharged the wrong persons. It is on the second of these grounds that the Sheriff has dismissed the action as irrelevant, for on the first question, though not actually deciding it, he indicates an opinion adverse to the defenders. I am unable to agree with the conclusion of the learned Sheriff in dismissing the action.

I admit that the legality of any payment made out of a statutory fund would, apart from express provision in the statute establishing the fund, be a question for the Courts of law. This statute contains a provision (sec. 75 (2)) for any order of a County Council for payment out of the County Fund being stayed by a prescribed legal proceeding. But it also contains the provision (sec. 70 (5)) in virtue of which the Secretary for Scotland has issued his determination. That provision does not in terms declare that his decision shall be final. But it does not contain any machinery for review; it does not require him to describe the nature of the inquiry which he has made, or to state any reasons for his decision. The whole proceeding has reference merely to the particular items in the accounts under audit; it is essentially of a partly discretionary and altogether summary kind, for the Minister, even when satisfied that a surcharge might lawfully be made, may abstain from making it, if circumstances render such a course fair and equitable; and when he does make a surcharge, payment is to follow within fourteen days from the determination being intimated. It seems to me, therefore, that we have no materials, and no jurisdiction to review what the minister has done in the exercise of a statutory duty which is partly, no doubt, judicial, but is also largely administrative.

No. 186.

July 20, 1905.

County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

On the second question, it is unnecessary to consider whether, there also, the determination is conclusive, for I am clearly of opinion that, whether conclusive or not, it is right. Once the Secretary for Scotland has decided that payments are contrary to law, he has no option but to disallow them and to "surcharge the same on the person or persons making them." These latter words are in marked contrast to the words in the English Local Government Act (51 and 52 Vict. ch. 41), which, by reference to sec. 247 of the Public Health Act, 1875, (7) and (8), directs the Auditor to "disallow every item of account contrary to law, and surcharge the same on the person making or authorising the making of the illegal payment," subject to appeal either to the Court of Queen's Bench or to the Local Government Board. Who, then, are the persons making the payments under the Scottish Act? Clearly, I think, the persons who sign and countersign the cheques by which alone, under sec. 26 (2), and sec. 75 (1), payments out of the county fund can be made. It is said that these persons, in so doing, acted ministerially, and as the mere hands of the Standing Joint Committee, or the County Council and its Finance Committee, as the case may be. I do not doubt it; nor do I doubt that there may be hardship in holding the defenders personally liable for their ministerial acts. They may or may not have claims of relief against the persons who directed the payments to be made, or against the persons who received the money. As to that we can decide nothing in this action. All we can do is to construe sec. 70, and its meaning seems to be clear. If considerations of hardship be relevant at all, I would venture to point out that, in general, it is better for county councillors and county officials to be subject to the arbitrament of a minister of the Crown, invested with large discretionary and dispensory powers in individual cases, than to be left to the decision of a Court of law which would have no such discretion on the abstract question of legality.

I am therefore of opinion that we should sustain the appeal, and substantially revert to the judgment of the Sheriff-substitute, omitting his finding that the defences stated are incompetent in the Sheriff Court, for the pursuer asked us to take the case on the same footing as if the defenders had brought a reduction of the Secretary for Scotland's determination.

LORD KYLLACHY.—I concur, and have nothing to add except this—I had occasion, so far back as March 1899, to consider and decide in the Outer-House a precisely similar question to that raised in this action. The question there arose in a reduction of a certain report to and deliverance by the Secretary for Scotland, made with reference to alleged illegal payments in the county of Inverness—payments as here made by cheque—and surcharged as here upon the persons signing the cheques. The whole matter was then very fully argued, some other questions being included which do not arise here: and I came to the conclusion which Lord Stormonth-

No. 186. July 20, 1905. County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

Darling has just expressed, both with respect to the question (1) whether the Secretary for Scotland had gone outside the statute; and (2) whether, supposing he kept within the statute, his deliverance was subject to review. I do not think it necessary to say more than that, with all possible impartiality, I have endeavoured to reconsider the judgment I then pronounced. I remain of the opinion I then expressed—an opinion which will be found reported in 6 Scots Law Times, at page 384, the case being Maclachlan & Mackinnon v. Cameron.*

---

* MACLACHLAN & MACKINNON v. CAMERON, March 12, 1899.

In 1895 in an action between the Skye District Committee of the County Council of Inverness and the proprietor of an estate in the island, the District Committee was found liable in expenses to the proprietor. Payment of these expenses, as well as of the expenses of the District Committee in the action, was ultimately made by cheques drawn on funds which had been remitted to the District Committee by the County Council and placed in the District Committee's bank. These cheques were signed by the District clerks, Messrs Maclachlan & Mackinnon, solicitors, Portree, and by two members of the District Committee.

On 20th February 1897, on a report by Mr R. F. Cameron, C.A., Inverness, the County Auditor, the Secretary for Scotland, acting under section 70, subsection (5), of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, issued a determination by which he found the payment of these expenses to be illegal, disallowed the same, and surcharged the amount on Messrs Maclachlan & Mackinnon and the two members of the District Committee who had signed the cheques, as being the persons making the payments.

In July 1897 the County Auditor, Mr Cameron, acting under section 70, subsection (7), of the Act, raised an action for payment of the amount surcharged against Messrs Maclachlan & Mackinnon and the two members of the District Committee who had signed the cheques. This action was sisted to allow the defenders to bring an action for reduction of the determination of the Secretary for Scotland; and in November 1897 they brought an action of reduction against the Secretary for Scotland and the Lord Advocate, as representing him, and also against the County Council of Inverness and the Skye District Committee, for any interest they might have. The Secretary for Scotland and the Lord Advocate lodged preliminary defences, in which they pleaded that the action, in so far as directed against them, was incompetent. On 20th July 1898 the Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy) sustained these preliminary defences, found that the action, in so far as directed against the Secretary for Scotland, was incompetent, and dismissed the same in so far as directed against him and the Lord Advocate as representing him, on the ground, as set forth in the Lord Ordinary's opinion, that the Secretary for Scotland having discharged his statutory duty was functus, and had no interest or right to defend. "If there are grounds for reduction, it appears to me that it is against the County Auditor, the pursuer in the original action, that the reduction should be brought."

Messrs Maclachlan & Mackinnon and the two members of the District Committee who had signed the cheques then, in December 1898, brought the present action of reduction against the County Auditor, Mr Cameron, and against the County Council and the District Committee, for any interest they might have. The ground of reduction was that the Secretary for Scotland in issuing the determination had acted ultra vires in respect, inter alia, that the determination surcharged the payments on the pursuers, they not being the persons making the payments in the sense of the Act.

Defences were lodged by the County Auditor and by the County Council. The County Auditor pleaded that the action, in so far as directed against him, was incompetent, and both the compearing defenders pleaded that the

No. 186.
July 20, 1905.
County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—I concur in the opinion read by Lord Stormonth-Darling and concurred in by Lord Kyllachy. I have felt the greatest possible difficulty on the second point—that of surcharge—but I have been forced to the conclusion that the opinion expressed, though it seems somewhat strained, is necessitated by the absolute and express provisions of the statute.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I also concur.

---

determination of the Secretary for Scotland being in all respects in conformity with his powers, the action should be dismissed.

In this action Campbell, K.C., and Cook appeared for the pursuers, and Sol.-Gen. Dickson and M'Lennan for the defenders.

On 12th March 1899—

LORD KYLLACHY.—(After expressing the opinion that the action had been properly directed against the County Auditor, and that all the necessary parties had been called)—The points, however, which are really important are —(1) Whether in making the determination here challenged the Secretary for Scotland has exceeded his powers; and (2) whether, if not, the statute permits review by this Court on the merits. This last point may perhaps belong rather to the original action (which has not, I observe, been conjoined), but it formed part of the argument, and I think I may deal with it now.

Now, the deviations from the statute alleged by the pursuers are, I think, these:—They say, in the first place, that the Secretary for Scotland had only power to surcharge the alleged illegal payment "on the person or persons making it," these last being the words of the statute (section 70, subsection 5), and that in surcharging the pursuers, who merely signed the cheque by which the payment in question was made, he has not surcharged the right persons —that is to say, the right persons in the sense of the Act. This is the first and principal excess of power which the pursuers allege.

Now, as to this the defenders' answer is twofold. They say, to begin with, that the ascertainment of the person or persons making the illegal payment is just one of the matters left to the Secretary for Scotland—the statute (sec. 70, subsec. 5) providing that he "shall decide all questions raised by the interim report," and subsec. 7 providing further that "any sum determined by the Secretary of Scotland under this Act to be due by any person shall be paid by such person to the county council within fourteen days after such determination."

The defenders contend further that, even if the construction of the statutory words is ultimately for the Court, the Secretary for Scotland has selected the right persons. They urge that where a payment is made by cheque, the persons making the payment are and can only be the persons who sign the cheque, and that the statute contemplating, as it does, that all payments shall be made by cheque must be held to have had this in view. They point out further that the surcharge falls to be made, not on the persons authorising the payment, but on the persons making it—and the Scotch Statute, in this respect differing from the English Local Government Act of 1888, which (incorporating the provisions of the Public Health Act of 1875) provides for illegal payments being surcharged (subject to appeal) "upon the person making or authorising the making of the alleged payment."

I am of opinion that on both points the defenders are right. I agree with them in their view that the Secretary for Scotland has to decide as to the person to be surcharged, and I incline to agree also—taking the facts as they appear upon record—that there is no sufficient ground for impeaching his decision on that question—(His Lordship then adverted to a branch of the case not now reported).

I am therefore of opinion that the pursuers have failed to impugn the

No. 186.

July 20, 1905. County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Sustain the appeal: Recall the interlocutor appealed against, as also the interlocutor of the Sheriff-substitute dated 30th March 1904: Grant decree against the several defenders conjunctly and severally for payment to the pursuer of the several sums amounting in all to the sum of £102, 9s. 6d. in terms of the prayer of the petition."

GRAHAM, JOHNSTON, & FLEMING, W.S.—TODS, MURRAY, & JAMIESON, W.S.—Agents.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.* Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

WILLIAM SOMMERVILLE & SON, LIMITED, Pursuers (Reclaimers).—Lord-Adv. Dickson—Shaw, K.C.—Blackburn.
THE EDINBURGH AND DISTRICT WATER TRUSTEES, Defenders (Respondents).—Clyde, K.C.—Cooper, K.C.—R. S. Brown.

River—Pollution—Water supply for a town—Compensation water to riparian owners—Quality of compensation water—Reparation—Neglect of statutory duty.—The water supply system of the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees included the Glencorse Reservoir in the Pentland Hills. This reservoir, which was constructed under statutory authority, was both validity of the Secretary for Scotland's determination as being outwith or disconform to the statute. And that is, I apprehend, enough to dispose of this action of reduction. But the original action is still before me, and it remains to consider whether in the one action or the other the pursuers can successfully maintain what I think was their last contention, viz., that, assuming the entire validity of the determination as a determination under the statute, it was not, on the just reading of the statute, final, but operated merely as a prima facie deliverance, which, under the statute, put the duty upon the county auditor of impeaching the legality of the surcharged payment in a Court of law.

---

I must say that, having given it all attention, I have not been able to appreciate this argument. It is quite true that when a new jurisdiction is conferred by statute upon a Sheriff or magistrate or other inferior Judge, there is, as has often been said, no such thing as implied finality. The presumption always is that review exists, unless clearly excluded. But it is, I should think, obvious that this principle, sound as it is, can have no application to the Secretary for Scotland, or to a jurisdiction such as that here in question conferred upon or transferred to him as the head of the Scotch Executive. The jurisdiction is partly, no doubt, judicial, but to a large extent it is also administrative, and involves, moreover, as section 70 of the Act shews, a very large element of discretion. I should not, I confess, expect to find that the Legislature in putting such duties upon the Secretary for Scotland placed him with respect to review in the position of an inferior Judge. And accordingly when I find, as I do, that the statute declares that he shall decide certain questions, and that upon his decisions payments shall be made and may be enforced by action, it appears to me that, so far from the statute contemplating review on the merits, it excludes such review as plainly as it can do so without express words. On the whole matter I shall repel the reasons of reduction and assoilzie the defenders; and with respect to the petitory action, I shall recall the sist and grant decree in terms of the summons.

The Lord Ordinary assoilzied the defenders in the action of reduction, and, in the petitory action, recalled the sist and granted decree in terms of the summons.

Duncan Smith & MacLaren, S.S.C.—Forbes Dallas & Co., W.S.—Agents.

---

* Decided March 10, 1905.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.

Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

a supply reservoir and a compensation reservoir, the trustees being by statute bound to allow to flow out of the reservoir down the Glencorse Burn 220 cubic feet of water per minute, as full compensation for the right conferred on them to stop, dam up, and store the water of the burn.

The summer and autumn of 1902 were exceptionally dry, and in consequence the Glencorse Reservoir became so much depleted of water that the silt or mud which had accumulated at the bottom of the reservoir became exposed to the air in the shallower portions, with the result that in the following winter, owing to the action of frost, rain, and wind on the exposed silt, the water of the reservoir became contaminated with large quantities of very fine sand, which took a long time to settle. In consequence the compensation water passed down the Glencorse Burn in a very discoloured condition, which made it unfit for use in the manufacture of paper. This state of matters lasted for about three months.

In April 1903 the owners of paper mills on the Glencorse Burn about three miles below the reservoir, who were almost entirely dependent on the water of the burn for their water supply, brought an action against the Water Trustees for damages on account of loss sustained by the pursuers in the manufacture of their paper owing to the discoloured condition of the water.

The defenders, who had throughout the drought continued to supply the city of Edinburgh with water from the reservoir, maintained that they were not responsible for the quality of the compensation water, in respect that their duty was to supply Edinburgh with water from the reservoir subject only to the condition of giving off the specified quantity of compensation water—a condition which (it was not disputed) they had fulfilled.

Held, after a proof (1) that although the defenders were by the statute entitled to store the water in the reservoir, it was their duty to use the reservoir so that the compensation water should not be unnecessarily polluted; and (2) (diss. Lord Young, rev. judgment of Lord Low) on the evidence that the defenders had failed to perform this duty, and were liable in damages to the pursuers.

2D DIVISION. Lord Low.

THE Edinburgh water supply system, in so far as situated in the South Pentlands, was constructed by the Edinburgh Water Company under the authority of a series of private Acts of Parliament, dating from 1819 onwards.* By the Edinburgh and District Water-Works

---

* ACT, 1819.—In 1819, by the Act 59 Geo. III. cap. cxvi., entitled "An Act for more effectually supplying the city of Edinburgh and places adjacent with water," the Edinburgh Water Company obtained power (sec. 36) to take and use for the purposes of their undertaking the spring called the Crawley Spring (which had formerly flowed into the Glencorse Burn), and such quantity of water from the Glencorse Burn "as the said Company shall deem expedient."

Sec. 44 further authorised the Company "to collect and dam up all the flood waters of Glencorse Burn and its tributary streams" in a "compensation reservoir" authorised to be made "for the purpose of making compensation to the said owners or occupiers of mills and landowners on the said burn of Glencorse, and on the said river North Esk below its junction with the said burn, for the water hereinbefore authorised to be taken from the said Crawley Spring and Glencorse Burn, for the purposes of this Act," and (sec. 54) an obligation was laid on the Company to discharge specified quantities of water into the Glencorse Burn.

Glencorse Reservoir was built under the powers thus conferred.

The Act of 1819 further enacted (sec. 64) that in the event of the reservoir proving inadequate to provide the quantities of compensation water specified the water from the burn and from the Crawley Spring should, on application to the Sheriff, be turned into their original channels, and should continue to flow therein for the use of the lands and mills so long as such

No. 187. July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

Act, 1869 (32 and 33 Vict. cap. cxliv.), sec. 20, the undertaking of the Edinburgh Water Company and its whole powers, rights, and properties, were transferred to the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees, who were incorporated under sec. 5 of the Act.

The South Pentlands portion of the system included two reservoirs —the Glencorse Reservoir and the Loganlee Reservoir. The Loganlee Reservoir was on a higher level than the Glencorse Reservoir, and discharged its water into the Glencorse Reservoir by means of the Logan Burn.

The Glencorse Reservoir was both a supply reservoir and a compensation reservoir. The water for the supply of the town passed out of Glencorse Reservoir through filter-beds at a weir a little distance below the reservoir and was conveyed by a conduit to Edinburgh. About a mile below the reservoir the conduit was connected with the Crawley cistern, which collected the water from an adjacent source of supply called the Crawley Spring.

---

deficient supply should continue to exist. This clause was repeated in all subsequent statutes.

Act 1843.—In 1843, by the Act 6 and 7 Vict. cap. lxxxix., secs. 141 and 143, it was enacted that the Company should erect a gauge on the Glencorse Burn near the Crawley cistern through which they were required to allow to flow down the burn the quantities of water specified in the Act, which were somewhat different from those specified in the Act of 1819.

Act 1847.—In 1847, by the Act 10 and 11 Vict. cap. ccii., the Company was empowered (sec. 49) "to raise the embankments of their existing reservoir on Glencorse Burn, and to make and maintain the several channels, cuts, conduits, aqueducts, and other reservoirs and works necessary for the purpose of obtaining, collecting, storing, and conveying to the city and suburbs of Edinburgh a further supply of water, according to and in the lines and upon the lands delineated" on the plans and described in the books of reference.

The Loganlee Reservoir was built under the powers thus conferred.

Sec. 70 of the Act of 1847 enacted,—"In order to make compensation to the owners of lands, mills, and other works upon Logan Burn and the North Esk River, for the right conferred on the Company to stop, dam up, store, and use the whole waters thereof above the Crawley cistern . . . the Company shall allow to flow through the gauge presently placed near the said Crawley cistern . . . 220 cubic feet per minute for ever thereafter, as a full compensation for the right hereby conferred on the Company to stop, dam up, store, and use the whole of the waters draining by the said Glencorse Burn and its tributaries above the said Crawley cistern," provided always that in the event of the reservoirs proving insufficient to supply the quantity of compensation water specified the landowners should be entitled to apply to the Sheriff in terms of sec. 64 of the Act of 1819.

Sec. 74 of the Act of 1847 enacted that it should be lawful to the Sheriff, upon application to him by the Company "to authorise the Company to draw and let off the water of their reservoirs, when and so often as it shall appear to them to be necessary, for the purpose of repairing the same or any of their works," the Company making full compensation for any loss or damage that may be thereby sustained.

Sec. 75 enacted that the Company "shall not cleanse any of the filter-beds already formed or which may be hereafter formed upon Glencorse Burn by flushing the same, or sending the impurities therein collected down the said burn, but they shall remove and carry away all such collected matter and impurities, so that the quality of the water in the stream may not be thereby affected."

Under their Acts the Water Company, and afterwards the Water Trustees, were bound to supply compensation water to the lower heritors and millowners out of the reservoirs, the quantity of the compensation water being ultimately fixed at 220 cubic feet per minute. This compensation water flowed out of the Glencorse Reservoir, and without going through the filter-beds above mentioned passed into the channel of the Glencorse Burn, which joined the river North Esk about three miles below the reservoir. At a point on the burn opposite the Crawley cistern a gauge was placed for the purpose of measuring the quantity of water that passed down the burn.

The Dalmore Paper Mills, belonging to Messrs William Sommerville & Son, Limited, were situated at the junction of the Glencorse Burn and the North Esk. The Dalmore mills had been in existence as paper mills since 1835, and prior to that date a grain mill had existed on the same site from time immemorial. The paper made at the Dalmore Mills was of a high-class quality, and the water used in its production was drawn principally from the Glencorse Burn.

The summer and autumn of 1902 were exceptionally dry, and in consequence the Glencorse Reservoir was so much depleted of water (partly for the supply of the town and partly for the compensation water) that large portions of the deposits of silt and mud at the bottom of the reservoir were exposed to the air. The effect was that in the following winter (1902-3) owing to the action of frost, rain, and wind on the exposed silt, large quantities of very fine silt (which when mixed with water took a long time to settle) became mixed with the water of the reservoir and passed down the Glencorse Burn, making its water unfit for the purposes of Messrs Sommerville's paper manufacture, as it discoloured the paper. This state of matters lasted from December 1902 to March 1903.

The Water Trustees having repudiated all responsibility for the quality of the water in the Glencorse Burn, Messrs Sommerville, in April 1903, brought the present action against the trustees concluding for declarator "(primo) that the defenders are bound to allow to flow through the gauge near the Crawley cistern . . . and down the Glencorse Burn for the use of the pursuers and the other owners of lands and mills on the said burn and on the North Esk River 220 cubic feet of water per minute in compensation for the water which the defenders are, under their Acts of Parliament, authorised to impound and to divert from the said burn and its tributaries for the use of the city of Edinburgh and other places; (secundo) that the pur-

---

Act 1856.—In 1856, by the Act 19 and 20 Vict. cap. xci., the Company was incorporated.

Secs. 85, 88, and 89 of the Act of 1856 re-enacted secs. 70, 74, and 75 respectively of the Act of 1847.

Sec. 73 enacted:—"The Company shall at all times maintain efficient filter-beds or filters in connection with their works at Glencorse, . . . and shall filter all water supplied through the . . . main pipes, with the exception of water derived from springs, and conveyed directly from such springs in pipes or covered aqueducts to the distribution pipes of the Company, and such filtering operations shall be so conducted that all the water supplied for domestic use shall be pure and wholesome water." The Town Council of Edinburgh were empowered to apply to the Sheriff for the enforcement of this enactment.

There was no other reference in any of the Acts to the quality of the water.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

suers have good and undoubted right to have the whole of the said 220 cubic feet of compensation water per minute transmitted through the said gauge either (first) in a state fit for all primary purposes, or otherwise (second) in a state not inferior in quality or purity to the state of the said water before it enters either of the defenders' reservoirs known as the Loganlee and Glencorse Reservoirs, or otherwise (third), in a state not inferior in quality or purity to the state of the said water when it enters the defenders' reservoir known as the Glencorse Reservoir; and (tertio), that the defenders are bound to allow to flow through the said gauge not less than 220 cubic feet of water per minute in such of the said three foregoing alternative states as" the Court should determine. Then followed conclusions for interdict, and for decree for £5000 as damages.

The pursuers, after setting forth the defenders' statutes substantially as given supra, pp. 1061-3 note, averred;—(Cond. 7) "Since 1835 the pursuers and their predecessors have used the water coming down the Glencorse Burn in the ordinary processes of manufacturing paper, and, except as after mentioned, it was always in such a state as to be perfectly suitable for being so used. . . . The only other water available for their purpose is derived from a spring on the pursuers' lands, but the supply from this source is quite inadequate to keep the mills going." (Cond. 8) "Before the construction of the water-works the water in the said burn was fit for primary purposes and was used therefor, and from the commencement of said works until about the second week of December 1902," except on certain occasions in November 1901, "the water sent down the said burn continued to be so fit and used. From time immemorial the water supply for domestic purposes for various houses on the pursuers' lands was partly derived from the said burn. It is essential for the purpose of manufacturing white printing papers (which are chiefly the papers that have been made by the pursuers and their predecessors) that the water used should be pure, and until recently the pursuers had no serious cause of complaint with the quality of the compensation water supplied. After a heavy rainfall, when the burn is in flood, the water is occasionally unfit for use, but the burn has a rapid flow and a short course and the impurities from this cause never last more than a day or two at a time. In order to be prepared for such emergencies the pursuers have been in the habit of storing a reserved stock of water, which, together with the supply from the spring above mentioned, affords the necessary supply of pure water and keeps the mills going for about two and a half days. The pursuers have always found that before this supply was exhausted the water in the burn was again fit for use, and they have never suffered any loss through the impurity of the water in the burn caused by natural flooding. . . ."

(Cond. 9) "On or about the 12th day of December 1902 it was found that the water flowing down the burn to the pursuers' mill was so contaminated with silt and sand as to be quite unfitted for primary purposes or for the purposes of papermaking, and it continued in this condition without any material improvement until about the 7th day of March 1903. . . . This condition of the water was not due to flooding or any other natural cause, but to the fault and negligence of the defenders, and might have been prevented by reasonable precaution on their part. The defenders allowed great quantities of silt and sand to collect at the bottom of the Glencorse Reservoir. They were all along aware that this was going on. They however," except on the occasions in November 1901, "kept such a quantity of water in the Glencorse Reservoir that the said silt and sand was not disturbed and no evil results happened until last December. For some time prior to 12th December 1902 the defenders had drawn very largely on the Glencorse Reservoir and had very seriously depleted the water stored therein. The result of this depletion was to reduce the level of the water therein below the accumulation of silt and sand in the shallower parts of the reservoir, and to leave very little depth of water over other parts of said accumulation. In consequence, the water flowing into the Glencorse Reservoir, which was quite fit for primary purposes and for papermaking as it entered that reservoir, was mixed with the silt and sand which was stirred up in the reservoir and became quite brown and turbid, being mixed with silt and sand. The result was that, instead of pure water such as entered the Glencorse Reservoir being sent down as compensation water, the water which was sent down was very dirty and impure and quite unfit for primary purposes or for paper manufacturing purposes. The said silt or sand is so fine that when mixed with the water it does not readily precipitate therefrom, and for months after said 12th December the whole compensation water sent down the Glencorse Burn by the defenders was dirty, impure, and unfit as aforesaid. . . . But for the defenders' operations and actings there would have been all along, and especially since November 1902 an ample supply of pure water in the said burn sufficient for all the pursuers' purposes, and whatever the other obligations of the defenders were they were bound ante omnia to continue to the pursuers such a supply of pure water up to the statutory quantity of 220 cubic feet. . . ." Then followed (Cond. 10) averments as to the amount of damages.

In their defences the defenders, inter alia, averred;—(Ans. 9) "Owing to prolonged drought towards the end of 1902 the water in the Glencorse Reservoir became very low. This was the necessary result of (1) implement by the defenders of their obligation under the Acts referred to, to send a fixed quantity of water down the Glencorse Burn, and (2) the withdrawal of the necessary supply of water for the inhabitants of Edinburgh as required and authorised by statute. When the water had sunk below its usual level the fact was disclosed that a certain quantity of silt had been deposited in the reservoir during the course of years by the streams flowing into the reservoir. The existence of this silt to the extent deposited was not known to the defenders, and it could not have been removed by them. The defenders are under no obligation to filter the water which is sent from the reservoir down the Glencorse Burn. During the period referred to they discharged from the reservoir the water which they were bound to discharge. This water was perfectly suitable for driving a grain mill. . . . Prior to the formation of the reservoir the quality of the water in the Glencorse Burn varied greatly, and in times of spate, which were frequent, the water could not be used for any primary purposes. The result of constructing the reservoirs has been to hold back spate water, and consequently the water passing down the burn from the reservoir is much more equal in quality throughout the year than it formerly was. In consequence of the said drought towards the end of 1902, prior to 12th December 1902, the Glencorse and other burns flowing into the reservoir became dry, and if the reservoir had not been in existence, and there had not been a supply of compensation water flowing from it, there would have been practically no water in the burn at the pursuers' mill."

No. 187.
July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

The pursuers pleaded, inter alia;—(2) The compensation water supplied to the pursuers being in lieu of the water impounded and diverted by the defenders, they are entitled to have the same transmitted to them by the defenders in the state of purity concluded for in the summons, and decree of declarator and interdict should be pronounced as concluded for. (3) The pursuers having suffered loss and damage to the extent concluded for by the wrongful and illegal actings and neglect of the defenders, they are entitled to decree for damages as concluded for. (4) The defenders not having supplied compensation water of the quality required by the statutes condescended on, and the pursuers having in consequence suffered loss, they are entitled to decree as concluded for. (5) The pursuers having been wrongfully deprived by the actings and operations of the defenders of the compensation water to which the pursuers were entitled under the statutes, they are entitled to decree as concluded for.

The defenders pleaded;—(3) The pursuers' averments, so far as material, being unfounded in fact, the defenders should be assoilzied. (4) The defenders should be assoilzied in respect that they have all along fulfilled their whole obligations under the statutes with regard to compensation water. (5) The defenders should be assoilzied in respect that (a) the statutes do not impose any obligation on the defenders to maintain the compensation water at any standard of purity; (b) the pursuers' mill was erected after the compensation reservoir was authorised; and (c) the pursuers have no right under the statutes to require that the compensation water from the reservoir should be adapted to the processes of their manufacture.

A proof was allowed and led. The import of the evidence sufficiently appears from the opinions of the Lord Ordinary and the Court.

On 13th July 1904 the Lord Ordinary (Low) assoilzied the defenders from the conclusions of the summons.*

---

* "OPINION.—The first question which I shall consider in this case is, what are the rights of millowners and other riparian proprietors on the Glencorse Burn in regard to compensation water?

"1. In regard to quantity. The amount of the compensation water is fixed by the 85th section of the Act of 1856 (19 and 20 Vict. c. xci.) at 220 cubic feet per minute. That amount is passed through a gauge at Crawley, which is about a mile and a half below the Glencorse Reservoir. That is the only statutory enactment in force in regard to the quantity of the water, with this exception, that it is provided that in the event of the reservoirs 'proving inadequate to afford the quantities of water provided to the owners of lands, mills, and other works,' any of the owners shall be entitled to apply to the Sheriff, who is given power to ordain that the burn and springs which the water trustees were authorised to impound and divert, shall be turned into their original course, and continue to flow therein, and through the gauge, so long as a deficient supply shall continue to exist.

"That provision appears to me to have an important bearing upon this case. The Glencorse Reservoir and its supplementary reservoir of Loganlee were supply as well as compensation reservoirs. If they had only been compensation reservoirs, I think that it is plain, considering their capacity, that it would not have been necessary to provide for the contingency of the reservoirs becoming empty, and not being able to furnish the amount

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

The pursuers reclaimed, and argued;—The defenders had no statutory authority to pollute the water, and in doing so they exceeded their powers. The terms of their statutes were not imperative, but permissive, and the powers thereby conferred must be exercised in strict conformity with private rights.[1] The common law rights of the pursuers as lower heritors had never been taken away. They were accordingly still entitled to receive the water in its natural state as it entered the reservoirs. Parliament having said nothing as to the quality of the compensation water, the inference was that it should remain the same as before the water-works were constructed. In any event, the pursuers were entitled to the water in a state as near to its natural state as was consistent with a reasonable use by the defenders of their powers under statute, and were not bound to take it in any condition to which it might be reduced by the negligence of the defenders. The defenders had acted negligently inasof the compensation water. It was because the reservoirs were supply as well as compensation reservoirs that it was provided that if they became so depleted as not to be able to furnish the full amount of compensation water the riparian owners should have the whole water contained in the burn and springs.

---

"I think that that shews that there was no definite proportion of the water contained in the reservoirs which was specially appropriated to the purposes of compensation, and that there was no stage in the process of drawing upon the reservoirs when the riparian owners were entitled to call upon the water trustees to cease taking water for supply purposes in order that a sufficient amount might be left to secure the continuance of the compensation water. I think that the right of the water trustees to take water for supply, and the right of the riparian owners to compensation water, were concurrent rights, and that the trustees were entitled to draw upon the reservoirs for both purposes to their full capacity.

"2. In the next place, in regard to the quality of the compensation water. There is nothing said in the statutes as to quality, and the only enactment which in any way touches the question of quality is the provision that the filters which were to be erected for the purpose of filtering water going to Edinburgh were not to be cleaned out in the Glencorse Burn. I suppose that that provision was inserted because the filters were placed near the burn, and it might have been very convenient to cleanse them by flushing them into the burn.

"The reasons why the quality of the compensation was not specified I take to have been (1) that it was impossible to do so, because the compensation water was to be measured and given off about a mile and a half below the reservoir, and was liable to pollution between the reservoir and the gauges from causes over which the water trustees had no control, and (2) that it was thought that if the riparian owners got a sufficient quantity of the water impounded in the reservoirs there would be nothing to complain of as regards quality, because the water given off from a reservoir in which a stream is impounded is upon the average certainly not worse, and probably somewhat better, than the water of the stream in its natural state. As matter of fact there have been no complaints in regard to the quality of the water until the incident which gave rise to the present action, with

---

[1] Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Water-Works Co., 1872, L. R., 8 Ch. 125; Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, 1881, L. R., 6 A. C., 193, per Lord Watson at p. 213; Duke of Richmond v. Burgh of Lossiemouth, June 25, 1904, 12 S. L. T. 166; The Queen v. Bradford Navigation Co., 1865, 6 Best and Smith, 631; Canadian Pacific Railway v. Parke, L. R., [1899] A. C. 535; Rapier v. London Tramways Co., L. R., [1893] 2 Ch. 588.

No. 187.
July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

much as they could have prevented the damage to the pursuers by a reasonable and proper use of their statutory powers.[1] The pollution could have been avoided in several ways—by filling up Glencorse from Loganlee, by diminishing the supply to Edinburgh, or by drawing on Gladhouse—and the defenders had full warning as to the probable result of their action from the similar pollution in 1901. The defenders had failed to give the compensation fixed by statute, which consisted of water, not merely of a certain quantity, but also of a certain quality, namely the quality accompanying and resulting from the reasonable administration of the water-works in the interests of both parties. Glencorse was primarily a compensation reservoir, and the pursuers were entitled to demand that the defenders should consider the effect of their management of it not only on the supply of water to Edinburgh, but also on the quality of the compensation water. The defenders had admittedly acted solely in the interests of the exception of an occasion in 1901, when the water was for a short time in a condition which led to a complaint by the pursuers.

---

"The circumstances under which the present action was raised were as follows:—The pursuers are papermakers who deal in a high class of paper, for the manufacture of which water of a comparatively high standard of purity is required. The mills now owned by the pursuers were established in 1835, and from that date until the end of 1902 the water of the burn—that is, the compensation water—was fit to be made use of in the manufacture of paper. The pursuers have not used the water of the burn alone for manufacturing purposes, but they have mixed it with a considerable quantity of spring water, and the water composed of that mixture has been found satisfactory and sufficiently pure for the manufacture of high class paper. Further, the pursuers have not been able to use the burn water continuously, because when it is turbid after heavy rains it is not fit for use. They have, however, means of storing a sufficient quantity of water to keep the mills going for two or three days, and they have found such storage to be an ample provision to meet the case of natural floods.

"About the 12th December 1902 the water of the burn became so turbid that it could not be used for the class of paper which the pursuers make, even when mixed with the spring water at their command, and that state of matters continued without interruption until 7th March 1903. The condition of the water during that period was different from that caused by spates. It was highly impregnated with very fine matter of a whitish colour, which took a long time to settle. That the water during the period referred to was entirely unfit for the pursuers' purposes seems to me to be proved without any doubt. There is one fact which I may mention because it illustrates in a somewhat striking way the difference between the quality of the water during the period complained of, and at other times, and that is that the flannel bags which are put upon the ends of the pipes which discharge the water into the machines, in order to catch up any solid matter, require to be changed in ordinary times only about once a week, while during the period in question they required to be changed every ten minutes or quarter of an hour. That fact appears to me to demonstrate that the water was in a highly contaminated condition, and it is plain that if such a condition was to become constant or of frequent occurrence and long continuance, the pursuers would either have to manufacture paper of

---

[1] Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir, 1878, L. R., 3 A. C. 430, per Lord Selborne at p. 452, and Lord Blackburn at p. 455 (definition of negligence); Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., L. R., [1895] 1 Ch. 287; Port-Glasgow and Newark Sailcloth Co. v. Caledonian Railway Co., Feb. 21, 1893, 20 R. (H. L.) 35; Reid v. Baird, Dec. 13, 1876, 4 R. 234.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.

Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

the town and without regard to the interests of the pursuers. In so doing they had caused damage for which they were responsible.

Argued for the defenders;—The pursuers were not entitled to the compensation water in its "natural" condition, as defined in Young & Co. v. Bankier Distillery Co.[1] This, the standard by which in ordinary circumstances the rights of a lower heritor were measured, had been abrogated by statute and another standard substituted. Parliament had authorised the erection of the reservoirs and other works. It followed that all that the pursuers were now entitled to was 220 cubic feet per minute of such water as the reservoirs in fact contained from time to time, improved or deteriorated, as the case might be, by the existence of the water-works and the use of the works for the purposes sanctioned by Parliament. Accordingly the pursuers were not entitled to decree in terms of any of the declaratory conclusions of their summons. As to the wrong alleged to have been an inferior quality, or obtain a new supply of water from another source, or establish a system of filtration for the burn water. The second of these alternatives is very likely impossible, and the seriousness of either of the other two is sufficiently obvious.

---

"As to the cause of the pollution there is really no dispute. During the summer and autumn of 1902 there was a long continued drought—indeed so severe a drought had not been experienced since 1842. The result was that the defenders had, in order to furnish the necessary supply of water to Edinburgh, to draw largely upon all their reservoirs, including Glencorse. The latter was accordingly run down to an unusually low level. During the long period which has elapsed since the reservoir was constructed there has necessarily been a considerable deposit of sand, mud, and other material upon the bottom of the reservoir, and when the water in the reservoir falls to a low level a greater or less extent of the deposited silt becomes exposed. The effect of that is to create some turbidity in the water, and the lower the level to which the water falls the greater the danger of turbidity. That arises from various causes. The most powerful agents are rain, wind, and frost. The effect of frost is to raise up the surface particles from those beneath them, so that when thaw comes they are loose. If, when that condition of matters exists, there is heavy rain or high winds, that detached matter is very readily washed into the water. Another cause of turbidity is the action of the streams which feed the reservoir, and which, when the water is low, require to cut channels for themselves through the silt, and in doing so they necessarily carry away a portion of the silt. If, however, the level of the water is lowered gradually, that process is also gradual, and is not, I think, likely of itself to cause serious turbidity. The sides of the channels cut by the streams are, however, steep, and are liable to be undercut, when a considerable quantity of material may fall from them into the water. The same result may be caused by frost and thaw.

"Further, one of the streams which feed the reservoir appears to bring down material which is very fine and light, and which accordingly takes a long time to settle. That material may be carried further down the reservoir than heavier material, and be deposited nearer the lower end. Therefore, turbidity which is set up when the water is very low is likely to be more serious than when a less extent of the silt is uncovered, partly, of course, because there is less water in which to distribute any silt washed into it, but also because there may be a larger amount of the lighter material, which remains a long time in suspension. I think that there can be no

---

[1] Young & Co. v. Bankier Distillery Co., July 27, 1893, 20 R. (H. L.) 76, per Lord Macnaghten at p. 78.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

committed by the defenders, it was a case of damnum sine injuria. Even admitting that the loss suffered by the pursuers was caused by the actings of the defenders, these actings being incidental to and necessary for the carrying out of the undertaking authorised by Parliament, no action could lie against the defenders provided they had used reasonable care to prevent unnecessary damage being done.[1] The pursuers were entitled only to the statutory compensation—namely, 220 cubic feet per minute—for the rights or property originally taken from them, and having received that, had no further claim for damage sustained through the use of the property for the purposes of the undertaking.[2] Admitting that the defenders—after seeing that the pursuers received the statutory amount of compensation water—had acted solely in the interests of the town, it was not disputed that they had acted reasonably from that point of view. The defenders were under no obligation in managing the reservoirs doubt that upon the occasion complained of a large quantity of the lighter silt was washed into the water.

---

"Now, the pollution complained of could only have been avoided by the adoption of one or other of three courses. The defenders might have cleaned out the reservoir so as to make the bottom practically free from silt; or they might have filtered the compensation water; or they might have ceased to draw upon Glencorse for supply purposes when the water got to so low a level that to reduce it further would have been to run the risk of its becoming polluted to such an extent as to be unfit for use by the mill owners.

"No one says that the first of these alternatives ought to have been adopted or was practicable. In regard to the suggestion that the compensation water ought to have been filtered the answer is that the defenders are compelled by statute to filter the water going to Edinburgh, and that the filter accommodation is not more than sufficient to filter the amount of water which it is necessary to draw from Glencorse for supply purposes. The third alternative, however, requires more consideration, and it is the one upon which the pursuers ultimately insisted.

"Before dealing with the evidence on that point, however, I think that it is well to consider what duty, if any, lies upon the defenders in regard to the quality of the compensation water.

"I have already pointed out that no express duty is laid upon the defenders in that respect; and that apparently what was contemplated by the Legislature was that if a sufficient quantity of the water impounded in the reservoir was sent down the channel of the burn, it was unnecessary to make any provision, or to lay any express obligation upon the water trustees, in regard to quality. I do not think that it can be assumed that those who were responsible for framing the statutes were ignorant of, or ignored, the fact that silt is inevitably deposited in the bed of a reservoir, and that such silt is likely to be stirred up when the water falls to a low level. Yet the statutes seem to me to authorise the reservoirs to be drawn upon for supply as well as compensation to their full capacity.

"It does not, however, follow that the defenders are under no obligation whatever in regard to the quality of the compensation water. It is well

---

[1] London and Brighton Railway Co. v. Truman, 1885, L. R., 11 A. C. 45; Parrett Navigation Co. v. Robins, 1842, 10 M. and W. 593; Cracknell v. Mayor of Thetford, 1869, L. R., 4 C. P. 629; Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs, 1866, L. R., 1 Eng. and Ir. App. 93, per Lord Blackburn at p. 112; River Ribble Joint Committee v. Halliwell, L. R., [1899] 1 Q. B. 27.

[2] Hammersmith Railway Co. v. Brand, 1868, L. R., 4 Eng. and Ir. App. 171.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.

Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

to consider the interests of the pursuers, and indeed, being under an obligation to provide the town with an adequate supply of water,[1] it was not in their power to diminish that supply in order to improve the quality of the compensation water.

At advising,—

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—We were favoured in this case with a most able and elaborate debate, receiving from both sides every possible assistance for its consideration, and I feel bound to say that although the discussion was lengthy it was not more so than was called for by the importance and difficulty of the questions in dispute. The action taking the form of a declarator, followed by a conclusion for damages, the debate on the declarator necessarily occupied a large part of the time devoted to the discussion. If it were necessary to deal with the case by findings relating to the different settled that, where the Legislature has empowered a certain thing to be done, no action will lie for injury caused thereby, provided that all reasonable precautions have been taken to prevent injury. If, however, the injury has been caused by negligence it is no answer to a claim of damages that what was done was authorised by statute. I think that that rule applies here, and that if the long continued pollution of the water of which the pursuers complain was caused by the defenders' negligence, they are liable to make good the loss thereby occasioned. If, upon the other hand, there was no negligence on the defenders' part, then the pursuers have no ground of action.

---

"The question therefore seems to me to be, whether, in the circumstances which happened, the defenders have been convicted of negligence.

"The pursuers' case is that the defenders in 1902 entirely ignored the interests of the mill owners, and drew upon Glencorse reservoir for supply purposes unnecessarily and unjustifiably, until it was reduced to so low a level that the water remaining was, by the operation of the causes to which I have referred, rendered for a long period totally unfit for the manufacture of paper.

"The men of skill who gave evidence for the pursuers said that what occurred in 1901 shewed that there was a level below which the water in the reservoir could not be reduced without causing abnormal turbidity by the fine silt being stirred up. In the early winter of that year the level of the water was reduced until it was thirty-eight feet below the sill of the weir. While the reservoir was in that condition the compensation water became turbid and unfit for use for some time. That occurrence, it was said, was sufficient to warn the defenders that there was a level below which it was not safe to reduce the water; and that level the pursuers' witnesses fix at thirty-six feet below the sill of the weir. Their contention is that the defenders ought not to reduce the water below that level, because if they do so there is the risk of the water being rendered so turbid as to be unfit for the purposes of compensation.

"Now, when the water stands at thirty-six feet below the weir, there are still some fifty-seven millions of gallons of water in the reservoir, and it is rather a startling proposition that the defenders are not entitled to draw upon that large volume of water, whatever the exigencies of supply may be, although their statutory right is to use all the water which the reservoir contains.

"Further, it seems to me that it is impossible to fix any precise limit of safety. Whether the drawing off of a certain amount of water will or will not result in that which remains being impregnated with silt, depends not so much upon the level which the water has reached as upon the accom

---

[1] Water-Works Clauses Act, 1847 (10 and 11 Vict. cap. 17), secs. 35, 36.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

matters to which the declarator relates it would, I think, be difficult to affirm in the terms of the pursuers' conclusion. But the true question is, whether by their actings a legal injustice has been done to the defenders, and if so, what is the fair amount of damages to compensate for it.

I shall first state shortly what I consider to be the facts of the case as disclosed in the evidence. The defenders, under powers obtained by themselves or their predecessors, store water in two reservoirs in the Glencorse valley and in the Loganlee valley above it, by which they impound water in the watershed flowing into the Glencorse Burn above Glencorse Reservoir, that being the lower of the two. Loganlee discharges the water impounded in it to Glencorse, and from Glencorse the defenders discharge into the Glencorse Burn below, at a point fixed by the statute, 220 cubic feet per minute, being the compensation in quantity to which the proprietors below panying climatic conditions, and the conclusions at which I have arrived upon the evidence are—(1) that if the lowering of the level of the water is gradual (as it has always been) the fouling of the water by the feeders cutting channels through the silt alone will not be very great, and (2) that if the weather is dry, calm, and without frost, the level of the water may be reduced to an indefinite extent without serious pollution; while, on the other hand, if there is frost, followed by heavy rains and high winds, there may be serious pollution although the level of the water is considerably higher than thirty-six feet below the weir.

---

"When, however, the pollution of the water in the end of 1902 commenced, the level of the water had undoubtedly fallen to an exceptionally low point. The maximum reached was forty-three feet nine inches below the weir. That is a very unusual degree of depletion, because, although the water has on previous occasions been as low and lower, such a thing has not occurred since 1870.

"Now, 1902 was an unusually dry season. There had been nothing like it since 1870, and then the drought was not so severe, and prior to that there had been no year of equal drought since 1842. The result was that there was a great strain on the defenders' resources, and they had considerable difficulty in furnishing the supply which was necessary for Edinburgh. Mr Tait, the defenders' engineer, however, recognised the desirability, if possible, of preventing Glencorse being unduly depleted, and so early as June 1902 he largely restricted the draught upon that reservoir. In August, however, he was compelled again to increase the draught to the ordinary amount, but he was again able to restrict it in November and December, and he says that in the middle of December it was reduced to an almost unprecedentedly low draught. It was said that there was plenty of water at Gladhouse, which ought to have been drawn upon to a larger extent. It is true that as regards the reservoir at Gladhouse there was a sufficient quantity of water to afford a larger draught than was taken from it, but the Gladhouse water cannot be used without filtration, and as much was passed through the filters (which are at Alnwickhill) as they were capable of carrying.

"But then it was said that there was a simple means available by which all the water which was actually supplied from Glencorse could have been given off without depleting the reservoir to a dangerous extent. It appears that when Glencorse was at its lowest there were thirty-six millions of gallons in Loganlee—a reservoir which was constructed for the very purpose of supplementing Glencorse. In these circumstances the pursuers' witnesses say that all that the defenders required to do to avoid pollution of the Glencorse water was, when the water of the latter became dangerously low—thirty-six feet below the sill—to let down ten or fifteen millions

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

the reservoir are entitled in respect of the ordinary flow of the water down the valley being interfered with by the defenders' works, which include an abstraction from the stream below the Glencorse Reservoir of water, called Crawley water, from the springs which would otherwise discharge into the stream. In addition to discharging 220 feet per minute of compensation water the defenders, when the exigencies of their supply to the inhabitants of Edinburgh require it, draw off water from the reservoir for town supply. These are the facts as regards the normal use of the reservoir for the two purposes of compensation to riparian proprietors and supply to the city.

The facts of which complaint is made, and which are in my opinion established, are that towards the latter end of 1902 the compensation water was discharged into the stream in a polluted state, as a consequence of which the pursuers were unable to make the quality of paper which they

---

of gallons from Loganlee, which would have been sufficient to allow the defenders to continue their draughts from Glencorse without bringing the level of the water down to danger point.

"That is a very plausible suggestion, and my first impression was that the course suggested was one which ought to have been followed. It is, however, easy to be wise after the event, and it is necessary to consider the matter from the point of view of Mr Tait at the time.

"Loganlee Reservoir, when full, contains in round numbers one hundred and twenty-two millions of gallons. It was full in the beginning of 1902 and continued full until the end of July, but in the months of August and September the water was drawn off, and in October it was for some time practically empty. The reason for that being done was that the pitching of the embankment required to be repaired.

"When the repairs were completed Mr Tait considered it to be his duty to have Loganlee filled again as soon as possible. The sluices were accordingly shut and the water gathered until, as I have said, when Glencorse was at its lowest, there were some thirty-six millions of gallons in Loganlee, which represents less than one-third of its full capacity. Mr Tait's reason for wishing to fill up Loganlee was this: Where there are upper and lower reservoirs—the one feeding the other—the general rule is that the water should be so managed that the upper reservoir fills first. That is in order to avoid waste. If, for example, the upper reservoir was empty, while the lower was half full, then when rain came the result might be that the lower reservoir would be overflowing and running to waste, while the upper reservoir would not yet be full.

"Now, I do not think that the course adopted by Mr Tait was open to criticism until the beginning of December, because it was only on the 1st of December that the level of the water in Glencorse fell so low as thirty-six feet below the weir, which the pursuers' witnesses regard as the limit of safety, and so long as he could safely draw from Glencorse I think that the evidence shews that it was proper management for Mr Tait to do his best to fill up Loganlee in order to avoid the risk of waste.

"The question, however, is whether when it became apparent that Glencorse would be reduced to a lower level than thirty-six feet below the weir, unless it was supplemented it was not Mr Tait's duty to utilise for that purpose the water which was stored in Loganlee. Whether that was or was not the proper course to follow, seems to me to have been a question of opinion upon which men of equal skill might very well have differed.

"Probably if Mr Tait could have foreseen that an abundant rainfall would commence (as it did) upon the 15th of December, he would have drawn upon Loganlee, but in the beginning of December he had to contemplate the possibility of the deficiency of rainfall continuing for an indefinite had been in use to supply to the trade for many years, it being the fact that the flannel bags used on the ends of their delivery pipes from their supply into the works became in a very short time so choked up with solid matter that they often burst and destroyed the pulp about to be used for making paper, and where this did not happen it was impossible to prevent so much colouring matter passing, that the paper turned out was of inferior quality, and in consequence many complaints were made by customers, and orders and customers were lost. It is plain that such a discharge, not made foul by spate, was not in accord with the ordinary rights of lower heritors as regards the flow from above to them. The facts as to the cause of this are, that at the time there had been an exceptional drought, that in consequence the level of the water in Glencorse was so lowered by the drawing off the compensation water and what was drawn off for town supply, that period. That was the most serious contingency for which Mr Tait (whose duty was to supply water to a great city) had to provide. He therefore deemed it to be prudent so to manage the reservoirs as to secure that whatever rainfall there was should be impounded and should not run to waste. It appears, however, that the gathering ground for Loganlee is larger in comparison to the size of the reservoir than the gathering ground of Glencorse, and it was suggested that there was therefore really no risk of Glencorse becoming full and overflowing before Loganlee was also filled. But that has not been proved, and Mr Tait, who has had practical experience of the reservoirs thought otherwise. He also referred to an actual instance in which Glencorse was overflowing before Loganlee was filled up.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

---

"Further, I am not satisfied upon the one hand that even the probable result of allowing the water in Glencorse to fall considerably lower than thirty-six feet was to cause serious and long-continued pollution of the compensation water, nor upon the other hand that the pollution which actually occurred would have been prevented, to any material extent, by letting down ten or fifteen millions of gallons from Loganlee. It all depended upon the climatic conditions, and the conditions which actually occurred were as unfavourable as could well be imagined, because there was hard frost, followed by heavy rain—one inch falling in the first twenty-four hours—and there were also very high winds. Even if Glencorse had contained ten or fifteen millions of gallons more than it did contain, there would still have been a very considerable expanse of silt uncovered, upon which the frost, the rain, and the wind would have taken effect, with the result, so far as I can judge, that turbidity would inevitably have been caused. It may be that the turbidity would not have been of so serious a character as that which actually occurred, because so much of the fine matter might not have been stirred up. But it is impossible to estimate what the extent of the turbidity would have been, or how long it would have continued, seeing that during the remainder of the winter constant gales and frequent heavy rains prevailed, which prevented the water from settling.

"The case appears to me to be one of great difficulty, and I fully recognise the hardship to the pursuers, but after the most careful consideration I am unable to affirm that there was negligence on Mr Tait's part. He was placed in a position of great difficulty, and while to have utilised the water which was stored in Loganlee might have, to some extent, mitigated the pollution, I do not think that it could have prevented serious pollution, and further the course which he followed of gathering water in Loganlee was in accordance with what is generally recognised as prudent management when water is scarce and it is important to avoid waste.

"I am therefore of opinion that the defenders must be assoilzied."

the large accumulation of silt, which in course of years had collected in the reservoir bed, was exposed to a considerable extent, and that when stormy weather supervened, the wind causing the water to surge over the silt disturbed it and so polluted the water.

The pursuers maintain that this discharge of polluted water was a wrong, not excusable on any plea that it was unavoidable or caused by a damnum fatale, and that it might easily have been avoided if reasonable care had been exercised.

The defenders allege the contrary, and further maintain that they were under no obligation in the matter—that all they were under obligation to do was to send down the quantity of water prescribed as compensation by the statutes under which they or their predecessors got their powers, and that if they so sent down that quantity their whole obligations under the conditions of their compulsory powers were fulfilled. They found upon the fact that no reference is made to quality in the Acts of Parliament, and maintain that all that was reserved to those below the reservoir was a flow of water to the extent of 220 gallons per minute.

There can be no doubt that in the time before the water-works were erected the supply of water to the pursuers would at times be impure—necessarily it would be so in times of spate—and against this the pursuers provided by establishing a certain amount of storage at their mills so as to carry them over a period when there might be spate water in the burn. And if the difficulties of which they complain in this case had been similar to those of ordinary spates they do not maintain that they would have a legal ground of complaint. But what they do maintain is that in the way in which the defenders—not of necessity, but for their own ends, as suppliers of water to the city—have proceeded in the use of their works, they have unnecessarily, both as regards extent and duration of the injurious action, sent polluted matter down the stream, to the pursuers' damage.

The defenders do not deny the fact, but they maintain that they have done nothing they were not entitled to do. The question therefore comes to be, what, if any, is the obligation resting upon the defenders as to the character of the water which they supply as compensation? Is their obligation only to send down water in bulk regardless of its condition, unless it can be shewn that by some wilful act of theirs, not in the exercise of their powers, they polluted it before sending it down? The defenders deny that there is any obligation. They practically admit that in dealing with the water they impound they consider only the interests of the city of Edinburgh as their water consuming area, and hold that as paramount, subject only to the condition that they pass 220 feet of liquid from the reservoir to the stream. They say that the accumulation of silt in the reservoir was a necessary consequence of its construction, that if such an accumulation causes turbidity of the water to any extent and for any length of time they would incur no responsibility if it suited them in the interests of the city supply to conduct their works so that such a state of things would ensue. In other words, they maintain that if they can so utilise the reservoir as best to serve the ratepayers' requirements, they need consider nothing else beyond securing that 220 cubic feet, of whatever quality, shall pass to the lower proprietors.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

The pursuers on the other hand maintain that while under the statutes they must be content with water coming from the reservoir in lieu of what before came direct to them by the stream, it is an implied condition in the compulsitor upon the defenders to give compensation that the water of compensation shall be sent down not in a state of pollution inconsistent with a reasonable and ordinarily careful management of the artificial works—reasonable and careful not in the sole interest of the supply of Edinburgh with water, but also with a proper regard to the interests of those whom the statute compelled to accept compensation for the taking away of their natural rights. They plead that the natural use of a reservoir for compulsory compensation is to provide water fit to make up the volume of a natural stream, so that the stream shall in a reasonable sense be as it was before as regards the uses to which the water in it could be applied. It was pointed out that as regards the stream and its feeders between the reservoir and the pursuers' premises the water flowing in the burn would reach them in a fit state for their uses, but that if it was part of the defenders' statutory right to send foul water from the reservoir when that was convenient for their own ends in securing the supply to Edinburgh, the good water in the stream below would necessarily be rendered unfit for use, and that certainly it could not have been the intention of the Legislature that that should be the case if it was possible to prevent it by reasonable means, even although it might cause difficulty in giving a full supply to the inhabitants of Edinburgh, which has a population always increasing, and for whose wants it is the duty of the defenders to exercise foresight in making provision. Upon this part of the case I am of opinion that the pursuers' contention is sound, and it only remains to consider whether it has been made out that the defenders in the particular circumstances are responsible for what occurred, in respect that the course which they followed caused injury which might have been avoided by reasonable action on their part.

The direct cause of the mischief was that they, by allowing the level in Glencorse to fall abnormally, caused a large surface of silt to be uncovered, or in parts to be so nearly uncovered that when a stormy wind arose and swept along the surface the silt was washed from its position of rest into mechanical mixture with the water, with the consequence that for a long time the water was in a state of great turbidity and the solid matter was carried by the water in large quantities over the compensation weir.

This is clearly proved to have been the fact, and I do not think it is disputed that such a state of things was inevitable if sufficient water was not kept in Glencorse to prevent the action of a high wind from stirring up silt by the pressure of the waves. Therefore the primary cause was the lowness of the water in Glencorse. The contention of the pursuers is that this risk might have been prevented had the level in Glencorse been kept higher by passing water down from Loganlee, in which there was a supply of 36,000,000 gallons at the time, and it cannot be disputed that this was so. The defenders maintain that this was not done from motives of prudence as regards supply, as Loganlee being the upper reservoir it was advisable to keep water in it, so that when rain came there would be less risk of waste from Glencorse overflowing before Loganlee was full. This,

No. 187.
July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

of course, was a sound view for those who were considering primarily the interests of water supply to Edinburgh, and there was nothing unreasonable in Mr Tait taking that view from the position of engineer of Edinburgh Corporation. I do not think that there is any ground for attaching blame to Mr Tait for the view he took. He had his masters to serve, and had no reason to consider, unless it was brought before him by the legal advisers of the Corporation, what were or were not the claims at law that might be made. Apparently their views were that what was done was legally within their rights, and had Mr Tait applied to them for directions as to what he should do, according to the views they have maintained in this case they would have told him to go on as he was doing. Either they considered the question and approved of what he was doing or they failed to consider it. One thing is certain, that they must have known what was likely to follow the course taken, for there had been a similar pollution on the occasion of the drought in 1901, which had been brought fully to their notice by complaint, and it is therefore not possible for them to say that they found themselves in unforeseen circumstances, for which they could not reasonably be expected to make provision if legally bound to do so.

There can be no doubt that if they had acted as they could have done, and if there had been a continued drought, there might have been some inconvenience to the inhabitants of Edinburgh, who might have been obliged to be satisfied for a time with water from Gladhouse and elsewhere, under difficulties as to the sufficiency of filtering appliances, owing to the want of a sufficient number of filtering beds being provided by the Corporation, and doubtless this was in the minds both of Mr Tait, whose sole duty it was to carry out the will of the Corporation, and of the members of the Corporation themselves.

But if, in considering first or solely the interests of Edinburgh, there was failure to give to the pursuers what they were entitled to as the true compensation for the loss of their primal rights as regards the water flowing from Glencorse valley, then I can see no ground on which they can be exempted from liability for injury done to the pursuers. It appears to me that the words of Lords Blackburn and Selborne in Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Proprietors[1] may be applied to this case, to the effect that if by reasonable action damage could be prevented, it is negligence not to use such action, and that statutory powers must be reasonably and properly used.

I wish to add that I do not think that the class of cases so largely quoted to us by the parties apply to the present question. It is not a case of permissive statutory powers on the one hand, nor on the other is it a case of something authorised to be done to the detriment of private rights, in respect of a public benefit, with which they are incompatible. The question is as to how statutory powers have been exercised where certain duties have been imposed on the public body in favour of private persons as a condition of the powers being given. The question is, there being a right given subject to compensation, has the duty of compensation been justly fulfilled? In my view it has not, and I am of opinion that the pursuers are entitled to a decree for damages.

---

[1] L. R., 3 App. Cas. 430.

No. 187.
July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

The amount to be awarded appears to me to be fairly estimated at £2000.

LORD KYLLACHY.—In this case I have read the defenders' statutes so far as necessary to understand their scheme. I have also read the evidence, and considered the lengthened and able argument with which we were lately favoured. Coming as I have ultimately done to a conclusion different from the Lord Ordinary, I wish to say that I do so with diffidence. But on the whole I am of opinion that the pursuers have suffered at the hands of the defenders a wrong for which they are entitled to damages.

I may say at the outset that I am not myself prepared to affirm as expressed the pursuers' declaratory conclusion in any of its alternatives. In any case, I consider that that conclusion may be dismissed as unnecessary. For the real question I think is whether and to what extent the pursuers have suffered an actionable wrong for which the defenders are liable, and that question can quite well be tried under the conclusion for damages.

I may also say at the outset that I have come to be satisfied, and think, when the position is understood, it is fairly clear that we are not here much concerned with certain well-known decisions, which were a good deal canvassed at the discussion—decisions to the effect (1) that statutory powers which are only permissive, and not expressly or by implication directory, do not, unless the contrary is expressed or implied (as by full provision for compensation), authorise interference with private rights, and to the effect (2) that where the Legislature has in plain terms authorised a specific thing to be done, the thing so authorised may be done even to the detriment of private rights, and even although there may be no provision for compensation. In particular, we are not here in the region of such cases as Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill;[1] Canadian Pacific Railway Company v. Parke;[2] and Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Water-works Company;[3] or (on the other hand) of such cases as London and Brighton Railway Company v. Truman;[4] and Hammersmith Railway Company v. Brand.[5] For in the present case not only do the defenders' statutes authorise the construction of specific works for which they have compulsory powers, but the private rights which are here in question—I mean the riparian rights of the lower heritors on the Glencorse Burn—are not really taken away, but only commuted. The defenders get the right to appropriate and take to, generally speaking, Edinburgh (1), the Crawley Spring, and (2), the whole flow of the burn above Flotterstone Bridge, but in exchange they are taken bound to send down from Crawley Weir—a little distance below—220 cubic feet of water per minute, being an assumed quid pro quo, which is by the statute of 1847 declared to be in full compensation to the lower heritors for the exercise of the defenders' powers. Accordingly there can here, I apprehend, be no question as to the extent or limits of the defenders' powers. Any question for which there is room must relate, not to the defenders' powers, but to the due per-

[1] L. R., 6 App. Cas. 193.
[2] L. R. [1899] App. Cas. 535.
[3] L. R., 8 Ch. Apps. 125.
[4] L. R., 11 App. Cas. 45.
[5] L. R., 4 E. & I. App. 171.

formance of their statutory obligations—that is to say, their due performance of their side of the commutation arrangement.

Similarly, there is, I think, for the same reason no room, properly speaking, for any question of alleged negligent exercise of statutory powers. The defenders—if and while they perform, according to its true intent and meaning, their statutory obligation—that is to say, if and while they give the pursuers and their co-heritors the full measure of the stipulated quid pro quo—are entitled—so long at least as they do not act emulously—to exhaust their powers to the uttermost. They may take from the burn and reservoir above Flotterstone every drop of water which they can use, and may do so, considering simply their own interests, and not considering the pursuers' interests at all. Accordingly here again, so far as the present case involves any question of negligence, it can only do so in this sense—that it may involve questions of neglect of duty—failure on the defenders' part to perform duly their statutory obligation.

In short, to put it otherwise, if the compensation here had been, not in kind but in money, the pursuers could, I apprehend, have had no case—at least no case of the kind here maintained, either on the head of excess of power, or abuse of power, or negligent use of power. Up to that point I go entirely with the Lord Ordinary and the defenders' argument.

But then, as it happens, the compensation here is not in money but is in kind, that is to say, in water; and the pursuers' complaint really is that during the three months in question the defenders sent down along with the compensation water a quantity of dirty material—material mixed with it and held in suspension—which not only (1) made the compensation water itself useless for the pursuers' purposes, and those of the other lower heritors, but also (2) polluted and rendered useless the flow of the natural stream below Crawley, in which natural stream—so far as fed from its own drainage area—the lower heritors retained their rights. This, the pursuers say, was not due and proper performance of the defenders' statutory obligation.

Now, the question thus raised seems to involve two points—(1) What is the just construction of the defenders' obligation with respect to what may be called the character of the compensation water which they have to supply; and (2) how far did the water sent down by them during the three months in question comply with their statutory obligation. I shall try to consider those two points in their order.

Now, as to the first point there are two views presented. The defenders' view is a very short one. They say it is enough for them that they send down the water as it comes out of the reservoir, that the admixture of foreign matter—of mud and silt—comes from the reservoir, and is, according at least to their mode of working the reservoir, a necessary consequence of the storage in the reservoir—a storage which the statutes contemplate. They say that that is enough for them, and as regards the suggestion that they might so manage the reservoir as to prevent or mitigate the pollution their position is this—(1) that they cannot prevent the accumulation of mud and silt in the reservoir; (2) that it is impracticable now, and has always been so, to clean the reservoir; and (3) that assuming that the difficulty might be met by keeping the reservoir always of a certain depth, that is a thing which they are not bound to do, because it would involve practically a restriction of their statutory powers. In short, the defenders' position is that they are not bound with respect to the character of the compensation water, to manage the reservoir in any interest except that of their constituents, the inhabitants of Edinburgh. Indeed, as I understand them, they carry their case so far as this, that even if in the course of years the accumulation of mud and silt so increased as to make the conditions which prevailed during the three months in question permanent instead of occasional, they would still be entitled to manage and work the reservoir on the same principle—at least they would be so entitled so long as the turbidity of the water did not reach a stage at which their statutory filters became unable to cope with it, and at which therefore they would have to do something in the interests of Edinburgh.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

The pursuers on the other hand—I do not think unnaturally—take a different view. They do not say that they are entitled to pure water, or to water free from solid matter in suspension, or even to water as free from such matter as that which they or their predecessors enjoyed before the defenders' advent. They do say that that is prima facie the meaning of the defenders' obligation, seeing that the water sent down comes to them as a substitute for water taken away—water which was in its ordinary state fit for all their purposes. They do also, it is true, say that although the defenders may have undoubted power—and are indeed obliged—to send the compensation water down the natural burn, there is at least a strong presumption against the Legislature having intended that the water so sent down should, besides being useless in itself, also pollute and render useless what remained of the natural burn. But they acknowledge, and I think rightly, that storage in the reservoir, or passage through the reservoir, was a thing which was contemplated by the statutes and which has therefore to be accepted. And accordingly their proposition, as I understand it, goes in effect no further than this—that while they (the pursuers) are bound to accept the water as it comes from the reservoir, it is yet an implied condition, binding on the defenders, that it shall be at least as free from injurious impurities as is compatible with the existence and use of the reservoir, that is to say, with its existence and use managed fairly and reasonably, and with due regard not merely to the interests of Edinburgh, but also (co-ordinately if not primarily) with regard to their (the pursuers') interests. They point out that the Glencorse Reservoir although partly used, and quite lawfully so, as a supply reservoir, is after all primarily a compensation reservoir, and is indeed so described in the statutes, and that accordingly methods of management which may be quite suitable to a supply reservoir, as providing water good enough for use after filtration, may yet be quite unsuitable to a compensation reservoir, especially to a compensation reservoir which has as its primary function to provide water fit to be sent down a natural stream in lieu of water which formerly flowed in that stream and was used in its natural state by the riparian owners.

Now, as between those views of the true meaning and measure of the defenders' duty, I am of opinion that the pursuers are right. I do not think they put their case too high—I think they put it reasonably and moderately—when they say that they are not bound to accept as their statutory compensation, or to allow to flow into what remains of their natural stream, water which has been unnecessarily polluted—that is to say, water which the defenders might, and probably would, have kept sufficiently pure if they had managed the reservoir with due and reasonable regard to the pursuers' rights. I cannot, I confess, subscribe to the defenders' doctrine that the pursuers are bound to take and accept any water which the defenders find it convenient to give them—convenient, that is to say, with regard simply to the interests present or future of the inhabitants of Edinburgh.

No. 187.
July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

It remains, however, to consider whether the defenders did in fact during the months in controversy send down to the pursuers water which was, in the sense which I have explained, unduly and unnecessarily polluted.

As to this, which is a question of fact, my opinion is also with the pursuers. I think it is proved—and indeed is hardly disputed—that the defenders did send down during the three months between the early part of December 1903 and the early part of March 1904 water so turbid, so mixed with mud and silt, as to be useless not merely for papermaking but for the ordinary uses of the riparian owners. I think it is also clear—so far as the fact is material—that the state of the burn thus induced was greatly worse than (except perhaps in extreme spates occurring occasionally and for short periods) would have been possible under natural conditions, and that it was also greatly worse than it had been previously under existing conditions except once for a short period in November 1901. I further think it clear that this pollution of the water was caused by the stirring or ploughing up by the feeders of the reservoir of the mud and silt which had accumulated in its bed, and which had become exposed by the depletion of the reservoir during the drought of the previous autumn—a depletion allowed to continue until its effect was aggravated and prolonged by rain and wind in the latter half of December. The attempt to attribute the result wholly or primarily to extraordinary rains and winds in my opinion entirely fails. For having examined the evidence I am satisfied that, while the weather conditions when they came into play may have aggravated the mischief, the initial and real operative cause was the depletion of the reservoir by the drafts which, without any replenishment, continued to be made upon it during the drought.

But further (and this is perhaps the crucial matter) I am of opinion upon the evidence that the defenders might without difficulty and quite lawfully—that is to say, without violating any obligation or any duty—have prevented this depletion of the reservoir, which, as I have said, caused the mischief. Indeed, I am unable to doubt that they not only could but would have done so if they had understood or even considered their legal position as I have tried to define it. There were, I think it is clearly established, several courses open to them, all lawful and all effective. In the first place, they might, when the reservoir got too low, have restricted the supply of water to Edinburgh. That might have caused inconvenience, and would probably have been unpopular, but with that of course the pursuers had and have no concern. In the next place, without diminishing the supply to Edinburgh they might have taken a larger proportion of that supply from their other reservoirs, particularly their reservoir at Gladhouse, where there was at least no difficulty as regards quantity, and where I cannot but think that if they had been really anxious they might have surmounted any difficulty of filtration. Lastly, and assuming that for good reasons they rejected both of the foregoing alternatives, I have found myself quite unable to see any sufficient reason for their omission to maintain the Glencorse Reservoir at an adequate level by passing into it, at once or from time to time, a part of the water stored in Loganlee Reservoir, which was not being used otherwise, and which was available and amply sufficient if they had chosen to use it.

No. 187.

July 20, 1905. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

It has to be kept in mind that the Loganlee Reservoir really existed as a reserve reservoir for Glencorse, and it is not disputed that in the events which in fact happened the transference could have been made without detriment to anybody. As to that, as I read his judgment, the Lord Ordinary is satisfied. What is said only is that if the transfer had been made and the drought had immediately broken up, and been followed by heavy rains, there might possibly have been some waste of flood water by reason of the Glencorse Reservoir filling up and overflowing. But that, as it seems to me, merely means that it was a fact in the situation which had to be faced, that the accumulation of mud and silt in the Glencorse Reservoir had diminished its working capacity, and had done so not merely to the extent of its own mass but also to the extent of the layer of water required to be left above it to prevent disturbance.

It may be quite true that prevention of such disturbance was not necessary, having regard only to the interests of the water supply of Edinburgh. From that point of view it may have been quite legitimate to keep the Glencorse Reservoir as low as possible and the Loganlee Reservoir as high as possible. As regards the supply to Edinburgh the statutory arrangements for filtration made the turbidity of the water of minor importance. All that is quite true, and accordingly I do not, any more than the Lord Ordinary, impute it as a matter of blame to Mr Tait, the defenders' engineer, that he refrained from taking a step which might possibly have in certain events involved some waste of storage. He (Mr Tait) was not the defenders' law-agent, nor was he, I presume, bound to be conversant with the defenders' statutes and their proper interpretation. Presumably he accepted without question the views—I think the extreme views—of their rights which the defenders seem to have held, and which they still maintain. But all that, as I have already said, is just a part of the pursuers' complaint. Their complaint is that the defenders, and by consequence their engineer, holding the views which they did of their own duties and the pursuers' rights, failed even to consider the question how far pollution of the pursuers' compensation water was probable, and how far by timeous action on their part it could be prevented or mitigated. It is not as if the likelihood of what occurred could not have been foreseen, or as if there had been no previous warning. For in fact, as the Lord Ordinary points out, they had in November 1901 a very pointed warning. The Glencorse Reservoir had then got too low (too low as it turned out), and the result was that the same thing which is now complained of then occurred, although in a less degree, and was the subject of complaint by the pursuers and correspondence with the defenders. It is not necessary to go into detail. The correspondence speaks for itself. But it seems to me quite to exclude

No. 187.

July 20, 1905.
Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees.

the suggestion that what occurred in December 1902 was a damnum fatale which nobody could have foreseen or prevented.

It follows, if I am right, that the defenders by their action or inaction in and previous to December 1902 failed in their duty—that is to say, failed duly to perform to the pursuers their statutory obligation. It also, of course, follows that for the wrong which they have thus suffered the pursuers are entitled to damages. As to the amount of damages, that raises, I apprehend, a jury question, which must be solved on ordinary principles as it would be solved by a jury. Having considered the evidence and the whole circumstances, I see no sufficient reason to differ from the amount of £2000 which your Lordship proposes.

LORD YOUNG was absent at the advising, but the Lord Justice-Clerk intimated that Lord Young dissented, and agreed with the Lord Ordinary for the reasons stated by the Lord Ordinary in his opinion.

LORD KINCAIRNEY not having been present at the hearing, gave no opinion.

THE COURT recalled the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary, found the defenders liable to the pursuers in damages, and assessed the same at the sum of £2000.

MACANDREW, WRIGHT, & MURRAY, W.S.—MILLAR, ROBSON, & M'LEAN, W.S.—Agents.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

ANDREW DRYBURGH, Pursuer (Reclaimer).—Clyde, K.C.—M'Clure, K.C.—MacRobert.
FIFE COAL COMPANY, LIMITED, Defenders (Respondents).—Campbell, K.C.—Graham Stewart.

Mines and Minerals—Mineral Lease—Subsidence—Liability of mineral tenant for damages to feuars—Large increase of feuing subsequent to date of lease—Jus quæsitum tertio.—By a lease dated in 1877 Wemyss let an extensive coalfield to a company for thirty years, with a break every four years. The mineral tenants were taken bound to work the coal "by the longwall or other method of complete excavation, and so as to insure the greatest output," but were bound to leave solid unworked masses of coal where it might be necessary for the support of existing buildings on the lands. They further obliged themselves during the currency of the lease "to make compensation . . . for all ground" which they might "use or injure by any of their operations under this tack, and to make good and discharge all damages of what kind soever" which they "may in any way occasion to any lands, crops thereon, houses, or woods, or fences and drains, wells or watercourses, and whether such damage shall be due to the lessors of the colliery or to the landlord, or land tenants, feuars, or others."

In 1894 Wemyss feued off a piece of ground, taking the feuar bound to erect thereon a house of a specified value, but reserved to himself and his successors the whole minerals in the ground feued, declaring that the feuar should have no claim for any damage against him and his successors caused by the working of the minerals, but reserving to the feuar all claims which might be competent to him in respect of any such damage against the "tenants or tacksmen of the minerals and others . . . in so far as such tenants or tacksmen may be liable for such damage, without having any right of recourse or relief, or any other remedy" against Wemyss or his successors.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

At or about the date of this feu-disposition Wemyss gave off about thirty other feus in terms, mutatis mutandis, identical with the foregoing, and houses were built on each feu. The houses were all miners' houses or houses of a similar class.

In 1903 the feuar under the feu-disposition above set forth brought an action against the mineral tenants for damages on account of injury to the house on his feu admittedly occasioned solely by subsidence due to the complete excavation of the coal in terms of the mineral lease.

Held by Lord Low, Ordinary, that while the liability of the tenants in damages was not confined to injury to houses existing at the date of the lease, the number of houses actually erected was much in excess of what could reasonably have been supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the date of the lease; that it would therefore have been against the good faith of the contract for Wemyss himself to claim damages from his tenants for injury to the houses, such damage having been occasioned by the method of working stipulated in the lease; and that the pursuer, as a feuar from Wemyss, had no higher right, and was not entitled to damages.

Held (rev. the judgment) (1) that under his feu-disposition the pursuer's common law right to support of the surface was reserved to him intact except as regarded the liability of the superior, Wemyss, directly or by way of relief; (2) that the defenders, being bound by their lease to make good all damage to "feuars," were liable in damages to the feuars directly and without right of relief against Wemyss; (3) that the fact that a large number of feus had been granted and houses erected thereon did not affect the liability of the defenders to the pursuer, as a feuar, whatever might have been the liability of the defenders in a question with Wemyss himself; and therefore (4) that the pursuer was entitled to damages from the defenders.

2D DIVISION. Lord Low.

IN March 1904 Andrew Dryburgh, who held a feu under Mr R. G. Erskine Wemyss, of Wemyss, of a piece of ground with buildings thereon (but reserving the minerals) at Crossroads, near Methil, Fifeshire, brought an action against the Fife Coal Company, Limited, who were the lessees under Mr Erskine Wemyss of certain coal on the Wemyss estates, including the coal underneath the pursuer's property. The summons concluded for declarator that the defenders as tenants of the coal or other minerals lying underneath or in the immediate neighbourhood of the pursuer's property, "are bound to work said coal or other minerals under such precautions and in such a way as not to injure said piece of ground, or the buildings belonging to the pursuer erected thereon, by depriving the same of support or causing subsidence of the ground, or otherwise: And further, that the defenders are bound, in the event of such injury being caused to said ground or buildings by the defenders' operations as tenants foresaid, and to the extent thereof, to make payment to the pursuer in respect of the loss, injury, and damage sustained by him"; and for decree for £500 as damages.

The pursuer's title was a feu-disposition dated in 1894, which was granted by certain trustees, who then held the Wemyss estates, in favour of Andrew Swinton, mason, Methil, and was acquired by the pursuer in 1903. By this feu-disposition Swinton was taken bound to erect and maintain on the ground buildings of a specified yearly value. Swinton erected such buildings, and they were acquired by the pursuer along with the ground. They consisted of a two-storeyed tenement of eight miners' houses, and were all let at the date of the action at the total yearly rental of £53, 10s.

The feu-disposition contained a reservation of minerals in the following terms:—"Reserving always to us and our successors in the

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

said lands and others the whole metals and coal, limestone, freestone, and minerals, and fossils of every description within the piece of ground before disponed, with full power to us and our foresaids, or any person authorised by us or them, but without entering upon the surface of the said feu, to work, win, dig, and take away the same, declaring, as it is hereby expressly provided and declared, that the said Andrew Swinton and his foresaids shall have no claim whatever against us as trustees foresaid, or our successors as aforesaid, for any damage that may be done or caused to the piece of ground hereby disponed, and buildings erected or to be erected thereon, or to the water with which the same may be supplied, by any of the operations in time past or to come, of us or our predecessors or successors and tenants, in working and removing or draining the metals, coal, stone, minerals, and others hereby reserved, or in the neighbourhood of the piece of ground hereby disponed, or which may arise from or through the setting or crushing of any waste or other excavation presently existing, or which may hereafter exist, within or in the neighbourhood of the piece of ground hereby disponed: And declaring that, as regards us and our foresaids, all loss, risk, or damage in any of the events foresaid shall be borne and sustained by the said Andrew Swinton and his foresaids themselves: But reserving always to the said Andrew Swinton and his foresaids all claims which may be competent to them in respect of any such damage as aforesaid, against our tenants or tacksmen of the minerals and others in or near the said piece of ground, in so far as such tenants or tacksmen may be liable for such damage, without having any right of recourse or relief or any other remedy against us, as trustees foresaid, and our foresaids."

The pursuer in his condescendence founded on the feu-disposition, and quoted the clause of reservation of minerals. With reference to the defenders' lease of the coal the pursuer stated:—"The pursuer is not fully aware of the terms of said lease, and has, in point of fact, been refused all information regarding its terms. The defenders are called upon to produce the lease under which they work the said minerals." *

---

* The lease was produced in the Outer-House after the record had been closed. It was dated April 1877, and was between Mr R. G. Erskine Wemyss, then a minor, with consent of his curators, and the trustees of the late Mr J. H. Erskine Wemyss, first parties, and the Fife Coal Company, Limited, second parties. The first parties let to the second parties the seams of coal specified for thirty years (in 1894 extended for a further period of fifteen years), with a break every fourth year. The lease contained, inter alia, the following clauses, which are, for convenience, here marked A and B:—A "With reference to the working of the coals and other minerals hereby let, the said lessees hereby bind and oblige themselves and their foresaids upon their own expenses to work the same in a regular and systematic manner, according to the rules and methods followed in well regulated collieries, and, in particular, to work the whole saleable coal of each seam from roof to pavement, by the longwall or other method of complete excavation, and so as to insure at once the greatest output and the present and future advantageous working of the coalfield . . . and the said lessees also oblige themselves and their foresaids to leave sufficient masses of coal to secure the shaft bottoms, and also to leave solid unworked masses of coal where it may be necessary for the support of the Kirkland Works, or of any other houses or buildings on the lands before specified: And it is hereby provided that where the longwall method of working is followed, the said

No. 188.

July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

The pursuer further, on record as originally closed,* averred;—(Cond. 4) "In the course of their working the defenders have for some time past been removing coal and other minerals from beneath the pursuer's feu and adjacent ground at Crossroads, near Methil. The result of the operations has been to cause subsidence of the surface of pursuer's feu, and very serious resulting damage to the buildings erected on the ground." Then followed specific details. (Cond. 5) "The loss and damage foresaid suffered by the pursuer has been caused by the fault of the defenders. In excavating the coal and other minerals leased to them they are bound to do so without causing subsidence of the surface of pursuer's feu, or doing damage to the buildings thereon; and they have in this respect neglected their duty towards the pursuer. But further, they took no precautions to mitigate the damage likely to be caused by their operations either by leaving the minerals undisturbed in the ground beneath said feu, and within such distance adjacently as would reasonably secure the surface, or by substituting artificial support of the surface for the natural support removed by them. This, in any event, they were bound to do, and they failed."

The defenders answered;—(Ans. 4) "Admitted that in the course of their workings the defenders have removed the coal and other minerals from beneath the pursuer's feu and adjacent ground at Crossroads. Admitted that there has been a certain amount of subsidence of the pursuer's feu, and some damage to the buildings on the ground. Quoad ultra denied." (Ans. 5) "Admitted that the defenders did not leave undisturbed the minerals beneath the said feu or adjacent thereto, and that the defenders did not give artificial support to the surface. Such support was not practicable. Quoad ultra denied."

The defenders in a statement of facts further averred;—(Stat. 3) "When the said lease was granted [i.e., in 1877], the surface estate of the subjects thereby conveyed was mainly rural and agricultural in its character, and, in particular, no feus had been given off at the Crossroads, which includes the ground feued to the pursuer, and no buildings had been built thereon. Subsequent to the said lease, owing to the construction of Methil Dock, and the consequent attraction of people to the neighbourhood, said lessors or their successors gave off a large number of feus, including that to the said Andrew Swinton, lessees shall cause the gob or waste to be properly stowed so as to prevent unequal sits of the surface, and if the room and pillar method of working be adopted, the pillars shall be cut of sufficient dimensions in the first instance to insure their ultimate extraction." . . . B "And further, and over and above making payment of the said fixed rents or lordships or royalties, the said lessees bind and oblige themselves and their foresaids during the currency of this lease to make compensation to the land tenants where the land is let, or to the owner where the land is not let, for all the ground which the lessees under these presents may use or injure in any of their operations under this tack, and to make good and discharge all the damages of what kind soever which the said lessees or their servants in their lawful business under their control may in any way occasion to any lands, crops thereon, houses, or woods, or fences and drains, wells or water-courses, and whether such damage shall be due to the lessors of the colliery or to the landlord, or land tenants, feuars, or others, all as the same shall be determined by two neutral persons to be mutually chosen, or by an oversman to be named by these persons if they shall differ in opinion."

---

* For the amendment allowed in the Inner-House, see infra, p. 1097.

and buildings have been erected on said feus. The granting of these feus was not a natural incident to the ownership or occupancy of the surface estate as an agricultural subject, and was not in the contemplation of the parties at the granting of the said lease. It has had the effect of converting the surface estate from an agricultural subject into an urban subject."

The pursuer answered;—(Ans. 3) "Admitted that the surface was mainly rural in character when the lease of minerals was granted to the defenders, and that the feus at Crossroads, including pursuer's feu, have been given off since the date of the lease. Explained that the public school at Crossroads was erected before the mineral lease was entered into. Quoad ultra denied. Explained that the district is still rural in character, and that such buildings as have been erected on the grounds at Crossroads, being nineteen in all, have been erected almost entirely for the accommodation of the miners working in the defenders' pit. The building of miners' houses there, as an incident in the development of the coal field leased by the defenders, was in the contemplation of parties when said lease was granted, and the houses built are of the character appropriate for dwellers in a mining district."

The pursuer pleaded;—(1) The defenders, as tenants of the minerals condescended on, having no right so to work said minerals as to cause subsidence on the pursuer's property or so as to injure said property, the pursuer is entitled to declarator and damages, or, in any event, to damages as concluded for. (2) The pursuer being in virtue of his titles entitled to damages in respect of the subsidence complained of against the defenders as tenants of the minerals, the pursuer is entitled to decree in terms of the second conclusion of the summons. (3) Separatim, The defenders, as tenants of said minerals, being bound in the event of their operations causing subsidence in the pursuer's property to compensate or pay damages for the same, are liable to the pursuer in damages in respect of the subsidence condescended on. (4) The pursuer having suffered loss, injury, and damage to the amount sued for by the defenders' fault, decree should be pronounced in terms of the petitory conclusions of the summons.

The defenders pleaded, inter alia;—(1) No title to sue. (3) The operations of the defenders being within their legal rights, they are entitled to absolvitor. (4) The lessors (the pursuer's authors) having granted feus for building in excess of what was fairly in contemplation of the parties to the said lease, the pursuer is not entitled to decree.

Proof was allowed. The nature of the evidence led is disclosed in the opinion of the Lord Ordinary.

Neither party led evidence regarding the amount of the damage to the pursuer's property, the parties having agreed, by letters dated 24th October 1904, that in the event of it being proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the defenders were liable for the damage, the defenders should purchase the pursuer's property for £620.

On 6th December 1904 the Lord Ordinary (Low) assoilzied the defenders.*

---

* "OPINION.—This is an action by the proprietor of a house near Leven in Fifeshire for damages for injury done to the house through subsidence of the surface caused by the coal workings of the defenders. It is admitted that the defenders have taken out a seam of coal under the house; that subsidence of the surface and consequent injury to the house have resulted;

No. 188.

July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

The pursuer reclaimed, and argued;—By the pursuer's feu-disposition the superior reserved right to the coal, with full power to work the same, under the declaration that he and his successor should not be liable for any damage to the ground or to buildings erected or to be erected thereon due to the working of the coal, whether by himself, his predecessors, successors, or tenants. If the feu-disposition had stopped there it might be that the pursuer would have parted with the common law right of support absolutely, i.e., not only as against the superior, but also as against the mineral tenants. But the feu-disposition went on to reserve "all claims which may be competent" to the feuar, "in respect of any such damage as aforesaid,"—i.e., to the ground or to buildings erected or to be erected thereon,—against the tenants of the minerals, in so far as such tenants "may be liable for that the subsidence would have occurred even without the additional weight of the house; and that there has been no fault or negligence or improper working on the defenders' part.

---

"The pursuer's house is built upon a piece of land forming part of the Wemyss estate, which his predecessor (Swinton) acquired from certain trustees who then held the estate, conform to feu-disposition granted by them. Mr Randolph Erskine Wemyss of Wemyss is now the superior. The defenders are lessees of the coal in the land upon which the house is built, under a lease granted in 1877 by Mr Erskine Wemyss and others.

"In the feu-disposition there is a reservation of the coal and minerals, and it is provided that the feuar shall have no claim against the superior for any damage which may be caused by the working of the coal. There then follows this clause:—'But reserving always to the said Andrew Swinton and his foresaids all claims which may be competent to them in respect of any such damage as aforesaid, against our tenants or tacksmen of the minerals and others in or near the said piece of ground, in so far as such tenants or tacksmen may be liable for such damage, without having any right of recourse or relief, or any other remedy against us, as trustees foresaid, and our foresaids.'

"I confess that I do not know what is referred to in the closing words of that clause, 'without having any right of recourse,' and so on, because so far as the then existing lease of the coal to the defenders was concerned, I cannot discover any damages for which the tenants would be liable, but in regard to which they would have recourse, or a right of relief, against their landlord, the superior of the feu. Perhaps the words were inserted because there might be future leases under which the tenants might have rights of relief against the superior, or simply with the intention of making it clear that under no circumstances should the feuar have any claim against the superior.

"That, however, is not material, because it is plain that the feu-disposition bars any claim upon the pursuer's part against Mr Erskine Wemyss, who was the superior and the proprietor of the minerals, but reserves to him any claim which he might have a title to enforce against the mineral tenants, that is, the defenders.

"Upon what ground then can the pursuer claim damages for the injury done to his house from the defenders? I am of opinion that damages cannot be claimed from them ex delicto, because it is admitted that they have worked the coal properly, and have done no more than they were not only entitled but bound to do under the lease. Indeed I did not understand the pursuer's counsel to base his claim upon delict, but solely upon an obligation undertaken by the defenders in the lease.

"The clause in the lease upon which the pursuer founds is in the following terms":—(His Lordship quoted clause B, supra, p. 1086, note.)

"The first question which arises is whether the pursuer has a title, in a

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

such damage." Then came words the meaning of which was not plain— "without having any right of recourse or relief or any other remedy against the superior." Did that mean "without the feuar having any," &c., or "without the tenants having any," &c.? The pursuer said that the former was the sound reading, but probably the point was not of much importance, for the claims against the mineral tenants which were reserved to the feuar were claims in so far as "competent," which meant competent under the mineral lease, or in other words the feu-disposition gave the feuar a right to enforce the liability of mineral tenants under their lease for surface damage, and did not draw any distinction between damage from proper working in terms of the mineral lease and damage ex delicto from improper working. The pursuer admitted that the ground of action now presented was not stated by him in his condescendence. The lease was a ground of defence rather than a ground of action. The pursuer stood on his question with the defenders, to sue upon the lease, to which his author was not a party, nor in any way privy? I think that he has a title to do so, as a third party who is given a jus quæsitum by the lease. I read the clause which I have quoted, as obliging the defenders to settle for any damage which they may occasion directly with the party injured, and I think that the description of the parties whose claims they are to 'make good and discharge'—namely, the lessors of the colliery, the landlord, land tenants, and feuars—sufficiently designate the tertii in whose favour a jus quæsitum is conferred, to entitle anyone falling within the category specified to sue upon the contract.

---

"The next question is, whether the clause is applicable to the present case?

"The defenders' counsel did not contend that the language of the clause was not wide enough to include the present claim, but he maintained that, looking to the other stipulations of the lease, the clause must be construed as being confined, at all events in so far as houses were concerned, to those existing at the date of the lease.

"What was mainly founded upon was the obligation laid upon the defenders 'to work the whole saleable coal of each seam from roof to pavement by longwall or other method of complete excavation.'

"That obligation was only qualified by the provision that the defenders should leave sufficient masses of coal to support the shaft bottom, certain lands which had been feued and which were known as 'Kirkland Works,' and also any other 'houses or buildings on the lands before specified.'

"It was conceded that the houses and buildings there referred to were houses and buildings existing at the date of the lease, and therefore, with the exception of such an amount of coal as was required to support such buildings, the Kirkland Works, and the shaft bottom, the defenders were under an absolute obligation to take out the whole of the coal. To carry out that obligation involved—especially considering that there were eight separate seams let to the defenders—that the surface of the ground should, to a greater or less extent, be brought down. The parties must have known that that would be the case, and the lease seems to me to shew that they had it in view, because it is provided that the defenders 'shall cause the gob or waste to be properly stowed so as to prevent unequal sits of the surface.' The object of that provision seems to me to have been, not to prevent subsidence, which was inevitable, but unequal subsidence.

"While the lessees were thus taken bound to excavate the whole coal, the lessors were in no way restricted in the use they might make of the surface, but were left free to erect as many houses as they chose. In such circumstances I agree with the defenders that one would not expect to find liability imposed upon and accepted by the lessees to pay for all damage

No. 188. July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

feu-disposition, which prima facie gave him a right to damages against the defenders, and it was for the defenders to produce their lease and to shew that under it they were not liable. The pursuer, however, was willing to amend his condescendence. The lease took the defenders bound to work by the longwall or other method of complete excavation, subject to this exception, that in the case of the Kirkland Works and of "any other houses or buildings on the lands," the tenants were bound to leave solid unworked masses of coal for support. The pursuer admitted that "houses or buildings," in this clause, meant "existing houses or buildings"; but the word "houses" in the subsequent clause dealing with damages was not subject to that restriction. That clause was not to be read as divided into two compartments—one dealing with compensation for injury caused by authorised working and the other with damages ex delicto for unauthorised or improper working. The clause took the defenders bound to make which might be caused to the surface and buildings thereon by subsidence arising in consequence of the proper working of the coal in terms of the lease. If, however, the defenders have accepted such liability, then, however improvident it may have been for them to do so, they must be held to their contract.

---

"In this case I do not think that they can escape liability on the ground that the clause only deals with matters as they existed at the date of the lease. The clause provided in the first place that 'during the currency' of the lease the defenders shall make compensation to the tenants or the owner of the land for all ground used or injured by them in any of their operations under the lease. That in terms refers not to the state of matters existing at the date of the lease, but to what may be done during its currency. Then the defenders are taken bound to 'make good and discharge' all damages of whatever kind they may occasion, inter alia, to 'crops.' I think that that plainly refers to crops which may be upon the ground during the currency of the lease, and the same may be said in regard to such things as fences and wells. In short, I think that the natural meaning of the language used is that the defenders shall make good all damage caused to subjects of the kind described which may be upon the ground during the currency of the lease, and that it is impossible to restrict the generality of the obligation as regards any of the subjects without reading into the clause words which it does not contain.

"There is, however, another possible construction of the clauses which would exclude the pursuer's claim, and which has occasioned me much difficulty.—[His Lordship considered and rejected this construction, which depended on specialties.]

"I am therefore of opinion that the clause obliging the defenders to make good all damage caused by their operations must be construed as covering and including the claim which the pursuer now makes.

"There remains, however, the question which is raised by the fourth plea in law for the defenders, which is as follows,—'The lessors (the pursuer's authors) having granted feus for building in excess of what was fairly in contemplation of the parties to the said lease, the pursuer is not entitled to decree.'

"Now, when the owner of both the surface and the minerals lets the latter, especially if, as here, he takes the tenant bound to completely excavate the minerals, I do not think that he retains any right to have the surface supported by the minerals unless, and to the extent to which, he reserves such right. Of course I am assuming that the tenant works the minerals in such a way as to cause as little injury as possible. If he works improperly a claim will arise ex delicto.

"If, however, the lessor takes the tenant bound to support the surface good "all the damages of what kind soever" they "may in any way occasion to any lands, crops thereon, houses, woods," &c., and to make good such damages, inter alios, to "feuars." This wide general language could not be read as restricted to damages ex delicto from improper working, but the defenders endeavoured to reach the same practical result, in so far as the present question was concerned, by saying that "houses" was restricted to houses existing at the date of the lease, i.e., to the houses for which, by the earlier clause, the defenders were taken bound to leave a sufficient support. To this argument the answer of the Lord Ordinary was conclusive, viz., that as the other things which were placed in collocation with "houses," e.g. "crops," could not be read as restricted to those existing at the date of the lease, so neither could "houses." It might be a very hard bargain for the defenders that they should be bound both to cause damage and to pay for it, but if that was their the burden imposed is of the nature of a servitude, because a long lease of minerals with an obligation to work them gives practically a right of property in the minerals. Now, it is a well-established rule that if a proprietor of lands dispones part of them, and burdens the part disponed with a servitude in favour of the part retained, he is not entitled so to use the latter as to increase the burden upon the former. I think that a similar principle applies to such a case as the present, where the tenant is upon the one hand bound to excavate the whole minerals, and upon the other to pay damages for any injury which may be done by his workings. In such a case the landowner is not, in my opinion, entitled so to use his land as materially to increase the onerosity of the obligation imposed upon the tenant, or perhaps it would be more correct to say that in such circumstances he cannot enforce the obligation. That principle has been frequently recognised, although I am not aware of any case in which it has actually been carried into effect.

---

"The question therefore appears to me to be whether Mr Erskine Wemyss has, by extensive feuing of his lands for building, increased the burden upon the defenders to such a material extent, that he, and those taking right from him, cannot claim compensation for injury caused to the buildings by the regular working of the minerals as required by the lease?

"I put the question in that form because Mr Erskine Wemyss was in no way restrained in his use of the surface, while the defenders were bound to make good any damage which they caused, and under somewhat similar circumstances the decision in the case of Dunlop v. Corbet, 20th June 1809, F. C., was to the effect that the owner of the minerals was not entitled to interdict the owner of the surface from erecting buildings, but that if the latter did so he might not be entitled to damages for injury to the buildings. No judgment, however, was given upon the latter question, although opinions to the effect which I have indicated appear to have been given.

"Again in Neill's Trustees v. William Dixon, Limited (7 R. 741), a similar view was taken. The circumstances were these: In 1802 the minerals in a piece of ground of fifty-eight acres in extent were sold to one person and the surface to another, power was given in the first disposition, and reserved in the second, to the purchaser of the minerals to win and work them on paying 'all surface damages if any shall be thereby done to the ground of the said lands.' In 1878 the pursuers, who were then owners of the surface, brought an action against the defenders, who were owners of, and were working, the minerals, for damages for injury caused to a dwelling-house and offices by subsidence consequent upon the mineral workings. It was proved that the house, which was of inconsiderable size and value, had been built subsequently to 1802, but about sixty years before 1878, but the judgment did not turn at all upon the fact that the house had been bargain they must abide by it; the Court was not entitled to read the clause out of the contract.[1] The Lord Ordinary, however, had ultimately decided in the defenders' favour by giving effect to their fourth plea in law, and in considering that plea the Lord Ordinary had taken into account not only the houses erected at Crossroads, but also the large increase of houses in Methil. The facts were that the pursuer's house was the seventh house erected at Crossroads since the date of the defenders' lease; that since the lease some thirty houses in all had been erected on feu-dispositions, mutatis mutandis, identical with the pursuer's, but not half of these houses were at Crossroads; and that Crossroads was not part of Methil. The question therefore came to be whether the erection of seven houses at Crossroads was such an excessive amount of building that it could not reasonably be held to have been within the contemplation of the parties to the lease. It was not. The houses were just such houses —miners' houses—as might have been anticipated from the opening in existence for more than the prescriptive period. The two questions which the Court had to determine were (1) whether injury to the house was 'surface damages' within the meaning of the dispositions; and (2) whether the fact that the house was erected subsequently to the date of the dispositions relieved the defenders from liability for damages? The first question was answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative, but all the Judges based their opinions upon the latter point to a considerable extent upon the fact that the house was just such as it might have been anticipated would be built at the time when the dispositions were granted.

No. 188. July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

---

"Thus Lord Adam said,—'The buildings in this case are just such buildings as might naturally and reasonably be expected to be erected on the ground. If there was anything of an extraordinary or unusual nature about the buildings the result might be different.' In like manner the Lord Justice-Clerk (Moncreiff) said,—'I am very far from implying any opinion as to what the respective rights of the landowner and mineral owner might be in the event of the landowner altering substantially the use to which the surface was to be put at the date of the contract,' but 'the existing buildings at present on the surface are not of a greater extent nor of a more valuable character than are fairly suitable for the use of the ground at the date of the original separation of the surface and mineral rights.'

"There was not in Neill's Trustees, any more than in Dunlop v. Corbet, any judgment pronounced to the effect that if the landowner covered the ground with buildings in excess of what might reasonably be supposed to be contemplated at the date of severance, he could not recover damages for injury to such buildings; but it is clear that the learned Judges in these cases recognised that that might be the result. And I am humbly of opinion that that ought to be the result, because it is, as I have said, contrary to a well-established principle that one who has imposed an obligation upon his disponee or tenant should be allowed to substantially and materially increase the burden of that obligation for his own pleasure or profit, and should nevertheless be entitled to enforce it, to the loss and injury of his disponee or tenant.

"Whether there has been such a material increase of the burden as to deprive the landowner of his right to compensation for injury must, of

---

[1] Shaw Stewart v. Macaulay, Nov. 3, 1864, 3 Macph. 16, 37 Scot. Jur. 7; Buchanan v. Andrew, March 10, 1873, 11 Macph. (H. L.) 13, 45 Scot. Jur. 172; Aspden v. Sedden, 1875, L. R., 10 Ch. App. 394; White v. William Dixon, Limited, March 19, 1883, 10 R. (H. L.) 45.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

up of this coalfield; there was no suggestion that the houses—and the pursuer's in particular—were of excessive weight or of excessive value. Therefore at the date of his feu-disposition the pursuer—or his author Swinton—had right to damages against the defenders if they caused injury to his house, and he could not be deprived of that right by the subsequent building operations of the superior, over which the pursuer had no control. If indeed the defenders' lease had taken them bound to pay damages to their landlord only, without mention of "feuars," it might be that an equitable plea which was good against the landlord would be good also against the pursuer on the principle assignatus utitur jure auctoris. But the pursuer was not suing as the assignee of his superior—the defenders' landlord—he was suing in his own right as a "feuar"—a right conferred on course, be a question of circumstances, and I shall accordingly consider what are the circumstances in this case.

---

"The subjects let to the defenders included the coal lying under the town of Methil, and extending for a considerable distance to landward. At the date of the lease in 1877 Methil was a small fishing town with a population of a little over six hundred persons, and the ground in the neighbourhood was entirely agricultural, although there appear to have been one or two small villages, and there was a spinning-mill on the Kirkland feu. Further, the export of coal from Methil by sea was then inconsiderable in amount, and was confined to small sailing ships. It was, indeed, contemplated that increased facilities for the export of coal by sea should be given, but, as the lease itself shews, it was thought that Leven and not Methil would be the suitable port for that purpose. The harbour of Leven was, in fact, improved, but it was a tidal harbour, and it was found that the entrance silted up, and accordingly the intention that it should be used for the export of coal could not be carried out.

"It was in consequence of that that works were entered upon, namely, the construction of docks at Methil, which largely changed the character of that town and its neighbourhood. There was first a dock constructed by Mr Erskine Wemyss at his own cost, which was opened in 1887. Then the North British Railway Company obtained an Act of Parliament authorising them to build further docks, which they did. The pursuer's witness, Mr Watson, says that the docks were opened in 1894, but Mr Carlow, the managing director of the defender's Company, says that they were not opened until 1897, and then only partially. I have no doubt that the latter is right upon that point, but I gather that the Act had been obtained and the works begun prior to 1894, when Swinton obtained his feu-disposition. The result of the construction of the docks was that a very large export trade in coal sprang up at Methil. It is now the port of export for the East of Fife coal, and it also shares with Burntisland the West of Fife trade. Naturally that increase of trade has been accompanied with a large amount of building in Methil and the neighbourhood. A glance at the map, No. 33 of process, shews that since 1895 streets and rows of new houses have been erected. I have already said that in 1877 the population of the town of Methil was about 600, but in 1901 it was 2686, and the increase in the number of houses has been in proportion. Thus, in the area marked B on No. 33 of process there were no houses in 1877, but 142 have been built since 1893. In like manner in the area marked C there was only one house in 1877 and there are now 212, the greater part of which have been built since 1893, while in the area marked D there was no house in 1877, but 64 have been built since 1893. I should explain that in these figures houses do not mean separate tenements, but distinct dwelling-houses of which several may be contained in one tenement.

"It is therefore plain that the character of Methil has entirely changed

No. 188. "feuars" by the lease, and not excluded by the pursuer's feu-disposition.

July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

Argued for the defenders;—(1) The pursuer's case, as stated on record, was based entirely on the feu-disposition which formed his own title and on an averment (Cond. 5) of fault on the part of the defenders, the fault averred consisting of, in the first place, the fact that they had brought down the surface—an averment which implied that the common law right of support was reserved to the pursuer intact; and, in the second place, alternatively, an averment that the defenders were in fault in respect that they had neglected reasonable and proper precautions to prevent subsidence. The first branch of this averment was negatived by the pursuer's own feu-disposition, which, whatever it did, most certainly did not reserve the common law right of support intact; and the second branch of the averment failed on the facts, for it was admitted that the defenders since 1877. From being a small, and apparently not very prosperous fishing town, it has become the centre of a great export trade in coal.

---

"It seems to me that it is not reasonable to suppose that such a change in the character of the place could have been in the contemplation of parties in 1877. No one could then have foreseen that some fifteen years later a railway company would intervene and build extensive docks for the accommodation of the coal trade of Fife at Methil. I may add that there are various provisions in the lease which seem to me to shew that what the parties contemplated was that the land around Methil would continue to be in the future, as it had been in the past, entirely devoted to agricultural purposes.

"If the question had arisen in regard to a house in one of the new streets which have been added to Methil, and if it had been shewn that if the defenders were liable in damages for injury to that house, they would also (at all events in the absence of special circumstances) be liable for injury caused to all the new houses, I should have thought that the case was certainly one for the application of the principle to which I have referred.

"But the pursuer's house is not in Methil, but is situated at a place called Crossroads, distant about a quarter of a mile from Methil. Further, it is admitted that there are some of the new houses for injury to which the defenders would not be liable. It appears that up to 1898 or 1900 the form of feu-disposition which Mr Erskine Wemyss used was the same as that in Swinton's case, in which the feuar's right to claim damages from the defenders was reserved. Mr Wemyss, however, seems then to have recognised that it was not just to the defenders to continue to grant feu-rights in such terms, and recently he had taken his feuars bound not to claim damages for injury done by mineral workings from anyone. I do not know how many feus have been granted under the new form of charter, but I do not think that there can be many, because one witness said that the result of the new form being adopted was almost to put an end to feuing. But, however that may be, it was admitted by the pursuer's counsel that there have been at least thirty feus granted (and built upon) with titles in the same terms as that of Swinton. It seems to me that that is a material number, and shews that the question which is raised is a serious one for the defenders. It is no light matter for mineral tenants who are bound both to excavate the whole minerals, and to make compensation for any buildings which they may injure in so doing, to have thirty new tenements built upon the land, and it is to be remembered that there are several seams which the defenders are bound to work, and that with the working of each seam there will probably be fresh subsidence and fresh injury to the buildings.

"In regard to Crossroads, it is situated, as the name implies, at a place

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

had not neglected any reasonable and proper precautions, they being bound to work according to a method of complete excavation. The pursuer's case as stated on record therefore failed, and had been abandoned by him. It was contrary to the rules of pleading to allow an action to proceed when the pursuer's true ground of action was not even suggested by him on record. (2) The case which the pursuer now made appeared to be this: that under the feu-disposition, taken along with the lease between the defenders and the superior, the pursuer had, not a right to damages ex delicto against the defenders, but a pactional right to compensation against them on the principle of jus quæsitum tertio. The first answer to that contention was that it was excluded by the clause of reservation of minerals in the pursuer's feu-disposition—by the concluding branch of that clause beginning "But reserving always to the said Andrew Swinton," &c. That branch of the clause reserved to the feuar all claims to "damage," where four roads meet, and at the date of the lease there were only two buildings there, the parish school, and the schoolmaster's house. These were no doubt placed there because it was a convenient central position.

---

"The next building which was erected at Crossroads was a co-operative store in 1888. Even if all these buildings had been erected subsequent to the date of the lease I should not have thought that the defenders could have objected, because they were such as might have been anticipated for the use of the estate even if its character had not been altered. But in 1894 feus began to be taken at Crossroads, and buildings of a different kind erected. There were no fewer than six feus taken there in that year, the reason obviously being that the construction of the Methil docks had then begun. The taking of the feus seems to have been a speculation on the part of the feuars, because they built workmen's houses, in the expectation (which was justified) that the construction of the docks would raise a demand for such houses in the neighbourhood. And no doubt Crossroads was chosen just because it was in a central position and houses there would be available for men working in different parts of the district. The result has been that Crossroads from being simply the site of the parish school has become a village of workmen's houses. In 1877 the sole residents were the schoolmaster and his family, but now the population is 319, which is more than half the population of the town of Methil in 1877. I do not know precisely how many tenements have been erected, but there are sixty-five distinct dwellings.

"The pursuer founded upon the fact that some persons who reside at Crossroads are in the defenders' employment. Mr Carlow, however, says that the defenders have ample accommodation for all their workmen in houses which they have erected under the powers conferred in the lease, and that if they had required more houses they would not have built them above unworked coal as was the case at Crossroads, but at a place where they would not interfere with the working of the coal in regular course.

"If, however, the houses at Crossroads had been all the houses erected after the date of the lease, it would have been a comparatively small matter, and the defenders would not I think have been freed from their obligation to make compensation for injury done to the houses. It seems to me, however, that the building at Crossroads cannot be regarded as an incident separate from the very extensive building which has taken place at Methil. The building in both places was part of the same movement, and the cause was the same, namely, the construction of the docks, and the consequent increase of trade and population. If such extensive building could have been foreseen, or had been contemplated when the lease was made, I think that it is most unlikely that the defenders would have undertaken the obligation to give compensation for injury to buildings. As matters stood which meant damages ex delicto, arising from unauthorised or improper working by the tenants; it did not include compensation for injury caused by their authorised and proper working—i.e., by their use of the longwall system. It could not reasonably be supposed that the superior intended to give the feuar a right to compensation against the defenders for injuries caused by the defenders doing the very thing they were by their lease required to do. But (3) if the reservation in the feu-disposition was not confined to damages ex delicto, it gave the pursuer right to compensation only in so far as the defenders were, under their lease, liable to the superior in compensation; to construe the feu-disposition as giving the feuar a higher right than the superior himself had would be to make the superior liable in relief, and the feu-disposition expressly excluded claims of relief against the superior. The clause of the lease beginning "and further, and over and above making payment," was composed of two distinct branches—the first dealing with "compensation," and the second with "damages." The first branch took the defenders bound to make "compensation" to the land tenants or to the land owner for all "ground" which the defenders might use or injure. That branch did not say anything about feuars or about injury to houses; that branch therefore did not help the pursuer. The second branch of the clause dealt with damages ex delicto caused by improper working. It took the defenders bound to make good "all damages" which they might in any way occasion, inter alia, to "houses," and "houses" meant "existing houses"—that was to say, the pursuers were to be liable in damages ex delicto if, contrary to the stipulation in the lease, they worked out the coal under the Kirkland Works and the "other houses" —here admittedly "existing houses"—mentioned in the earlier clause. To hold that the defenders were liable in damages ex delicto for injury to houses built during the currency of their lease (such injury being caused by working according to a method of complete excavation, and no other cause of injury was here suggested), either meant that the defenders were liable in damages ex delicto for doing the very thing that they were by their lease required to do—which was a contradiction in terms at the date of the lease, the obligation was not an onerous one, judging from the fact that apparently the defenders have never until now been called upon to pay any compensation under it. But in view of the changed condition of matters the obligation has become very onerous, and I do not think that it is a good answer to say that the amount of coal which would require to be left to support all the houses is small compared with the total amount in the mineral field. The defenders are bound to work out the whole of the coal, and are not entitled to leave a sufficient amount to support the buildings. That differentiates this case from the ordinary one in which the tenants are entitled to leave a sufficient amount of coal for the support of new buildings, and thereby to avoid becoming liable for compensation. Further, the fact that the defenders are bound to take out the whole of the coal, and also to pay compensation for injury to new buildings, seems to me to render the case peculiarly favourable for the application of the principle which I have stated; and as, in my opinion, building operations which could not have been in the contemplation of the parties when the lease was granted have been carried on to an extent which has materially increased the onerosity of the obligation laid upon the defenders, I do not think that that obligation could be enforced by Mr Erskine Wemyss; and if that is the case, it was not maintained that the pursuer was in any better position.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

---

"I shall therefore assoilzie the defenders."

No. 188.
July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

—or it meant that they were bound to leave the coal unworked under every house that might be built, contrary to their express right and obligation under the lease to work by a method of complete excavation. But (4) if the lease was not strictly to be confined to liability for injuries to houses existing at its date, that did not mean that the mineral tenants were to be liable for injuries to any houses—however numerous and of whatever character—that the proprietor might choose to build. The pursuer argued that his rights under his feu-disposition could not be affected by the number or character of the other houses erected by the proprietor. But the pursuer, who was founding on the lease, could not be heard to say that it meant one thing as between the parties to it, and something different as between him and the defenders—the mineral tenants. The pursuer said that under the lease "feuars" had a direct right to compensation, but the question was what did "feuars" in the lease mean? If it meant that the landlord was entitled to give off as many building feus as he pleased, and to give every feuar a right against the defenders to compensation for injuries that were practically inevitable, then the pursuer was right; but if the lease did not mean that, then the pursuer as a "feuar" was in no better position than the superior. The latter was the sound reading of the lease. Quoad the mineral tenants, these houses were to be regarded as having been erected by the proprietor, and as being his property. The question, therefore, came to be whether the mineral tenants would have been liable to the proprietor for the injuries to all these houses. The defenders would not have been liable, upon the equitable principle that the landlord, notwithstanding the wide generality of the terms of the lease, was not entitled to impose serious burdens on his tenants which could not reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the date of the lease, and which, consequently, were against the good faith of the contract. This principle was recognised with reference to mineral leases,[1] and also with reference to damage caused to agricultural tenants by reason of the preservation of excessive stocks of game,[2] and it applied in the present case for the reasons explained by the Lord Ordinary. If, therefore, the defenders were wrong in the earlier branches of their argument, the interlocutor ought to be affirmed on the ground on which the Lord Ordinary had proceeded.

On 29th June 1905 the Court allowed the pursuer to amend his record, and for that purpose opened up the record, and the minute of amendment for the pursuer and answers for the defenders having been received, of new closed the record.

The pursuer's amendment consisted of the following addition at the end of cond. 5, "or alternatively, the defenders are only entitled to damage the pursuer's buildings by their operations upon paying compensation therefor. By their lease, which is now produced, it is provided that" [the pursuer then quoted clause B, supra, p. 1086, note.] "Under said provision, the pursuer is entitled to compensation as aforesaid."

[1] Dunlop v. Corbet, June 20, 1809, F. C.; Hamilton v. Turner, July 19, 1867, 5 Macph. 1086, 39 Scot. Jur. 621; Neill's Trustees v. William Dixon, Limited, March 19, 1880, 7 R. 741.

[2] Morton v. Graham, Nov. 30, 1867, 6 Macph. 71, 40 Scot. Jur. 37; Kidd v. Byrne, Dec. 19, 1875, 3 R. 255; Cadzow v. Lockhart, May 19, 1876, 3 R. 666.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

The defenders in their amended answers referred to the lease for its terms.

At advising,—

LORD KYLLACHY.—The first question in this case, the answer to which may go a long way towards solving the other questions, is as to the construction of the clause in the pursuer's feu-contract, which defines his position with respect to the minerals under his feu.

Apart from that clause and its special provisions, the pursuer's position as surface owner would have been clear enough. He would have been entitled at common law to stop by interdict any workings in the subjacent or adjacent minerals which brought down his surface or injured his buildings. He would also have been entitled to recover damages in respect of such workings. And those rights, thus belonging to him at common law, he could have enforced against the actual wrongdoer, whether the owner of the minerals or the mineral tenant.

But the question is whether, and to what extent, the pursuer, or rather his predecessor, did by the clause in question renounce or restrict his common law rights (a) as against the superior who retained the ownership of the minerals, and (b) as against the superior's mineral tenants—including the present defenders.

Now, there can be no doubt upon the construction of the clause that, as against the superior, the feuar's right of support was renounced. It was not so expressly. But it was so by plain implication. For the feuar was in terms taken bound to make no claim against the superior or his successors for any damage resulting to the feu by the excavation of the minerals; the excavation contemplated being plainly complete excavation, but of course excavation assumed to be executed in a proper manner.

On the other hand, it seems equally clear that as against third parties, and in particular the superior's mineral tenants, the feuar's common law rights were not renounced. They were, on the contrary, expressly reserved —reserved subject only to a single condition, viz., that they should not be asserted so as to involve as against the superior any right of recourse by his mineral tenants.

In short, as I understand it, the effect of the clause in the feu-contract was simply this: that the feuar retained unimpaired his whole common law rights as owner of the surface, except in so far as their enforcement affected, or might be made to affect, the superior or his successors. It is vain, I think, to suggest that the clause throughout relates only to improper workings; or that while the first part of it—that in favour of the superior —relates to proper workings, the second part—that in favour of the feuar —relates only to improper workings. Improper workings, it seems to me, are not in intuitu of the clause at all. Nor is it possible upon its language to draw any distinction between the kind of damage for which all claim was renounced, and the kind of damage for which all claim was reserved.

This being so, the next question is, whether to any, and, if to any, to what extent in existing circumstances, this exclusion of all claim by the feuar involving recourse against the superior, limits the feuar's rights as against the present defenders, who are mineral tenants of the superior, and were so since before the date of the pursuer's feu. It is admitted that these defenders have by their longwall workings brought down or at least injured the pursuer's buildings; but it is also admitted that they have done so working quite properly, and without negligence.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

It is, I think, manifest that the answer to this question depends and must depend upon this: What, under the terms of the defenders' lease, is the extent of the authority which, with respect to their longwall workings, the lease confers on them? If the authority is absolute and unconditional, cadit questio. Any adverse proceedings by the pursuer must in that case involve the superior in a claim of recourse—recourse under the warrandice in his lease. And ex hypothesi that would at once exclude the title of the pursuer to take the proceedings. If, on the other hand, the authority is not absolute and unconditional, but is limited by stipulations as to payment of damages—payment of damages to the feuar—no claim of damages by the feuar could possibly involve any recourse. A demand for interdict might do so, but a demand simply for damages could not do so.

It becomes therefore necessary to examine the defenders' lease, and in particular the clause which may be called for shortness the "Damages Clause"—the clause which has been so much discussed. Several views have been presented to us as to the just construction of that clause.

The pursuer's view is short and simple. He says that the damages there mentioned include, inter alia, all damages caused to his (the pursuer's) feu by the defenders' operations—not merely damages caused by improper workings, but also and mainly damages caused by the complete excavation of the minerals—excavation by the longwall working which is authorised by the lease. In short, he contends that when the defenders' lease is examined it is made clear that so far from being unconditional, the defenders' right to work is expressly conditional—conditional on their paying to him (the pursuer) exactly what he (the pursuer) claims in this action. He admits that when the lease is examined it excludes his declaratory conclusions—conclusions which, if affirmed, would justify interdict. But he says that that is of no moment as he does not now press those conclusions, and indeed ceased to do so so soon as, in defence to his action, the defenders' lease was produced.

The defenders, on the other hand, maintain two points. They say (1) that the damages stipulated in the clause apply only to improper workings —workings unauthorised or improperly carried on. And then they say (2) that in any view the clause only applies to existing feus and to existing buildings, and not to feus and buildings like the pursuer's—feus granted and buildings erected after the date of the lease.

With respect to these opposing constructions, I think it enough to say that I agree with the Lord Ordinary, and do so upon the grounds which he has expressed. I am not able to hold (what would result from the opposite view) that the defenders, being prima facie liable to the pursuer as having invaded his common law rights, have elided that liability upon the ground that they have from the pursuer's superior an unconditional authority to work longwall—an authority which, by reason of the recourse which it carries with it, protects them against the assertion of the pursuer's rights. I do not consider that, upon the just construction of their lease, that is the defenders' position.

No. 188.
July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

It remains, however, to deal with what is the last question in the case, viz., whether the Lord Ordinary can be supported in holding—on a ground altogether different—that the pursuer's claim is excluded. That ground, as I understand it, is this, that since the date of the defenders' lease, and to a partial extent since the date of the pursuer's feu, there has been a great extension of feuing, and by consequence of building, upon the Wemyss estate—that that extension has gone greatly beyond what could have been contemplated at the date of the lease, and that therefore Mr Wemyss, the pursuer's superior and the defenders' lessor, is barred from demanding from the defenders, either directly or through his feuars, damages which, although stipulated in the lease, have been so enhanced by his subsequent action as practically to make the working of the leasehold impossible. That is, I think, speaking generally, the ground on which the Lord Ordinary, who is otherwise favourable to the pursuer, decides ultimately for the defenders.

I am afraid that there are several difficulties in the way of the Lord Ordinary's view.

In the first place, I have great difficulty in holding that the facts proved are really sufficient to raise the kind of case which the Lord Ordinary figures. The pursuer's feu is distant about a mile from the village of Methil; and there can be no doubt that of late years there has been, and is still proceeding, a very considerable extension of feuing and building in and about that village. Nor can it be doubted that if held liable to the pursuer and persons in his position in payment of damages as now claimed, the defenders' profits from the working of the coalfield will be at least materially reduced. But there are two points upon which, in this connection, I am not satisfied. The one is that, so far as the feuing has yet gone or is likely to go in the near future, it does not appear that worse will happen to the defenders than a reduction, perhaps material, of their profits. The other point is that I am unable to see how the defenders could have failed to anticipate, even in 1877, when they took their lease, that the success of their operations and the opening up and successful working of this great coalfield might, and probably would, have the effect of greatly adding to the importance of the harbour of Methil, and stimulating the growth of that village, and more or less of the neighbouring hamlets.

Further, and in the next place, I am unable to see why, even as against their lessor, it should be assumed that the defenders' remedy includes the right, while continuing to work under the lease, to refuse implement of the conditions which the lease provides. If by the accumulation of uncontemplated burdens the coalfield becomes unworkable to profit, the defenders' remedy would, prima facie, appear to be that they should throw up their lease, or rather, in the present case where there are "breaks" every four years, take advantage of one of those breaks. But how, even as between them and their lessor, they could claim to re-form the lease and go on with it minus essential provisions, I confess I as yet fail to see.

Lastly, and in any view, I am unable to understand what the present pursuer has to do with such questions and controversies. He is not here suing as an assignee of the superior to the latter's rights under the defenders' lease. He is suing, as I have endeavoured to shew, in his own right as owner of the surface embraced in his recorded title. As already explained, he appeals to the defenders' lease not as constituting his title to sue but as affording in gremio a reply to a defence based on it. And how in such circumstances his position could be affected by disputes due to occurrences subsequent to his feu, arising between his superior and the latter's mineral tenants, has not been explained. It could only be so upon the theory that, as the result of the controversy, the defenders' lease must (as before indicated) be re-formed by the excision of the damages clause and its limitations. And as to that, it may, I think, be enough to say, first, that matters have not yet reached that stage; and next, that if they should do so, it will have to be then considered how far, even in that event, the pursuer could be prejudiced by modifications of the lease made after the date of his feu-contract, and after also his claim of damages had emerged.

LORD KINCAIRNEY.—The pursuer is a feuar of a piece of ground at Crossroads, near Methil, in Fife, lying above the extensive Wemyss coalfield, and he has raised this action for damages or compensation for injury done to his feu, and to a house built on it, by the subsidence of the surface caused by the workings of the defenders, the Fife Coal Company, tenants of the coalfield. The case involves questions of much general importance, and has been considered by the Lord Ordinary with very great care. The greater part of his opinion is in favour of the pursuer, and in that part of it I concur. At the close of his judgment the Lord Ordinary has proceeded on a special plea, in respect of which he has assoilzied the defenders, and in that conclusion I am not able to agree.

The agents for the parties have exchanged letters to the effect that it had been arranged that neither party would lead any evidence as to the amount of damage done to the pursuer's property by the defenders' operations, on the understanding that in the event of the pursuer being successful in the action, or (as the defenders express it) in the event of it being proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the Company is liable for damage done, the defenders would purchase the property at the price of £620. There seems to be no minute embodying this arrangement, but at the debate I understood that it was to be taken as settled.

The Lord Ordinary states in his note,—"It is admitted that the defenders have taken out a seam of coal under the house; that subsidence and consequent injury to the surface has resulted; that the subsidence would have occurred even without the additional weight of the house; and that there has been no fault or negligence or improper working on the defenders' part"; and I understood these points to be admitted. The case is to be considered on the footing expressed in these letters and in that part of the Lord Ordinary's note.

I think that the argument starts with a certain onus or presumption against the defenders arising from the principle that owners or lessees of minerals are not entitled in working them to injure the surface above if belonging to another person, and must justify their proceedings if they do so, or otherwise must pay compensation or damages.

The question therefore is, whether the defenders are liable for the admitted damage caused by their workings. Now, there seem to be only two deeds which bear materially on that question, namely, the lease of the minerals dated in 1877, and the disposition creating the feu dated in 1894; and the first question seems to be whether the injury done to the pursuer's property by the defenders' mineral workings can be justified by either of these deeds.

No. 188. July 20, 1905. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

The feu-disposition which made the minerals and the surface separate estates was granted by the trustees of the Wemyss estate in 1894. In that feu-disposition the minerals were reserved under the declaration that the disponee (one Swinton, predecessor of the present pursuer) should have no claim against the disponers, as trustees of the Wemyss estate, or their successors "for any damage that might be done to the piece of ground disponed and buildings erected or to be erected thereon . . . by any of the operations in time past or to come of us or our predecessors or successors or tenants" in working the minerals reserved. But reserving "to the disponee and his foresaids all claims which may be competent to them in respect of any such damage as aforesaid against our tenants or tacksmen of the minerals and others in or near the said piece of ground in so far as such tenants or tacksmen may be liable for such damage without having any right or recourse or other remedy against us as trustees foresaid or our foresaids."

It thus appears that all claims competent to the present pursuer, Dryburgh, against the defenders for damages caused to his feu by their mineral workings are clearly reserved, and that the defence derives no benefit or assistance from the feu-disposition.

The lease which was granted in 1877 is a much more elaborate and complicated deed, and raises questions of construction not free from difficulty—(His Lordship here quoted clauses A and B, supra, pp. 1085-6, note).

These clauses seem to lay a considerable burden on the mineral tenants. For while they are laid under the obligation to work out the whole minerals, which could hardly be fulfilled without letting down the surface, they are also laid under stringent obligations to support the surface, and very distinctly engage to discharge all the damage which their works occasion.

The Lord Ordinary states the question whether the pursuer can plead this lease to which he was not a party, and which was granted thirty years before he took his feu; and he answers that question by expressing the opinion that he had a jus quæsitum in the lease. I do not dissent from that opinion, but concur in it. But it does not seem to be absolutely necessary to invoke the aid of a jus quæsitum. I think the true question is different, and is not whether the lease imposes obligations on the defenders, but rather whether it relieves the defenders from their obligations at common law; and I am of opinion that it does not. I concur, then, in the conclusion which the Lord Ordinary has reached, that the liability of the defenders for the damage they have occasioned is established by or is consistent with the documents founded on, and if there were no counter consideration, it follows that the condition has been fulfilled on which the agreement referred to at the outset would take effect, and the defenders would fall to purchase the pursuer's feu on the terms arranged.

But the Lord Ordinary has not come to that conclusion, because he holds that the defenders' fourth plea should be affirmed. That plea is that the pursuer is not entitled to the decree to which he would otherwise be entitled, because the pursuer's authors, the proprietors of the mineral field, have granted feus for building in excess of what the parties to the lease had in view at its date. Now, I do not think there are in the process materials for affirming that plea. There is very little proof on the subject. It is proved or admitted that the subsidence of which the pursuer complains was at least in part occasioned by the defenders' workings apart from the weight of the buildings placed upon it; indeed, it is admitted that it would have been caused although no building had been placed on the ground at all. Now, I think that it follows, both at common law and under the provisions of the feu-contract and of the lease, that the defenders are bound to compensate the pursuer for the damage they have themselves caused. The loss may have been increased by the erection of other buildings, but I am unable to see how that can afford a defence against a demand for payment of the damage previously incurred. There is no proof at all that the subsidence has been one whit increased in consequence of the erection of the new buildings. The amount of the loss caused by the subsidence may have been increased if the foundations of the new buildings were disturbed and they were rendered insecure; but I do not perceive how that could affect this question. If the weight of the new buildings had brought down the surface materially, that might have raised a different question, but that has not been proved.

No. 188.

July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

Further, I do not find the evidence clear about the position of the new buildings. No doubt there have been a great many buildings put down in the immediate neighbourhood, but I am not able to see how that circumstance can affect the pursuer's right to recover the damages which the defenders' workings have caused to his property. He seems to have nothing to do with the damage to neighbouring properties.

I am therefore of opinion that the interlocutor of the Lord Ordinary should be recalled, and that it should be found that damage has been done to the pursuer's property through the operations of the defenders in working the minerals under the pursuer's feu, for which damage the defenders are liable.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—The Lord Ordinary has decided this case mainly upon the mineral lease granted to the defenders in 1877. He holds that while that contract would, if matters had remained in the situation contemplated by the parties when it was granted, have given the pursuer, whose feu was acquired in 1894, a right to claim damages for injury by subsidence on the principle of jus quæsitum tertio, there was subsequent to 1877 so great an increase in the number of feus for building purposes that the defenders' obligation to pay damages no longer remains binding. For this alteration of circumstances his Lordship holds the lessor responsible, and, as the pursuer's claim on the footing of jus quæsitum (being made by virtue of the lessor's contract) can give him no higher right than the lessor would have had, the result in the Lord Ordinary's view is absolvitor.

I do not find this a satisfactory ground of judgment. The pursuer's claim rests mainly on the terms of his own title, and when he came into Court he founded on nothing else. Now, what does the feu-disposition of 1894 provide? First, it reserves the minerals; second, it excludes all claims by the

No. 188.
July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

feuar against the granters for any damage that may be caused to ground or buildings, erected or to be erected, by past or future mineral operations by themselves or their tenants; third, it declares that as regards the granters all such damage shall be borne by the feuar himself; but fourth, it reserves to him all claims that may be competent to him "in respect of any such damage as aforesaid" against the mineral tenants in so far as such tenants may be liable for such damage without having (which plainly means without "their" having) any right of recourse or relief, or any other remedy against the granters. It is thus anxiously stipulated that the feuar is to have no claim of damages for injury arising out of mineral workings against the persons with whom he contracted, but that he may make what he can out of the mineral tenants so long as the success of such a claim does not raise a right of recourse against the granters of the feu. The existence of this clause of reservation, no doubt, gave the pursuer a right to call for exhibition of the mineral lease of 1877 to see what the rights and obligations of the tenants were under it. Probably the pursuer was entitled to see the lease, even apart from this clause.

When the lease was disclosed it was found to contain a clause obliging the tenants to work the whole saleable coal of each seam from roof to pavement by the longwall or other method of complete excavation, except in certain specified places where pillars were to be left under existing buildings, and a further clause obliging them to "make good and discharge all damages of what kind soever" which they or their servants might in any way occasion to any lands, crops thereon, houses or woods, fences or drains, wells or water-courses, and whether such damage should be due to the lessors of the colliery, or to the landlord or land tenants, feuars or others, all as the same should be determined by arbitration.

This is the clause in the lease which is now founded on as creating a jus quæsitum in the pursuer. It seems to me that its true effect as regards the pursuer is not positive but negative. In other words, it is consistent with, and therefore does not exclude, the claim of damages which the feu-disposition reserves; and in particular it does not shew that such a claim of damages can be excluded by reason of its inferring any right of recourse by the mineral tenants against the lessors.

There may be a certain hardship in the mineral tenants being at the same time taken bound to work out the whole saleable coal by complete excavation, and to make good and discharge all damages of whatever description which may result from such working. If the lessors were to insist in their own right on both of these obligations the tenants might have an answer. We are not called upon in this action to consider that question. This is an action by a feuar who is not interested in the complete excavation of the coal, but is interested in a claim of damages which his title reserves and the lease does not exclude.

When I say that the lease does not exclude the claim I am not overlooking the argument that the damages clause in the lease is, on its just construction, limited to houses existing at the date of the lease. The Lord Ordinary is, on that part of the case, with the pursuer, and I agree with him. The crop, woods, fences, and drains mentioned in the same clause cannot be so limited, and I see no reason why the houses should be.

No. 188.
July 20, 1905.
Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited.

Again, when the word "damage" or "damages" is used in either the feu-disposition or the lease it is plainly used in the most general sense, and makes no distinction between damage arising ex delicto and damage for which, strictly speaking, "compensation" is due.

That only leaves to be considered the question on which the Lord Ordinary has found for the defenders. It appears that recently the superior, recognising the hardship to the mineral tenants to which I have referred, has altered the form of his feu-contracts so as to take his feuars bound not to claim damages from anybody. The result is that there are at present not more than about thirty feu-dispositions over a large area of surface, extending to 250 acres or thereby, in terms identical with the pursuer's. I suppose there is no assurance that this change of policy will continue, and nothing, therefore, can be founded on that. But, taking the situation as it stands, and admitting all that the Lord Ordinary says about the increase in size and importance of the port of Methil, I greatly doubt whether the change is such as to justify a Court of law in reading out of a contract one of its express stipulations, on the ground that when it was inserted a different state of things was in the contemplation of the parties. Such a principle can only be applied with the greatest caution, particularly to a contract like this, with frequent breaks in it. But the Lord Ordinary's ground of judgment assumes that the pursuer's claim of damages is wholly dependent on the jus quæsitum which the lease gives him. If I am right in holding that his claim is not so dependent, but is primarily founded on the terms of his own title, then the ground of judgment fails.

I am therefore of opinion that we should recall the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor, decern in terms of the second part of the declaratory conclusions, and, in respect of the conditional agreement between the parties set out in the letters of 24th October 1904, find it unnecessary to deal with the petitory conclusions of the summons. The pursuer does not now insist on the first part of the declaratory conclusions, which are plainly unsuitable to a case like this where the defenders cannot be restrained from complete excavation, but are liable in damages for bringing down the surface.

The LORD JUSTICE-CLERK concurred.

THE COURT pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Recall the said interlocutor [of 6th December 1904]: Find and declare that the defenders are bound in the event of any injury being caused to the ground or buildings mentioned in the summons by their operations as tenants of the mineral field referred to in the record, and, to the extent of said injury, to make payment to the pursuer in respect of the loss, injury, and damage thus sustained: Find further, that in respect of the agreement of parties embodied in the two letters both dated 24th October 1904 . . . it is unnecessary to deal further with the conclusions of the summons."

MACPHERSON & MACKAY, S.S.C.—DAVIDSON & SYME, W.S.—Agents.

No. 189.

July 20, 1905.*
Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

DANIEL MACAULAY STEVENSON, Pursuer (Respondent).—Clyde, K.C.—Hunter.

NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY COMPANY, Defenders (Appellants).—Guthrie, K.C.—Cooper, K.C.—G. G. Grierson.

Master and Servant — Shipping Agent — Engagement "for one year certain"—Tacit Relocation—Termination of contract.—By letter, dated 29th December 1891, the manager of the North British Railway Company appointed Stevenson, a coal exporter, to be "agent for this Company as from 1st ulto. (for the purpose of attending to the Company's interests in connection with their shipping trade to Hamburg at Bo'ness, Burntisland, and Methil), at a salary of £450 per annum, for one year certain." Stevenson's duty as agent was to endeavour to get coal taken by the Railway Company's lines to the ports named and shipped thence to Hamburg. On 7th December 1892 the contract was renewed "for another year." Thereafter Stevenson continued to discharge the duties of agent until 1900 without formal reappointment. He always received his salary in one sum for each year ending 31st October. On 2d January 1901 the Railway Company gave Stevenson notice that his services would not be required after three months from that date.

In an action by Stevenson against the Railway Company for payment of the balance of his salary to 31st October 1901, held, after a proof, that the contract between the pursuer and the defenders was a yearly contract, and, therefore, that the defenders were not entitled to terminate it, after a year had begun, on three months' notice.

2D DIVISION. Sheriff of Lanarkshire.

IN 1886, D. M. Stevenson, coal exporter, 12 Waterloo Street, Glasgow, by letters entered into an agreement with the North British Railway Company, whereby he, in consideration of payments in proportion to the tonnage shipped, was to endeavour to get coal taken by the Railway Company's lines to Bo'ness, a port on the Forth in which the Railway Company were interested, and shipped thence to Hamburg. In 1890 the agreement was extended to Methil and Burntisland, ports in Fife, in which also the Railway Company were interested.

This agreement was acted on from about 1888 until December 1891, when Stevenson was appointed "agent" of the Railway Company at a "salary" in terms of the following letters, viz.:—

On 29th December 1891 the general manager of the Railway Company wrote to Stevenson,—"With reference to our interview to-day, I hereby appoint you agent for this Company as from 1st ulto. (for the purpose of attending to the Company's interests in connection with their shipping trade to Hamburg at Bo'ness, Burntisland, and Methil), at a salary of £450 per annum, for one year certain. If at the end of that year the services which you have undertaken to render to the Company are such as to justify an increase in the salary, the additional value of such services shall be taken into account in fixing any salary which may be attached to a further engagement.

"In the event of any material reduction taking place in the rates charged by the Company, consequent on the revision now being made by Parliament, the Company reserve the right to take the effect of such reduction into account as from 1st November 1892."

On 30th December 1891, Stevenson replied,—"I have your letter of y'day, which is in order, and for which I am much obliged."

On 7th December 1892, Stevenson's appointment as agent was * Decided July 18, 1905.

No. 189.

July 20, 1905.
Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

renewed in terms of the following letter from the Railway Company's manager,—"Confirming the arrangement made at Bo'ness yesterday, I have pleasure in renewing for another year from 1st ultimo your appointment as agent to this Company for the purposes described in my letter of 29th December 1891 on the same terms and conditions. Please acknowledge receipt."

Stevenson replied on 8th December,—"I am favoured with your letter of yesterday, which is in order."

Thereafter the agreement was acted on for eight years (i.e. until 1900), without formal reappointment. The year was taken to end on 31st October. Payment of the salary (latterly raised from £450 to £550) was made in one sum annually by cheque sent after (usually a considerable time after) the termination of the conventional year, the letters enclosing the cheques bearing that the amount was "in payment of your salary as shipping agent for the Company for the year ending 31st October last." Stevenson simply granted a receipt for the cheques for the earlier years, but his receipts for the years ending 31st October 1899, and 31st October 1900, bore that the amount was "in payment of my salary as shipping agent to the Company." The last payment of £550 as salary was made on 3d December 1900 for the year ending 31st October 1900.

On 2d January 1901 the Railway Company's manager wrote to Stevenson as follows:—"I beg to intimate that we will not require your services as shipping agent for this Company after three months from this date. Kindly acknowledge receipt."

Stevenson replied on 3d January 1901 declining to accept notice of the termination of his agreement with the Company.

On 23d April 1901 the Company's manager wrote to Stevenson enclosing a cheque for £229, 3s. 4d., "being the amount of salary due to you up to 31st ulto., when you ceased to hold the appointment of shipping agent for the Company."

Stevenson kept the cheque but intimated that he could only accept it as partial payment, and in July 1902 the Company having declined to make any further payment, Stevenson raised an action in the Sheriff Court at Glasgow for decree for £320, 16s. 8d., being the balance of £550 alleged by the pursuer to be due to him as his salary for the year ending 31st October 1901.

The pursuer averred;—(Cond. 1) "The defenders entered into negotiations with the pursuer in 1885 regarding the shipment of coal to Hamburg, and suggested to him that the coal should be shipped from ports or docks over which they had control, or into which their lines ran, in preference to sending the coal by a rival railway company." (Cond. 2) "At that time there were no coal vessels plying between Hamburg and any port in Scotland except Grangemouth, and the suggestion was that the pursuer should arrange, in connection with the Hamburg coal trade, for vessels to run between Bo'ness Harbour, which belongs to the defenders, and Hamburg, in order to inaugurate the trading between these ports, and so increase the defenders' traffic. This the pursuer was able to do, being himself an exporter of coal, and on 6th January 1886 the defenders agreed with the pursuer that in consideration of his opening up a new trade from Bo'ness to Hamburg, and shipping at Bo'ness in vessels bound to Hamburg a minimum quantity of 30,000 tons per annum, he was to be paid £250 for every 30,000 tons shipped. This payment was to continue so long as the defenders received the service stipulated for,

No. 189.
July 20, 1905.
Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

the belief being that the pursuer's trade would result in other coal exporters adopting the same trade route, and large benefits thereby accruing to the defenders, and the services so to be rendered by the pursuer being of such a nature that the benefits to the defenders would be permanent." (Cond. 3) "In February 1890 the agreement was extended to Fife, it being then arranged that in the event of the pursuer succeeding in getting a regular service of boats from the defenders' harbours at Methil or Burntisland to Hamburg, he was to be paid an extra sum for every 30,000 tons shipped to Hamburg from these ports in each year." (Cond. 4) "The pursuer's arrangements resulted in a large portion of the Hamburg trade being transferred to Bo'ness, Methil, and Burntisland . . ." (Cond. 5) In 1891 the defenders' manager "suggested, with the object of making the arrangement more regular and legal, that pursuer should be formally appointed a shipping agent, with remuneration based on the average quantity of coal shipped by him from North British ports in past years. It was accordingly arranged about the end of 1891, and formally confirmed on 29th December 1891, that the pursuer should receive the sum of £450 per annum, and some time later this sum was increased to £550 per annum, and has remained at that figure ever since." (Cond. 6) The pursuer on 2d January 1901 "received a notice from the defenders terminating his agreement with them as at 31st March 1901. He declined to accept such notice of termination because the services rendered to the defenders, and for which his remuneration was stipulated, were continuous in their nature and could not be terminated by the pursuer on a few months' notice even if he had made the attempt. To undo the advantages derived by the defenders from the pursuer's intervention would involve the diverting of the traffic not only of himself but also of other traders. . . ." (Cond. 7) ". . . The pursuer's claim for the year's remuneration, due on 31st October 1902, and for remuneration in future years, is reserved."

The pursuer pleaded;—The defenders being due the pursuer the sum sued for, in terms of their agreement with him, decree should be granted as craved.

The defenders referred to the letters of December 1901, and pleaded, inter alia;—(1) The pursuer's averments are irrelevant, and insufficient to support the prayer of the petition. (2) The pursuer's employment by the defenders having been duly terminated at 31st March 1901, the defenders should be assoilzied. (3) The agreement alleged by the pursuer can only be proved by writ.

A proof was allowed and led. The import of the evidence sufficiently appears from the Sheriff-substitute's note and from the opinions of the Court.

On 6th January 1901 the Sheriff-substitute (Mitchell) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds (1) that from about 1888 up to 31st October 1900 pursuer rendered services to defenders in connection with the shipping of coals from one or more ports on the Forth to Hamburg, for which he received from them an annual payment rising from £250 in 1889 to £550 in 1894 and until 1900, said annual payment being latterly for the period ending on 31st October of each year; (2) that from 1st November 1900 till 2d January 1901 he continued to render services of the same character, and was willing to continue said services for a further period, and in particular till 31st October 1901; (3) that on 2d January 1901 pursuer received notice from defenders purporting to dispense with his said services at 31st March 1901; (4) that on 23d April 1901 £229, 3s. 4d. was paid by defenders to pursuer as the proportion of £550 due to him for services between 1st November 1900 and 31st March 1901: Further, finds that the contract as at 2d January 1901 was a yearly one, and that the defenders were not entitled to put an end to it by three months' notice: Finds that defenders are liable to pursuer in the balance of the usual yearly payment of £550: Decerns," &c.*

No. 189.

July 20, 1905.
Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

---

* "NOTE.—The Sheriff-substitute has found this a difficult case. . . .

"The defenders' contention, as he understood, is that the relations of parties are fixed by the terms of the letters of 29th and 30th December 1891, and that these letters, with the renewal of the arrangement for another year, under the letters of 7th and 8th December 1892, made the relations to be, on the expiry of that year, terminable at pleasure on three months' notice as reasonable notice. Pursuer's contention is that the whole history of the relationship, as proved . . . must be looked at, and that in the circumstances he is entitled to maintain the relationship at least till the end of the year current when notice was given, being 31st October 1901, or to be paid damages till then.

"Considering first the terms of these letters, the Sheriff-substitute is unable to hold that they can be safely interpreted without reference to what preceded and to what followed. The term 'agent' is of vague import; the 'services' to be rendered are not fully defined; and while 'salary' is spoken of in one paragraph, the other indicates prima facie another species of employment. The nature of the service or employment must be thoroughly inquired into. The proof shews an element of confidentiality which demonstrates the need of this inquiry.

"The proof and productions, when carefully examined, seem to the Sheriff-substitute to shew that the work or employment originally undertaken by pursuer for defenders was the opening up, with co-operation on the part of the Railway Company, of a new trade, first from Bo'ness to Hamburg, and later from Fife to Hamburg, with payment by way of a specific sum on so many thousand tons shipped, the arrangement being expressed in letters of 6th January 1886, 27th December 1887, and 19th February 1891. The period of the Bo'ness arrangement was a definite one, three years, but it was being continued at 29th December 1891, and the Fife arrangement was also for 'three years from the first sailing,' but it appears to have been incorporated in the arrangement of 29th December 1891. . . . The agency or service itself after 1891 seems to have covered practically as before only pursuer's own traffic, he being by trade a coal exporter, and neither securing import trade nor inducing others to compete with himself in this export coal trade, nor in fact being expected to do either. After February 1893 defenders call pursuer shipping agent, but he never himself recognises this name till February 1900. Further, the arrangement of 1891, according to a fair reading of the letter of 29th December, seems to contemplate the probability of its extension or renewal. . . .

"The arrangement was renewed 'for another year' on 7th and 8th December 1892, on the same terms and conditions. It had technically terminated on 31st October 1892, but was carried continuously on. After 31st October 1893, when the second year's employment ran out, the relations of parties continued as they had been, without any written renewal of agreement, for eight successive years, that is, until the notice given in defenders' letter of 2d January 1901. . . . Each year a statement of the extent of the traffic (i.e., tons shipped) was sent, or asked for and sent, and payment was expressly given and received, as for each past year, up to each 31st October. . . .

"Besides the correspondence, the parole evidence on the whole supports

No. 189.

July 20, 1905. Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

The defenders appealed, and argued;—The pursuer was either a salaried official who could be dismissed on reasonable notice, or he was an agent whose contract of agency could be terminated at any time without notice. If the pursuer was entitled to notice, three months' notice was reasonable notice.[1] But the pursuer was not entitled to notice. He had been engaged for one year; that engagement had been renewed for a second year; and since then there had not been renewal of the yearly engagement. Where there was an engagement for a definite period that meant an engagement for that period and no longer; thereafter the employment was terminable on either side without notice; there was no room for tacit relocation;[2] especially where, as here, the employment was only incidental to the employee's main business.[3] The pursuer was an agent, not a servant of the defenders, and an agency could be terminated at any time the view above given of the relations of parties, and of the continuous character of the relationship. . .

---

"The correspondence, and the pursuer's evidence, uncontradicted by defenders and supported by the probabilities of the case, shew, further, actings and obligations in Hamburg on the part of the pursuer incidental to this trade, viz.:—That at first, at least, he paid commissions or made allowances there, and that he made arrangements for sales for a year ahead. The difficulty of diverting the traffic, so far as established, to a rival Scottish railway is clearly stated by pursuer, and his statements seem probable, and it is admitted for defenders. That other traders followed his line of business seems also very probable. . . .

"What then, in such circumstances, was the position on 2d January 1901, with regard to the duration of the contract? The Sheriff-substitute holds that pursuer had right, by way of tacit relocation, to a year's tenure (as from 1st November 1900), or, in any event, that three months' notice was not sufficient.

"The Sheriff-substitute thinks that in a large sense the relationship between defenders and pursuer may be regarded as that of master and servant, his service partaking also of the character of agent for a principal, with elements in it also of perhaps joint adventure. The defenders call him 'agent' and 'shipping agent,' but they pay him a 'salary,' and introduce him as 'one of our shipping agents, and a salaried official of our Company,' action which at least seems to bar them from denying any legal results of proper service. Pursuer's employment was a special work . . . his employment was solely in the Company's interest and his own as a coal exporter. As between these parties the relationship, though special, was a simple one, arising naturally out of circumstances. Defenders did not, in fact, direct pursuer in his work for them, when he did it, as usually, to their satisfaction, but they watched results, and once, at least, asked for explanations.

"Whether the employment or service of pursuer was most largely as a servant or as an agent, there was in it, the Sheriff-substitute thinks, an element of continuance, or the contemplation of renewal from year to year for an indefinite time. It may be difficult to say when the original opening up of the trade ceased to weigh with the parties, or would have ceased to weigh had Mr Walker [at one time the defenders' manager] lived

---

[1] Morrison v. Abernethy School Board, July 3, 1876, 3 R. 945; Forsyth v. Heathery Knowe Coal Co., June 9, 1880, 7 R. 887; Mollison v. Baillie, Jan. 10, 1885, 22 S. L. R. 595.

[2] Lennox v. Allan & Son, Oct. 26, 1880, 8 R. 38.

[3] Brenan v. Campbell's Trustees, Jan. 14, 1898, 25 R. 423.

No. 189.

July 20, 1905.
Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

without notice.[1] The cases of Dowling[2] and Houston[3] referred to by the Sheriff-substitute were special.

The pursuer supported the interlocutor on the grounds stated by the Sheriff-substitute.[4]

At advising,—

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I agree with the Sheriff-substitute in thinking that this is a case of a rather difficult character, but giving it the best consideration I have been able to apply to it, I am of opinion that the judgment of the Sheriff-substitute is right and ought to be adhered to.

There can be no doubt that the arrangement under which the pursuer was employed by the North British Railway was of a somewhat complex character, the purpose of the Company being to secure that certain coal traffic should pass over its own line and not that of a rival company. It longer; but we may take it that after 29th December 1891 opening became rather extension or expansion, represented in tonnage and recognisable by a larger payment. . . . From that time the main consideration of parties seems to have been the current actual service in traffic (in coals), and it suited both parties to look at it, and they did look at it, from the annual point of view. Year by year things went on as before; and thus each year the annual character of the engagement was established more firmly. . . . In this particular employment it would be difficult at an early stage, and perhaps not less but more difficult as time passed, for the pursuer, if called upon, to drop this exclusive service, alter his arrangements with third parties, and create a like monopolist trade elsewhere. As was well argued for him, it would take a full year for one party to see whether the traffic was to be kept up, and for the other to make different connections.

---

"In the whole circumstances, the Sheriff-substitute thinks the employment (whatever it may be best called) in 1901, as probably at 1892 and 1893, was not of a temporary character and during pleasure, but in its nature continuous—at least from year to year—and that it was subject, under the principle of tacit relocation, when another year (1901) had begun to run, to renewal during that year. No larger question is raised in this record . . .

"The case of Brenan v. Campbell's Trustees, 1898, 25 R. 423, was founded on for defenders, to shew that tacit relocation is not applicable here, because (1) of the absence of the relation of master and servant, and (2) of the limited term and nature of the employment. The Sheriff-substitute, agreeing with the agent for the pursuer, besides and beyond the argument from personal bar, thinks, on grounds suggested above, that the cases essentially differ in both respects—the tie between the parties—and the absence here of the peculiar conditions, affecting also the matter of a precise period or continuity, which were present in Brenan. He would refer to Dowling v. Henderson & Son, 1890, 17 R. 921, first, for the application of the doctrine of tacit relocation in circumstances resembling the present in certain respects, treated as a case of principal and agent, and next for the significance of the employer's knowledge of his employee's claim, and for

---

[1] London, Leith, Edinburgh, and Glasgow Shipping Co. v. Ferguson, Nov. 13, 1850, 13 D. 51, 23 Scot. Jur. 4.

[2] Dowling v. Henderson & Son, June 11, 1890, 17 R. 921.

[3] Houston v. Calico Printers Association, Limited, Jan. 8, 1903, 10 S. L. T. 532.

[4] Neilson v. Mossend Iron Co., March 4, 1886, 13 R. (H. L.) 50.

No. 189.

July 20, 1905. Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

involved this, as I read the evidence, that the pursuer had to make arrangements, not for the moment, but for a long period ahead, as the contracts he entered into had to cover a period a long way in advance of the time for the transit and shipment of the coal.

The difference between the parties is that the pursuer maintains that if the defenders desired to bring the contract to an end he was entitled at least to his agreed-on payment up to the end of the year current. The Company on the other hand maintain that the engagement was terminable whenever they chose, only three months' notice or three months' payment in lieu of notice being given.

The Sheriff-substitute is, I think, right in holding that in the special circumstances of the case it cannot be decided by looking at the two letters of 7th and 8th December 1892 alone, for these letters do not in any distinct manner define the position. The proof is useful as shewing what was the character of work which the pursuer did for the Company from the time he first came into relations with them in 1886. There had been a three years' arrangement at first both as regarded Bo'ness and Fife, but it was carried on for some years, and was in operation till 1891, when a "salary" arrangement was made, the basis of which was the expected traffic, and might therefore be varied according to circumstances. It was to be for "one year certain" as expressed, and in view of a further engagement. It was thereafter renewed, and thereafter tacitly continued for many years.

There can be no doubt on the evidence that the pursuer made arrangements a year ahead, and it is not easy to see how, looking to the competition which existed, he could have been successful in bringing on to the defenders' line the traffic which he did, without such arrangements being made in advance. Indeed, this is conceded by Mr Jackson, the defenders' manager.

In doing what he did the pursuer was held out in introductions as being a "salaried official of the Company," thus plainly treating him as in their service in the work he was doing, although it might also have the character of an agency. I do not attach much importance to the fact that the expression "agent" is used in the correspondence. It is so done in express relation and juxtaposition to a statement that the pursuer is rendering "services," and as it is expressed in the letter of 29th December 1891 "additional value of services" is a matter to be taken into account in fixing the Lord Ordinary's view about a yearly contract; also to Lord Low in Houston v. The Calico Printers Association, Limited, 1903, 10 S. L. T. 532. . . .

---

"Even should the doctrine of tacit relocation be held inapplicable to this case, the Sheriff-substitute is inclined to think that, in view of the element of continuity implied in the fostering of a new trade, pursuer's arrangements with third parties, his own thirlage so far to defenders' interest (no doubt for advantage only to himself), the difficulty of finding a sphere for similar enterprise elsewhere, and the length of time during which the arrangement had been acted on, three months' notice was not sufficient. . . . Defenders did not offer more than three months, and it seems difficult to draw the line within the year. . . ."

No. 189.

July 20, 1905.
Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

any salary which may be attached to a further engagement. I may also notice in passing that the name "agent" is quite familiar in railway nomenclature as referring to one who is a servant of the Company, e.g., the person in charge of a station is called "station agent," and is so announced to the public by placard at the station. There was in this case definite reference to continued engagement. The consideration of the arrangement was made from time to time on a footing referable only to work carried on from year to year, and it was undoubtedly a business of such a nature that the breaking of it off during the currency of a year might be very injurious to the pursuer. Indeed, it is difficult to see how any such business could be taken up by a prudent man if it might be abruptly closed at any time.

The question seems to be whether, as it is expressed in the case of Houston v. The Calico Printers Association,[1] there "was an intention to make him a yearly servant, and that neither party contemplated that the service or the conditions of it should terminate" without the pursuer having a claim as under a yearly contract.

On the whole matter I agree with the findings of the Sheriff-substitute and the grounds he has given for them, and would move your Lordships to affirm his judgment.

LORD KINCAIRNEY concurred.

LORD STORMONTH-DARLING.—When a contract of service or quasi-service, originally for a definite period, has been continued from year to year, and then has been terminated on three months' notice, it is always a question of circumstances, depending on the nature of the service and the conduct of parties, whether tacit relocation has taken place. I know of no rule of law which affords a certain guide to the solution of such a question, and prior cases are only useful where they correspond very closely in their circumstances with the case in hand.

The written contract between the pursuer and defenders took formal shape in December 1891, when a letter was addressed to the pursuer by Mr Conacher, the defenders' then manager, appointing him agent for the Company as from 1st November of that year, for the purpose of attending to the Company's interests in connection with their shipping trade to Hamburg, at Bo'ness, Burntisland, and Methil, at a salary of £450 per annum for one year certain. Some prospect of an increase of salary at the end of the year was held out in the letter if the value of his services should be such as to justify it. The letter was acknowledged by the pursuer, who declared it to be in order. He was some months later described in a circular letter of introduction granted by the Company as "one of our shipping agents and a salaried official of our Company." The appointment was renewed for another year as from 1st November 1892, "on the same terms and conditions," and this letter was also declared by the pursuer to be in order. The salary of £450 was raised to £550 for the year to 31st October 1893; and at this rate it continued down to 31st October 1900, without formal reappointment and without any change being made in the terms and conditions of the service, though there were attempts by the pursuer in 1894 and again in 1899 to have these modified in his own favour. Payment of salary was usually made in one sum some months after the expiry of the year for which it was due. On 2d January 1901 the defenders intimated that they would not require the pursuer's services as their shipping agent after three months from that date. This notice the pursuer declined to accept, and sometime thereafter he raised this action for £320, 16s. 8d., being the balance of his salary from 31st March 1901 (the date down to which he had in the meantime been paid) to 31st October 1901.

[1] 10 S. L. T. 532.

No. 189.

July 20, 1905. Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

The nature of the services rendered is not very well defined, and perhaps is not capable of exact definition. They apparently consisted in the pursuer (who was himself a large exporter of coal) giving his assistance in getting Scotch coal for Hamburg shipped at ports in which the defenders were interested. This system began so far back as 1886, and at first the payments, which were calculated on the amount of shipments, were described as a "bonus." But after a few years it seems to have occurred to the railway officials that it would be more regular to appoint the pursuer one of the Company's shipping agents, though the nature of the services did not suffer any change. The pursuer in his evidence complains of his having been appointed a shipping agent, and put as he calls it "on the pay-sheet." He protests that he was not a servant of the Company, and had no communication with them beyond once a year getting his cheque for the "bonus or commission" on the annual traffic. But he accepted the appointment of shipping agent, and regularly granted receipts in which the payment was described as "salary" in that capacity. The curious result is that the pursuer, whose interest it is to make out the contract was one of service and not terminable till the expiry of a year, loudly protests that he was not a servant, while the defenders, whose interest is the opposite, have declared by every writing under their hand that he was. In this state of matters I think it is safest to rely on the written documents, and certainly the defenders cannot complain of being taken at their word.

Dealing then with the case on the footing that the pursuer was a "salaried official" of the defenders, the question comes to be whether his employment was in each year after 31st October 1892 renewed by tacit relocation for the full period of one year, or was terminable at any time on three months' notice. I agree with the Sheriff-substitute that the former is the true view of the relations between the parties. The length of time during which the engagement has lasted, the fact that the salary was paid in a lump annual sum only after returns of shipments for the year had been made, and especially the circumstance (spoken to by the pursuer and not traversed by the defenders) that in the Hamburg trade "contracts must be fixed before the 1st of January," and that when the defenders gave their notice on 2d January 1901 "they had already secured the business for a year," all point, I think very clearly, to the conclusion that when the 31st October 1900 passed without the defenders making any sign of terminating the contract, the pursuer was entitled to rely on its being renewed for another year. I therefore think that the Sheriff-substitute's conclusion is right and ought to be affirmed.

LORD KYLLACHY not having been present at the hearing, did not deliver an opinion. No. 189. July 20, 1905. Stevenson v. North British Railway Co.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal and affirmed the interlocutor appealed against.

DOVE, LOCKHART, & SMART, S.S.C.—JAMES WATSON, S.S.C.—Agents.

MRS MARY G. C. NISBET HAMILTON OGILVY, Complainer (Reclaimer). No. 190.
—C. N. Johnston, K.C.—J. Duncan Miller.
WALTER ELLIOT, Respondent.—Rankine, K.C.—M'Lennan. July 20, 1905.* Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

Lease—Improvements—Compensation—Arbitration—Statutory Arbitration—Agreement in Writing—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. 50), Second Schedule, Part II., secs. 1 and 4.—Held (rev. the judgment of Lord Kincairney) that a clause in an agricultural lease referring to two arbiters certain questions of compensation under the lease applied only to claims under the lease, and was not an agreement in writing in the sense of sec. 1 of the Second Schedule, Part II., of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, authorising the Board of Agriculture to appoint, under sec. 4 of the same Part, an arbiter to act along with another arbiter appointed by one of the parties to the lease, in pursuance of an arbitration under the Act.

Lease—Improvements—Compensation—Arbitration—Statutory Arbitration—Provision for arbitration in lease—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. 50), sec. 2.—An agricultural lease gave the tenant right on the termination of the lease to compensation for manure and feeding stuffs purchased by the tenant and applied to the lands, the amount of compensation to be determined by arbitration in the manner and according to the rules set forth in the lease.

On the termination of the lease the tenant lodged a claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, in which he claimed, inter alia, compensation for manure and feeding stuffs.

Held by Lord Kincairney (Ordinary), and opinion per Lord Trayner, that in so far as the claim was for compensation for manure and feeding stuffs, arbitration under the Agricultural Holdings Act was excluded in respect that such compensation fell to be determined by arbitration under the lease.

Lease—Improvements—Compensation—Statute—Retrospective Effect—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. 50), First Schedule, Part III.—The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, gives tenants right to compensation, inter alia, for "laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy."

Held by Lord Kincairney (Ordinary) that a tenant whose tenancy terminated less than two years after the date of the Act was entitled to compensation under this enactment.

Lease—Improvements—Compensation—Notice—Dispensation with notice—Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. cap. 62), sec. 4.—The Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883, enacts that compensation for improvement in drainage shall not be payable "unless the tenant has not more than three months and not less than two months before beginning to execute such improvement given to the landlord or his duly authorised agent, notice in writing of his intention so to do, and of the manner in which he proposes to do the intended work. . . . The landlord and tenant may, if they think fit, dispense with any notice under

* Decided Nov. 3, 1904.

No. 190.
July 20, 1905.
Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

this section, and come to an agreement in terms of the lease or otherwise between themselves in the same manner and of the same validity as if such notice had been given."

Held by Lord Kincairney (Ordinary) that an agreement to dispense with notice need not be in writing.

2D DIVISION. Lord Kincairney.

BY lease, dated July 1892, Walter Elliot became the tenant of the farm of Pitcox, belonging to Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy of Belhaven and Dirleton, for the period of nineteen years from Martinmas 1892.

The lease contained, inter alia, this provision:—"And with respect to such manure and feeding stuffs as are not produced on the lands and others hereby let, but purchased by the tenant and applied thereto and consumed thereon, the tenant shall, on leaving the farm at the termination of his tenancy, receive compensation for the same from the proprietor or incoming tenant, in terms of the Schedule annexed and signed as relative hereto,* the amount of such compensation, failing agreement, to be ascertained by arbitration in manner before mentioned: And it is stipulated and agreed, with reference to Part 3 of the Schedule annexed to the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883, that the compensation for unexhausted manures and feeding stuffs before mentioned and specified in the said Schedule hereto annexed (which is agreed on as fair and reasonable compensation, having regard to existing circumstances) shall be and is accepted by the tenant as full compensation in lieu and place of the compensation that would, but for these presents, be claimable by him in

---

SCHEDULE REFERRED TO IN THE LEASE.

"1. Lime applied to land.

"Eight-tenths of cost after first crop has been taken, five-tenths after second crop, three-tenths after third crop, and one-tenth after fourth crop.

"2. Crushed bones, bone dust, police manure, and other manures of equivalent value.

"One-half of cost where one crop has been taken, and one-fourth where two crops have been taken.

"3. Dissolved bones, bone phosphate and guano.

"One-fourth after one crop has been taken.

"4. Feeding stuffs.

"For linseed, cotton cakes, or other substances of equal manurial value, which have been consumed on the farm by cattle or sheep during the last year of the lease, one-third of the value shall be paid, provided the quantity shall not exceed the average of the preceding three years.

Notes.

"(1) Vouchers in all cases to be produced, and also an analysis by a competent analytical chemist if it can be procured by the tenant.

"(2) In case of arbitration the arbiters to be entitled in fixing the compensation to make such deductions as they may think fit if in their opinion the manurial value of the substances has been reduced through the tenant's fault or negligence, or if through his fault or negligence the land is in such a state of cultivation as to prevent the substances having their proper beneficial effect on the soil.

"(3) No allowance to be made to the tenant for the cartage of lime, manure, or feeding stuffs, or for the cost of applying the manure to the land.

"(4) No compensation will be allowed for nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia, or other such stimulating manures, these being held to be exhausted in the year they are applied."

respect of all or any of the improvements specified in Part third of the Schedule annexed to the said Agricultural Holdings Act." *

No. 190.

July 20, 1905.

Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

* The Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. cap. 62), enacts:—

Sec. 4. "Compensation under this Act shall not be payable in respect of any improvement specified in the second part of the schedule hereto, and executed after the commencement of this Act, unless the tenant has not more than three months and not less than two months before beginning to execute such improvement, given to the landlord, or his duly authorised agent, notice in writing of his intention so to do, and of the manner in which he proposes to do the intended work . . .

"The landlord and tenant may, if they think fit, dispense with any notice under this section, and come to an agreement in terms of the lease or otherwise between themselves in the same manner and of the same validity as if such notice had been given."

The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900 (63 and 64 Vict. cap. 50), enacts:—

Sec. 2, inter alia, "(1) If a tenant claims to be entitled to compensation, whether under the principal Act or this Act, or under custom, agreement, or otherwise, in respect of any improvement comprised in the First Schedule to this Act, and if the landlord and tenant fail to agree as to the amount and time and mode of payment of such compensation, the difference shall be settled by arbitration in accordance with the provisions, if any, in that behalf in any agreement between landlord and tenant, and in default of and subject to any such provisions, by arbitration under this Act in accordance with the provisions set out in the Second Schedule to this Act."

"(3) Where any claim by a tenant for compensation in respect of any improvement comprised in the First Schedule to this Act is referred to arbitration, and any sum is claimed to be due to the tenant from the landlord in respect of any breach of contract or otherwise in respect of the holding, or to the landlord from the tenant in respect of any waste wrongfully committed or permitted by the tenant, or in respect of breach of contract or otherwise in respect of the holding, the party claiming such sum may, if he thinks fit, by written notice to the other party given by registered letter or otherwise not later than seven days after the appointment of the arbiter or arbiters, require that the arbitration shall extend to the determination of the further claim, and thereupon the provisions of this section with respect to arbitration shall apply accordingly, and any sum awarded to be paid by a landlord or tenant shall be recoverable in manner provided by the principal Act for the recovery of compensation."

"(5) An arbitration shall, unless the parties otherwise agree, be before a single arbiter."

The First Schedule to the Act of 1900 was divided into three Parts, Part I. giving a list of "Improvements to which the consent of the landlord is required"; Part II. of "Improvements in respect of which notice to landlord is required"; Part III. of "Improvements in respect of which consent of or notice to landlord is not required."

The Schedule to the Act of 1883 was arranged on a similar principle, but the number of improvements in Parts I. and III. was considerably smaller.

The only improvement in Part II. of both Acts was "Drainage."

Part III. of the Act of 1900 included—

"26. Laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy."

There was no corresponding improvement in Part III. of the Act of 1883.

No. 190.
July 20, 1905.
Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

The "arbitration in manner before mentioned" was defined in a clause which provided that the amount of surface damages due by the landlord to the tenant on account of underground workings should be ascertained "by two arbiters, one to be chosen by each party, or by an oversman to be named by the arbiters before entering on the reference, in case of their differing in opinion."

The lease came to an end by mutual consent at Martinmas 1902.

In November 1902 Mr Elliot sent the following notice of claim under the Agricultural Holdings Acts to Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy:—

"Madam,—In terms of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Acts, 1883 to 1900, I hereby give you notice that it is my intention to claim on quitting my holding of Pitcox at Martinmas next the sum of £1317 or thereby as compensation for unexhausted improvements, viz.:—(First) £240, being the ⅛ value of feeding stuffs not produced on the said holding consumed thereon by cattle, sheep, &c., during the last year of my tenancy; (2nd) £12 or thereby, being the amount which represents the value to an incoming tenant of the improvement made by me on the said holding by the application of lime; (3rd) £150, being the amount which represents the value to an incoming tenant of the improvement made by me on the said holding by the application of purchased artificial or other purchased manures; (4th) £315 or thereby, being the amount which represents the value to an incoming tenant of the improvement made by me on the said holding by laying down temporary pasture; and (5th) £600, being the amount which represents the value to an incoming tenant of improvements effected by me on the said holding during my lease, over and above the values claimed for above, by the extensive and continuous consumption of feeding stuffs and application of manures, by my having limed the greater part of said holding, by the erection by me of walls at the cattle courts and stackyard, by the cementing of floor in cart shed, and by expenditure in approved drainage, all during my lease, and by generally increasing the crop and stock bearing capacity of the holding.—I am," &c.

Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy and Mr Elliot having failed to come to an agreement as to the matters set forth in the claim, Mr Elliot applied to the Board of Agriculture to appoint an arbiter.

The Board of Agriculture were of opinion that looking to the clause in the lease relative to arbitration two arbiters fell to be appointed.

Mr Elliot accordingly appointed John Wilson, Edinburgh, as one arbiter, and called on Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy to appoint another.

---

The Second Schedule to the Act of 1900 contained "Rules as to Arbitration."

Part I., "Arbitration before a single Arbiter," contained, inter alia, the following:—

"(1) A person agreed upon between the parties, or, in default of agreement, nominated by the Board of Agriculture on the application in writing of either of the parties, shall be appointed arbiter."

Part II., "Arbitration before two Arbiters or an oversman," contained, inter alia, the following:—

"1. If the parties agree in writing that there be not a single arbiter, each of them shall appoint an arbiter.

"4. If for fourteen days after notice by one party to the other to appoint an arbiter, or another arbiter, the other party fails to do so, then, on the application of the party giving notice, the Board of Agriculture shall appoint a person to be an arbiter."

No. 190.

July 20, 1905.

Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

She declined to do so, and the Board of Agriculture, on the application of Mr Elliot, appointed Mr James I. Davidson, Edinburgh, to be the other arbiter.

Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy then presented this note of suspension and interdict against Mr Elliot, the two arbiters, and the Lord Advocate as representing the Board of Agriculture, praying the Court to interdict and prohibit all proceedings in the arbitration.

Mr Elliot lodged defences, and the Lord Ordinary (Pearson) having passed the note and granted interim interdict, a record was made up.

Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy's objections to the arbitration were in substance the following:—(1) That the arbitration was disconform to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, in respect that two arbiters had been appointed and not one; (2) that Mr Elliot's claim to compensation was barred or excluded as regarded its first, second, and third heads, by the lease and the clause of arbitration in the lease; and (3) that the fourth and fifth heads of the claim were incompetent and unfounded.

The contentions of the parties under each of these heads fully appear from the opinion of the Lord Ordinary (Kincairney).

With respect to the claim to compensation for drainage under the fifth head of the claim, the parties made the following averments:—

Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy averred:—"With reference to the drainage operations, the complainer never agreed to dispense with the notice required by section 4 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, nor was any such notice given by the said respondent in terms of the statute. The said respondent is called upon to produce the agreement founded upon dispensing with said notice."

Mr Elliot answered:—"With reference to the claim for expenditure on drainage it is explained that shortly after entry to the farm the respondent found that the drainage of certain of the fields on said farm was defective, and that the levels of the drains required to be altered, and a new outlet for the drainage obtained. He consulted the complainer's factor regarding these matters, and was authorised by the said factor to improve the said drainage system. He performed all the work in connection with the said improvement, the complainer supplying and paying for the drain pipes used therein. The complainer, through her said factor, came to an agreement with the respondent to dispense with the notice required by section 4 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, with reference to said drainage, and in respect of said agreement the respondent's claim for compensation in terms of Part II. of the schedule to said Act of 1900 is of the same validity as if formal notice had been given."

On 2d March 1904 the Lord Ordinary (Kincairney) pronounced this interlocutor:—"Finds (1) that the first, second, and third heads of the notice of claim by the respondent, No. 7 of process, are included in the clause of reference in the lease between the complainer and respondent and the schedule annexed thereto; (2) that claims for the improvements embraced in the said heads fall to be determined under the lease and clause of reference therein; (3) that heads four and five of the claim do not fall under the lease; (4) that head four and the claim for improvement by drainage embody competent claims under the statute: Finds it unnecessary to dispose otherwise of the other claims in head five of the notice of claim: Quoad ultra continues the cause." *

* "NOTE.— . . . The complainer has stated a great number and

No. 190.

July 20, 1905. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

On 27th May 1904 the Lord Ordinary pronounced this further interlocutor:—"Having heard counsel for the parties on the application of the findings contained in interlocutor of 2d March last, interdicts, prohibits, and discharges the respondent Walter Elliot junior from insisting in or prosecuting and following further items and particulars 1, 2, and 3 of claim by said respondent, No. 7 of process, and set forth in the prayer of the note; and also interdicts, prohibits, and discharges the respondents, John Wilson and James I. Davidson, as arbiters mentioned in said note, from entertaining or dealing with or awarding any sum in respect of said items 1, 2, and 3 of said claim: Refuses the prayer of the note so far as regards items 4 and 5 of said claim, and recalls the interim interdict granted by interlocutor of 18th July 1903 with reference thereto: Finds no expenses due to or by either party, and decerns."

Mrs Hamilton Ogilvy reclaimed.[1]

---

variety of pleas, but I think they resolve mainly into these propositions,—(1) That this arbitration is disconform to the Agricultural Holdings Act because two arbiters have been appointed and not one; (2) that the claim is barred or at least excluded as regards the first, second, and third heads of it by the lease and the clause of arbitration for determination of the amount of the tenant's compensation contained in the lease; (3) that the fourth and fifth heads of the claim are incompetent and unfounded; and (4) that the claim is invalid in respect it is not sufficiently specific. This contention I understand to apply chiefly to the fifth head.

"1. The objection that the reference is incompetent because two arbiters have been nominated by the Board of Agriculture rests on subsection 5 of section 2, which provides, 'An arbitration shall, unless the parties otherwise agree, be before a single arbiter.' Article 1 of Part II. of Schedule II. provides that 'if the parties agree in writing that there be not a single arbiter, each of them shall appoint an arbiter'; and Article 4 provides that if after due notice one party fails to nominate an arbitrator that shall be done by the Board of Agriculture.

"The question whether, in the circumstances stated, the Board had power to appoint two arbiters is a question relating to the constitution of the tribunal for the determination of these differences between landlord and tenant. It depends on the construction of the statute, and it is clear that it must be determined by the Court now, and cannot be left to the decision of the arbiters nominated—Sinclair v. Clyne's Trustee, Dec. 7, 1887, 15 R. 185.

"In this case the Board of Agriculture seems to have taken the view that the provision in the lease for an arbitration before two arbiters was equivalent to the written agreement of the parties that there should not be a single arbitrator. I agree in that view, and I repel the complainer's plea against the competency of the arbitration on that ground; and I think there is no relevant objection to the constitution of the tribunal.

"2. The complainer's second and most important contention is based on the lease. The lease was for nineteen years from Martinmas 1892, but came to an end by mutual consent at Martinmas 1902. It is provided by the

---

[1] Cited at the hearing:—Caledonian Railway Co. v. Morrison, June 10, 1898, 25 R. 1001; Sinclair v. Clyne's Trustee, Dec. 17, 1887, 15 R. 185; Mull District Committee v. Local Government Board, Feb. 28, 1902, 9 S. L. T. 484; Hunter v. Barron's Trustees, May 13, 1886, 13 R. 883; Callender v.Smith, July 7, 1900, 2 F. 1140, aff. May 9, 1901, 3 F. (H. L.) 28; Glasgow, Yoker, and Clydebank Railway Co. v. Lidgerwood, Nov. 27, 1895, 23 R. 195; Bennets v. Bennet, Jan. 31, 1903, 5 F. 376.

At advising,— No. 190.

July 20, 1905. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

LORD TRAYNER.—The object of this note is to have the respondents interdicted from proceeding with an arbitration instituted for the purpose of determining the right of the respondent, Walter Elliot, to receive compensation from the complainer for various improvements made by him on a farm belonging to the complainer of which he was recently the tenant. The claim presented by the respondent is before us, and bears to be one under the Agricultural Holdings Acts, 1883 to 1900. It consists of five separate heads. The Lord Ordinary has held that with regard to the first three there can be no procedure before the statutory tribunal, because the parties have under the lease provided already for arbitration upon the matters comprised under these heads. I am of opinion that the Lord Ordinary is lease that the tenant on leaving the farm shall receive compensation in terms of the schedule annexed to the lease, and that the amount of such compensation, failing agreement, shall be ascertained by arbitration in the manner provided by the lease, that is by two arbiters and an oversman appointed in the usual manner.

---

"The lease proceeds thus:—'And it is stipulated and agreed with reference to Part III. of the Schedule annexed to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, that the compensation for unexhausted manures and feeding stuffs before mentioned and specified in the said schedule hereto annexed, which is agreed as fair and reasonable compensation having regard to existing circumstances, shall be and is accepted by the tenant as full compensation in lieu and in place of the compensation that, but for these presents, would be claimable by him in respect of all or any of the improvements specified in Part III. of the Schedule annexed to the said Agricultural Holdings Act.' . . .

"The schedule annexed to the lease here referred to . . . includes compensation for (1) lime; (2) crushed bones and similar manure; (3) dissolved bones, bone phosphate and guano; (4) feeding stuffs; and it specifies the proportions of the values of each of these subjects to be allowed to the tenant. It is framed in a totally different manner from the claim.

"I think that parties were practically agreed that the first, second, and third heads of the tenant's claim are substantially covered by the items of compensation specially mentioned in the schedule attached to the lease; that the improvements claimed for in these heads of the claim are those embodied in the schedule annexed to the lease, although there is a material difference in the mode in which these improvements are valued; but that the claim for temporary pasture under head four is new, and is not included in the schedule in the lease, and that the greater part of the miscellaneous claims in article five was not included in the schedule in the lease, and that these claims cannot to that extent be barred by the lease.

"Assuming these points as undisputed, the first question appears to be whether the statutory arbitration is excluded in whole or in part by the clause of reference in the lease. That is a general and important question, although not of much practical consequence in this case, but no authority was cited which gives much or any assistance in solving it. I think it depends on subsection 1 of section 2 of the Act of 1900. . . . I think that the provision in the subsection comes to this,—that in the event of landlord and tenant failing to agree as to compensation at the end of the lease the differences between them shall be settled by arbitration in accordance with the clause of reference in the lease, if there be one, and if there be no clause of reference in the lease, then, and then only, by arbitration under the Act. I think that if the claim under the Act and the claim allowed by the lease were identical, it would be difficult to hold that it was right. The parties having agreed to leave the determination of their rights and liabilities under the lease to a particular tribunal, that tribunal must, in my opinion, be left to deal with them.

No. 190.

July 20, 1905.
Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

The more important question in the case, however, is whether the tribunal, consisting of two arbiters nominated—one of them by the respondent Elliot and the other by the Board of Agriculture—for dealing with the points involved under heads four and five of the claim, is a competent one. On the one hand it is said that in the circumstances here disclosed the Board of Agriculture had no power to nominate any other than a single arbiter, on the other that in nominating one arbiter to act along with the arbiter nominated by the respondent the Board was acting within its powers.

Now, in determining this question, regard must be had to the terms and intended by the statute to provide for a case for which the parties had provided.

---

"But the tenant maintains that his claim is not confined to the first, second, and third heads, but that he has additional claims which are not covered by the lease, namely, the fourth and fifth heads of his claim, and he points out that if he cannot establish these claims under the Act, he must lose them altogether. The complainer maintains that these claims are wholly groundless and not warranted by the Act, and that they cannot be submitted to arbitration.

"Article 4 of the Notice of Claim is thus expressed:—'£315 or thereby, being the amount which represents the value to an incoming tenant of the improvement made by me on the said holding by laying down temporary pasture.' Is this a good claim in the circumstances? There is no such ground of compensation mentioned in the lease, and no compensation was allowed on that score by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. It is a new ground of compensation introduced in Part III. of Schedule I. of the Act of 1900. It is No. 26 of the Schedule, which is thus expressed:—'Laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy.'

"It is very difficult to deal with this new ground for compensation. The statute only says that compensation is to be allowed for laying down temporary pasture. It does not seem to take into account the pasture which would fall to be left by the tenant according to the rotation under the lease, and to the ordinary rules of good husbandry; nor is it indicated whether the amount of compensation would to any extent depend on the length of time during which the land was left in pasture. But if any questions such as these had arisen they would no doubt be proper for determination by the arbiter. But no such points have been raised. The question is whether in the circumstances a state of matters has arisen which admits of this claim at all. The tenant states that the seed was sown in 1895 and 1896, and if that was so, which must at present be assumed, then the condition that the land should lie in pasture for two years before the close of the lease was undoubtedly fulfilled, and the tenant maintains that his right to compensation for temporary pasture is plainly expressed, and that he has stated a relevant claim which must be submitted to arbitration under the statute.

"The complainer reads this 26th Article of the Schedule differently, and I understand the argument on her behalf to be to the effect that a tenant could have no claim for temporary pasture unless the ground had been under pasture for two years after the date of the Act, 1st January 1901, which was in this case impossible, because the time which elapsed from

No. 190.

July 20, 1905.

Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

provisions of the statute. The Act of 1900, section 2, provides that when differences arise between landlord and tenant as to compensation claimed by a tenant under the provisions of the Act (and the fourth and fifth heads of the respondent's claim are of that character) such differences are to be settled by arbitration, and "the arbitration shall, unless the parties otherwise agree, be before a single arbiter." But the Second Schedule, Part II., sec. 1, provides that "if the parties agree in writing that there be not a single arbiter, each of them shall appoint an arbiter." The statute then proceeds to provide (Second Schedule, Part II., 4) that if for fourteen days after notice by one party to the other to appoint an arbiter the other party fails to do so, then, on the application of the party giving notice, the Board of Agriculture shall appoint a person to be arbiter. The respondent having named an arbiter, and the complainer having refused the date of the Act to the close of the lease, Martinmas 1902, was short of two years. It is maintained that to read the words otherwise would give the statute a retroactive effect, seeing that there was no claim for compensation on this ground under the Act of 1883. The contention of the complainer may have much to recommend it, and perhaps it expresses what was really intended, but the language of the 26th Article appears unambiguous; I think I am not entitled to add to it the condition for which the complainer contends, and which is not expressed, and I am not prepared to affirm that it does not warrant the tenant's claim.

---

"It was further objected by the complainer that the claim involved a breach of the rotation under the lease, which was six shift, and therefore a breach of the lease, and that a claim ought not to be allowed which was founded on a breach of the lease. I am not prepared to assent to that argument. I do not think that the deviation from the course of rotation involves what could be designated as a breach of the lease seeing that it was wholly in the landlord's favour, and is treated in the 26th Article of the Schedule as an improvement meriting compensation.

"On the whole I have been unable to see that the respondent's claim under head 4 can be disallowed.

"This point is of great importance, because it involves the conclusion that there must be a statutory arbitration if the tenant insists on it; and if the questions under heads 1, 2, and 3 must be tried under the lease, it might follow that two arbitrations were necessary unless the parties agree otherwise.

"The respondent contends that if there is to be a reference under the Act he is entitled under section 2, subsection 3, to extend the scope of the reference to heads 1, 2, and 3 of the claim, and that by that means the whole questions might be tried under one reference, namely, the statutory reference. This point is involved in very great difficulty, and it is not easy to reconcile the provision in the Act, that questions must be tried under the lease when there is a clause of reference, with this section empowering either party to procure extension of the scope of the reference, and I have been unable to see how the section can apply to a reference which the lease has excluded, nor is it easy to see how the section can be held to extend to heads which are in the claim although they have been disallowed.

"The question remains whether the tenant is entitled to insist that the claims under head 5 be remitted to the statutory arbitration. The claim under that head is for £600, and that sum is demanded as due on various vague, indefinite, and heterogeneous grounds. There is first a claim for compensation for consumption of feeding stuffs, application of manure and lime. These are stated without any specification of place, time, or amount, and seem open to the complainer's 7th plea. It may be, however, that this

No. 190.

July 20, 1905.
Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

or delayed to name another, the Board of Agriculture, on the view that there was a written agreement in the lease to refer to two arbiters, nominated (at the request of the respondent) another arbiter "to act on behalf of the landlord." The question here, therefore, resolves itself into whether there was an agreement in writing within the meaning of section 1, Part II. of the Second Schedule, that the respondent's claim should not be submitted to a single arbiter. The Lord Ordinary (agreeing with the view acted upon by the Board of Agriculture) has held that there was. He is of opinion that the provision in the lease providing for arbitration before two arbiters and an oversman is a written agreement "that there be not a single arbiter." In this opinion I am unable to concur. The provision for arbitration contained in the lease applies only to such claims as may arise under and by virtue of the lease, and has no reference to claims which vagueness and indefiniteness in the claim might be cured if the items were investigated and scrutinised by the arbiters, but my difficulty is in seeing that that part of claim 5 is anything but a repetition of the 1st, 2d, and 3d heads of the claim.

---

"Head 5 includes, besides, claims for compensation for . . . drainage. . . .

"Drainage is an improvement falling under the second part of the Schedule. It is the only improvement in the second part of the Schedule in either Act. To make a proprietor liable for drainage effected by the statutes requires written notice to the proprietor. The 4th section of the Act of 1883 provides that such compensation shall not be payable for drainage executed by the tenant unless he has 'not more than three months and not less than two months before beginning to execute such improvement' (viz., drainage) 'given to the landlord or his duly authorised agent notice in writing of his intention so to do and of the manner in which he proposes to do the intended work.' It is to be observed that the notice here required seems not to be general notice of an intention to improve the system of drainage, but notice of an intention to do a particular piece of drainage work. Here there is no averment at all of written notice, and it is clear that the statutory requirement as to notice has not been satisfied. The knowledge of the proprietrix or her factor of the drainage operations is, indeed, averred, but such knowledge does not satisfy the express provisions of the statutes; although it may possibly be hard that the tenant should suffer by merely neglecting a statutory requirement, which in nine cases out of ten would be quite superfluous, that he should give notice to the proprietrix or her factor of what was going on under their eyes. Still the requirement of the 4th section seems imperative and must be complied with, unless it be dispensed with by the parties. About this part of the tenant's claim it is to be observed that it is perfectly general and vague. The time, place, and extent of the operations are not alluded to. But the tenant has averred that the complainer, through her factor, came to an agreement with the respondent to dispense with the notice required by section 4. When or where or in what form this agreement was made is not said. But it is true that it is provided by section 4 that the landlord and tenant may, if they think fit, dispense with notice under the section, and the question comes to be whether there is a relevant averment that there was such an agreement to dispense with written notice. It is not provided that this agreement to dispense with the requirement of written notice should itself be in writing or should not be susceptible of proof except by writ or oath, and I do not see that I can put these qualifications in the provision in the statute. It is a very odd thing, no doubt, that the statute should require written notice, and then provide that the requirement may

No. 190.

July 20, 1905.
Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

may arise under the Agricultural Holdings Acts. Any claims which might arise under the statute were not provided for, and the mode for determining such claims must be found in the statute itself. That mode is, as I have pointed out, by a single arbiter unless the parties otherwise agree. In reference to claims arising under the statute there was no such agreement either in the lease or elsewhere. The Board of Agriculture erroneously thought that there was and acted accordingly. In nominating an arbiter to act with the arbiter named by the tenant I think they went beyond their powers. They set up a tribunal of two arbiters in circumstances in which the statute required that there should be only one.

We have heard a long argument upon the relevancy and competency of claims 4 and 5. These are questions upon which at present it is unnecessary to say anything, because for the reasons I have stated I am of opinion that the interlocutor reclaimed against should be recalled and interdict granted as craved. When an arbitration tribunal has been competently constituted it will be time enough to consider the relevancy or competency of any claim presented to it by the respondent Elliot.

LORD YOUNG.—I agree. The only matter we are determining now is that be dispensed with. But such is the provision in the statute. The averment is very indefinite, no doubt, but it is quite explicit, and I do not see that it can be treated as wholly irrelevant, and, if it were true, then probably the claim for drainage expenditure must be held competent.

---

"It appears to me that this statutory claim is not excluded by the lease. I have not found anything in the lease about drainage, and, while it is provided by the lease that the compensation under the lease should be in place of all that could be claimed in Part III. of the Schedule in the Act, which does not include drainage, it is not said that it shall be in full of claims under Part II., which are for drainage, and hence I think that the tenant's claim for it, allowed by the statute, is not excluded. He may, it is true, fail in his claim entirely if he does not succeed in proving his averment that the requirement of written notice in section 4 was dispensed with.

"The case, therefore, seems to stand thus—Claims 1, 2, and 3 cannot be allowed except of consent, and to make good his claims on these heads the tenant must proceed under the arbitration clause in the lease. I think, though with hesitation, that head 4 and the claim for drainage are, as they stand, relevant claims and must be admitted. I am not prepared to disallow these claims. I think that as regards them the statutory reference must be allowed to proceed. Had I not come to the conclusion that a statutory arbitration could not be avoided, I would have proceeded to consider whether the claims for buildings, manures, and feeding stuffs under head 5 could be admitted. But as there must, according to my view, be a statutory arbitration, including head 4 of the agreement and head 5 so far as it contains a claim for drainage, I think that consideration of the other parts of head 5 may be deferred and left to be dealt with in the arbitration. On this point I refer to Glasgow, Yoker, and Clydebank Railway Co. v. Lidgerwood, 27th November 1895, 23 R. 195; Caledonian Railway Co. v. Morrison, 10th June 1898, 25 R. 1001; and Bennets v. Bennet, 31st January 1903, 5 F. 376, where that course was adopted. It would follow, no doubt, from the views I have expressed, that the findings in my interlocutor should be followed by an interdict against prosecuting heads 1, 2, and 3 of the claim, but I have thought it as well to allow the case to lie over for a few days in order to see whether further proceedings might be avoided before pronouncing interdict."

No. 190.
July 20, 1905.
Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot.

the Board of Agriculture fell into error in appointing a second arbiter. We decide nothing else.

LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—I concur.

LORD MONCREIFF was absent.

THE COURT recalled the judgment reclaimed against and granted interdict as craved.

JACK & BRYSON, S.S.C.—DALGLEISH & DOBBIE, W.S.—Agents.

INDEX OF MATTERS

IN

VOLUME VII.

Cases decided in the House of Lords are printed in Italics.

ACQUIESCENCE. See Mora—Superior and Vassal, 7.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE. Judge—Declinature—Court of Session Act, 1821, sec. 4.

1. In a note of suspension and interdict at the instance of the Free Church of Scotland, the Lord Ordinary on the Bills orally reported to the First Division that the case was one connected with a series of litigations in which he had acted throughout as counsel for the Free Church of Scotland and for the local parties connected with it, and that in these circumstances he thought it proper to decline, but in respect it was a Bill-Chamber case, he could not do so without their Lordships' assistance under the statute. The Court in respect of this report sustained the declinature, and remitted the case to another Lord Ordinary. Free Church of Scotland v. M'Rae, May 30, 1905, p. 686.

Advocate.

2. Right of peer to be heard as counsel in appeal cases to the House of Lords. In re Lord Kinross, July 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 138.

Law-Agent—Misconduct—Forgery—Readmission to the Roll.

3. In 1894 an enrolled law-agent was convicted of forging and uttering a pretended interlocutor of a Lord Ordinary, finding him entitled to £35, and was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment. In 1896 his name was, on his own application, removed from the Register of Enrolled Law-Agents. In 1901 he presented a petition for readmission, which was refused. In 1905 he presented another petition for readmission. The petition was opposed by the Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland, and it did not appear that, apart from the lapse of time, there was any change of circumstances since the refusal of the previous petition. The Court refused the petition. C D v. Incorporated Society of Law-Agents in Scotland, July 11, 1905, p. 936.

Contempt of Court—Enforcement of Decree to deliver document—Warrant to open lockfast places.

4. The curator bonis of an incapax obtained a decree in absence against the wife of his ward, ordaining her to deliver to the curator a certain policy of insurance on his ward's life. A charge upon this decree having expired without result, the curator, being in a difficulty, presented a note to the Junior Lord Ordinary, in which, on the narrative that he believed that the execution of a warrant to imprison would not be effectual to enforce production, he craved for a warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places. The Junior Lord Ordinary having reported the matter to the Inner-House, the Court granted the warrant asked for. Ferguson's Curator Bonis, July 4, 1905, p. 898.

ADVERTISEMENT. Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 119. The holder of a bond and disposition in security exposed the subjects under the power of sale on 23d March 1904. The first advertisement had appeared on the morning of 10th February 1904. Held that, as forty-two days had elapsed between the morning of the first advertisement and the morning of the exposure, the provisions of the Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 119, in regard to advertisement had been complied with. Roscoe v. Mackersy, June 8, 1905, p. 761.

ADVOCATE. See Administration of Justice, 2.

AGENT AND CLIENT. Agent's Rights—Liability of trust-estate to law-agents for expense of unsuccessfully defending an action. In an action against the sole trustee under a testamentary trust, the final interlocutor decerned against the trustee for payment of a sum of money, and found "that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate." The trust-estate having subsequently been sequestrated on the petition of the successful pursuer of the action, the law-agents who had acted for the testamentary trustee claimed to be ranked on the sequestrated estate for their expenses. Held that as the law-agents for the trustee were presumably acquainted with the whole circumstances of the trust, they were not entitled to rank for their account. Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee, July 6, 1905, p. 902.
See Administration of Justice, 3.

AGENT AND PRINCIPAL. Termination of Contract—Shipping Agent—Engagement "for one year certain"—Tacit Relocation.
1. By letter, dated 29th December 1891, the manager of the North British Railway Company appointed Stevenson, a coal exporter, to be "agent for this Company as from 1st ulto. (for the purpose of attending to the Company's interests in connection with their shipping trade to Hamburg at Bo'ness, Burntisland, and Methil), at a salary of £450 per annum, for one year certain." Stevenson's duty as agent was to endeavour to get coal taken by the Railway Company's lines to the ports named, and shipped thence to Hamburg. On 7th December 1892 the contract was renewed "for another year." Thereafter Stevenson continued to discharge the duties of agent until 1900 without formal reappointment. He always received his salary in one sum for each year ending 31st October. On 2d January 1901 the Railway Company gave Stevenson notice that his services would not be required after three months from that date. In an action by Stevenson against the Railway Company for payment of the balance of his salary to 31st October 1901, held, after a proof, that the contract between the pursuer and the defenders was a yearly contract, and, therefore, that the defenders, were not entitled to terminate it, after a year had begun, on three months' notice. Stevenson v. North British Railway Co., July 20, 1905, p. 1106.

Agent's Responsibilities—Liability to account—Unexplained deficiency.
2. The manager of a branch shop was supplied by his employer with goods marked and invoiced at selling prices. Receipts for the goods so received were signed by the manager. At a stock-taking there was a deficiency to the amount of £62. In an action by the employer against the manager for this amount a proof was taken, in which there was no evidence of dishonesty or negligence on the part of the manager, but no explanation of the cause of the deficiency. Held that the employer was entitled to decree for £62, the retail price of the goods not accounted for. Tyler v. Logan, Nov. 23, 1904, p. 123.

AGENT AND PRINCIPAL—Continued.

Agent's Responsibilities—Negligence—Patent Agent—Damages for loss of patent—Defence of invalidity of patent.

3. In an action of damages against patent agents, the pursuer averred that the defenders had charge of two patents held by him, and that they had allowed them to lapse by failing to give him notice that certain payments were necessary to keep them in force. The defenders pleaded that there was no loss, as the patents were invalid by reason of anticipation by prior patents specified. Held that the defence was irrelevant. Alexander Turnbull & Co., Limited, v. Cruickshank & Fairweather, June 23, 1905, p. 791.

Agents' responsibilities—Misrepresentation by agent to principal that contract concluded—Shipbroker—Measure of Damages.

4. A shipbroker who had been employed by a foreign shipowner to find a cargo for his vessel, in the expectation of completing a contract with a coal merchant (for whom he did not act as agent) informed his principal that he had completed a contract on certain terms. No contract was completed, and the principal raised an action of damages against his agent for the profit he would have gained if the contract had been completed. Held (alt. judgment of Second Division) that the pursuer was entitled to the actual damage he had sustained by being led to believe that a contract had been completed, but had no claim for loss of profit. Salvesen & Co. v. Rederi Aktiebolaget Nordstjernan, April 14, 1905 (H. L.), p. 101.

ALIMENT. See Parent and Child.

ALIMENTARY PROVISION. See Marriage-Contract, 1.

APPEAL TO HOUSE OF LORDS. Interim Execution pending appeal—Expenses—Modification—Court of Session Act, 1808, sec. 17.

1. In an action of damages for breach of contract the pursuer was found entitled to damages and to expenses, "reserving consideration as to modification" until the approval of the Auditor's report. After the expenses had been taxed, but before the Auditor's report had come up for approval, the defenders appealed to the House of Lords. In a petition presented by the pursuer for interim execution pending the appeal, including interim execution for the taxed expenses, the Court refused the petition quoad the expenses, in respect that after the appeal had been presented it was incompetent to deal with the question of modification of the expenses. Williamson v. Macpherson & Co., Dec. 8, 1904, p. 231.

Petition to apply judgment—Discretion of Court to delay.

2. In an appeal the House of Lords reversed the decision of the Court of Session, and remitted the case to them with a direction to declare in terms of certain declaratory conclusions. On a motion in the Single Bills to apply the judgment the respondents stated certain objections to the motion being granted, and moved that the case should be sent to the Summar Roll. The Court refused the motion, and applied the judgment, holding that their functions in the matter were purely ministerial. General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland v. Lord Overtoun, Dec. 6, 1904, p. 202.

Advocate.

3. Right of peer to be heard as counsel in appeal cases to the House of Lords. In re Lord Kinross, July 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 138.

ARBITRATION. Accident Insurance by Newspaper—Payment to person adjudged by editor to be next of kin.

1. A weekly periodical named Answers contained a statement that in the event of any person being killed by an accident to any train in which he was travelling as a passenger with a copy of the current number in his possession, £1000 would be paid to "the person adjudged by the editor to be the next of kin of the deceased." It was added that "The person or persons who shall be adjudged by the editor to be the next of kin of the deceased shall be the only person or persons entitled to receive and give a valid discharge for the money." H was killed in an accident to a train in which he was travelling, having in his possession a copy of the current number of Answers. He was survived by three brothers and a sister. After inquiry, the editor adjudged the sister to be his next of kin, and paid £1000 to her. In an action by the brothers against her, held that they had no right to share in the sum so paid. Hunter v. Hunter, Nov. 24, 1904, p. 136.

ARBITRATION—Continued.

Arbitration Clause in Principal Contract incorporated in Subcontract.

2. A contractor, who had contracted with a railway company for the construction of certain works, entered into a subcontract for the execution of part of the work. In the contract between the principal contractor and the subcontractor it was stipulated that the work was to be executed "according to plans and specifications," which included a "general specification," forming part of the contract between the principal contractor and the railway company. This "general specification" contained a clause providing that disputes were to be submitted to arbitration. Held that the arbitration clause of the general specification—while it was incorporated in the subcontract to the effect of making the decisions of an arbiter in questions between the railway company and the principal contractor binding upon the subcontractor—was not incorporated in the subcontract quoad matters which concerned only the rights inter se of the principal contractor and the subcontractor. Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son, July 19, 1905, p. 995.

See Lease, 3, 4.

ARRESTMENT. Arrestment on dependence—Sist of action to preserve arrestment on dependence.

1. In an action by one Englishman against another who had estate in Scotland, a plea of forum non conveniens was sustained. The pursuer, however, moved the Court to sist the action to enable him to preserve arrestments on the dependence till he should raise and follow forth an action in England. The Court refused the motion, and dismissed the action. Atkinson & Wood v. Mackintosh, March 17, 1905, p. 598.

Arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causa—Amendments.

2. Arrestments jurisdictionis fundandæ causa found jurisdiction not only in the action as originally laid, but as competently amended. Hope v. Derwent Rolling Mills Co., Limited, June 27, 1905, p. 837.

ASSOCIATION (VOLUNTARY). See Church, 3—Reparation, 9—Revenue, 8.

BANK. See Local Government.

BANKRUPTCY. Effect—Illegal Preference—New security granted in substitution for prior invalid security—Act 1696, c. 5—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 47.

1. In June 1903, Neilson lent £3000 to M'Dowall & Company, and in security took from M'Dowall & Company delivery-orders for timber belonging to them stored in Connal & Company's timber-yard. The orders were in favour of Neilson, and were addressed to Haggart & Company, licensed timber-measurers, employed by M'Dowall & Company to measure and store the timber. The orders were intimated by Neilson to Haggart & Company, who replied acknowledging that they held the goods to his order. The duties of Haggart & Company in regard to storing timber were to measure it, to stack it in the yard selected by their employers, by whom they were paid, and to arrange for its removal when sold. The yard belonged to Connal & Company, by whose servants it was watched, and by whom books were kept in which were noted the quantities of the timber stored and the names of the owners, who paid rent for storage. According to the practice of the timber trade in Glasgow, the measurers were allowed by the proprietors of the yard to have practically complete control over timber stored by them. They could remove the timber as and when they chose, and delivery-orders for the removal of timber were addressed to them. On 23d September 1903, Neilson at the request of M'Dowall & Company granted delivery-orders signed by him and addressed to Haggart & Company in favour of M'Dowall & Company for the timber in exchange for the bills of lading of a cargo of timber purchased by M'Dowall & Company from Dobell, Beckett, & Company then on its way to Glasgow. On the arrival of the cargo at Glasgow four days later, it was stopped in transitu by Dobell, Beckett, & Company. On 1st October M'Dowall & Company were sequestrated. In a question between Dobell, Beckett, & Company, and Neilson, held (1) that the delivery-order addressed to Haggart & Company by M'Dowall & Company, and duly intimated to them by Neilson, did not operate as constructive delivery of the timber to Neilson, Haggart & Company being the servants of the granters of the order and not independent custodiers of the timber; (2) that Neilson therefore had not a valid security at the date when the bills of lading were transferred to him, and that the transfer was struck at by the Act 1696, c. 5. Dobell, Beckett, & Co. v. Neilson, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 281.

BANKRUPTCY—Continued.

Sequestration—Awarding—Warrant to cite Debtor—Objections to sufficiency of vouchers produced—Act 1856, sec. 26.

2. A petition for a debtor's sequestration presented without his consent was objected to by the debtor on the ground that the only voucher produced was under suspension. The Lord Ordinary on the Bills sustained the objection and dismissed the petition. The petitioner having reclaimed, the Court held that the direction in sec. 26 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1856, to grant a warrant to cite the debtor was peremptory, and remitted to the Lord Ordinary to grant the usual order and proceed. Train v. Steven, Nov. 12, 1904, p. 47.

Sequestration — Trustee — Election — Notice of meeting to elect trustee —Nobile Officium—Expenses—Act 1856, secs. 48 and 67.

3. On 8th May 1905, on the petition of creditors, estates were sequestrated. The deliverance appointed a meeting of the creditors for the election of a trustee to be held on 18th May. The petitioners having failed to insert the statutory notice of this meeting in the London Gazette of 9th May, it became necessary to have another date fixed for the meeting. The petitioners having presented an application for this purpose the Court appointed the meeting to be held on 27th May, and remitted to the Sheriff to proceed, with a declaration that the expenses of the application and procedure connected therewith were not to be allowed against the estate. Somerville & Co., Limited, May 16, 1905, p. 651.

Sequestration—Vesting of estate in trustee—Crofter—Forfeiture of tenancy —Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, secs. 1, 3, 7, and 8—Act 1856, sec. 81.

4. The Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, secs. 1 and 3, enacts that a crofter who shall do any act whereby he becomes notour bankrupt shall forfeit his tenancy and shall be liable to be removed by the landlord under sec. 4 of the Act of Sederunt, 14th December 1756. Secs. 7 and 8 enact that a crofter shall be entitled, after one year's notice to his landlord, to renounce his tenancy, and upon such renunciation, or upon his being removed from his holding, shall be entitled to compensation for permanent improvements. Where the estates of a crofter had been sequestrated, but his landlord had taken no steps to remove him, held that the crofter having been made notour bankrupt his tenancy was forfeited under section 3 of the Crofters Act, and consequently that he could not be called upon by the trustee to renounce a tenancy which no longer existed. Mackenzie's Trustee v. Mackenzie, Feb. 17, 1905, p. 505.

BANKRUPTCY—Continued.

Sequestration—Vesting of estate in trustee—Abandonment of asset by trustee and creditors.

5. In March 1898 Macdonald, a butcher, granted a trust-deed for behoof of his creditors in favour of Mackintosh as trustee. In December 1899 the trust was superseded by the sequestration of Macdonald's estates under the Bankruptcy Acts. In April 1902 Macdonald was discharged, but not retrocessed. The trustee in the sequestration was also discharged. In July 1904 Macdonald brought an action against Mackintosh for decree ordaining him to account for his intromissions as trustee under the trust for creditors and for payment to the pursuer of such balance as might be found to be due. The pursuer, who admittedly sued for his own behoof, averred that the defender, while trustee under the trust for creditors, had illegally purchased or appropriated the pursuer's business; that the defender had never accounted therefor to the trustee in the sequestration; that the defender had never been discharged as trustee; and that "the trustee and creditors in the sequestration abandoned any right they had to recover any assets of the pursuer's estates in the hands of the defender as trustee foresaid." The Court dismissed the action, holding that there was no relevant averment of abandonment. Macdonald v. Mackintosh, June 9, 1905, p. 771.

Sequestration—Claims—Transaction of Claims—Compromise by Trustee of Action against Bankrupt—Right of dissentient creditor to defend—Indemnity to Trustee—Act 1856, secs. 169 and 176.

6. A trustee in a sequestration, with consent of the commissioners, resolved to compromise on certain terms an action which had been brought against the bankrupt before his sequestration, and a joint minute by the trustee and the pursuer stating the terms of compromise was lodged in the action. Thereafter one of the creditors lodged a minute in which he submitted that he was entitled to take up the defence of the action in his own name on paying the trustee the sum due to him under the compromise, and granting a bond of indemnity with approved caution for £500 in security of any damages or expenses which might be awarded to the pursuer. The Lord Ordinary refused the crave of the creditor's minute, and interponed authority to the joint minute by the pursuer and the defender's trustee settling the action. The creditor reclaimed. The Court adhered, on the grounds (1) that the resolution to compromise not having been appealed against by the dissentient creditor was final; and (2) that the limited guarantee offered was not an adequate sum to secure indemnity to the trustee and the trust-estate. Edgar v. Kennedy and Hutton's Trustee, Jan. 18, 1905, p. 452.

Sequestration—Claims—Ranking—Preference—Adjudication by Trustee—Rectification of Claim—Act 1856, sec. 51.

7. A creditor on a sequestrated estate, who was entitled to a preferential ranking for arrears of wages, lodged a claim, which bore that the debt was for wages, but did not demand a preferential ranking. In a letter to the trustee on the sequestrated estate, accompanying the claim, the creditor stated, "As this is a preferable claim I shall be glad to have it settled at once." In acknowledging the claim the trustee wrote, "You need not, however, expect to get payment in full, as in any case the preference is limited." Eventually the trustee intimated to the creditor that he could not regard his debt as preferable, as it was not claimed as preferable in his affidavit and claim. The creditor thereupon offered to rectify his oath, and expressly state that he claimed a preference. The trustee refused to entertain this proposal and proceeded to adjudicate on the claim, treating it as a claim to an ordinary ranking. The creditor thereupon appealed to the Sheriff, who allowed him to lodge an amended affidavit and claim. Against this interlocutor the trustee appealed and maintained that he was right in ranking the claim as an ordinary debt, and that it was incompetent to rectify a claim after it had been adjudicated on. Held that the creditor should have been allowed to rectify his claim, and interlocutor appealed against affirmed. Crerar v. Clement's Trustee, July 11, 1905, p. 939.

BANKRUPTCY—Continued.

Sequestration — Claims — Ranking — Testamentary Trust — Agent and Client—Expenses—Liability of trust-estate to law-agents for expense of unsuccessfully defending an action.

8. In an action against the sole trustee under a testamentary trust, the final interlocutor decerned against the trustee for payment of a sum of money, and found "that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate." The trust-estate having subsequently been sequestrated on the petition of the successful pursuer of the action, the law-agents who had acted for the testamentary trustee claimed to be ranked on the sequestrated estate for their expenses. Held that as the law-agents for the trustee were presumably acquainted with the whole circumstances of the trust, they were not entitled to rank for their account. Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee, July 6, 1905, p. 902.

Sequestration—Discharge of Bankrupt—Composition—Reasonable Offer—Spes successionis—Act 1856, secs. 138, 139.

9. Held that an offer of composition by a sequestrated bankrupt which did not take into account a valuable interest in a succession which, although not vested in the bankrupt, would accrue to him in the event of his surviving his mother, who was eighty years of age, was not a reasonable offer in the sense of section 138 of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856. Bradshaw v. Kirkwood & Sons, Dec. 10, 1904, p. 249.

Sequestration—Discharge of Bankrupt—Appeal—Printing and Boxing—Caution.

10. A bankrupt, whose petition for discharge had been refused by the Sheriff, which refusal was affirmed on appeal, presented a year later another application for discharge. This application having been refused by the Sheriff, the bankrupt lodged an appeal, but for more than two months thereafter did not print or box to the Court the note of appeal and other documents relative thereto. Thereupon the respondents in the appeal presented a note craving the Court to ordain the appellant to print and box the note of appeal and relative documents, and also to find caution for the expenses of the appeal. The Court ordained the appellant to print and box within ten days, under certification that, if he failed to do so, the appeal would be dismissed, but refused to order him to find caution. Melrose-Drover, Limited, v. Heddle, June 28, 1905, p. 852.

See Cessio Bonorum.

BETTING. See Justiciary Cases, 5, 6, 7, 8.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE. Acceptance—"Approved Acceptance"—Custom.

1. An "approved acceptance" in a mercantile contract means an acceptance to which no reasonable objection can be taken, and it is not competent to prove that by the custom of a particular trade it means an acceptance to which no objection has in fact been taken. M'Dowall & Neilson's Trustee v. J. B. Snowball Co., Limited, Nov. 8, 1904, p. 35.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE—Continued.

Liability of parties—Proof—Parole—Competency—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, sec. 100.

2. A bill of exchange, dated 15th February 1904, drawn by Ferguson on and accepted by his firm of Ferguson & Company, was indorsed by Ferguson to the Industries Company, by whom it was indorsed to the Manchester Bank. In December 1904 the Manchester Bank brought an action against Ferguson & Company for payment of the sum in the bill. Ferguson & Company in defence averred that the pursuers, the Manchester Bank, having made advances to the Industries Company, Ferguson & Company, at a date specified, agreed to give the bill in security of the advance on the condition, agreed to by the pursuers, the Manchester Bank, that payment of the advance was not to be demandable until sufficient working capital had been raised by the Industries Company. Ferguson & Company therefore pleaded that they were not liable on the bill, sufficient working capital not having been raised by the Industries Company. The defenders did not state the amount of working capital to be raised, nor any limit of time within which it was to be raised. Held that the defenders' averments were not relevant to be remitted to probation under the 100th section of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co., Limited, v. Ferguson & Co., June 28, 1905, p. 865.

BUILDING REGULATIONS. See Police.

BUILDING RESTRICTION. See Superior and Vassal, 7.

BURGH. Magistrates—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction in Police Burgh—Licensing Offences—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 91.

1. Held that the Justices of the Peace of a county have concurrent jurisdiction along with the Magistrates of a police burgh situated within the county to try offences under the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, where such offences are committed within burgh by persons residing therein. Tasker v. Simpson, Dec. 21, 1904 (J. C.), p. 33.

Magistrates—Powers—Ice-cream Vendor's Licence—Unauthorised Conditions—Ultra vires—"Lawful day"—Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, sec. 80.

2. By sec. 80 of the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, as amended by sec. 57 of the Edinburgh Corporation Order Confirmation Act, 1901, it is enacted, that any person selling ice-cream (except in a duly licensed hotel) without a licence from the Magistrates, "who are hereby empowered to grant the same," for the house, building, or premises where such ice-cream is kept for sale or sold, shall be liable to a penalty, provided that such licence shall run from the date of issue until the 15th May ensuing, and upon renewal, from the date of expiry of the licence so renewed to the 15th May succeeding, "unless the same shall be sooner forfeited, revoked, or suspended," and that "every person licensed . . . to sell ice-cream under the provisions of the Act who shall . . . sell ice-cream except during the hours between" 8 A.M. and 11 P.M. "on any lawful day, or at such extended hour at night as the Magistrates may by special regulation, in particular cases and for reasons assigned, permit," shall be liable in a penalty. The statute did not provide a form of licence. The Magistrates proposed that the licences to be issued by them to ice-cream vendors should contain the following conditions:—" 1. That the said licencee shall not keep open said premises, or sell or permit the sale of ice-cream therein on Sunday, or on any other day set apart for public worship by lawful authority. 2. That the said licencee shall not keep open said premises, or sell or permit the sale of ice-cream therein before eight o'clock in the morning or after eleven o'clock at night. 3. That the said Magistrates, or any of them, may at any time suspend or revoke the licence." Held (rev. judgment of Second Divi- sion) that it was ultra vires of the Magistrates to insert these conditions in the licences issued by them. Rossi v. Magistrates of Edinburgh, Nov. 21, 1904 (H. L.), p. 85.

BURGH—Continued.

Town-clerk—Salary—Extension of burgh—Discretion of Town-Council as to fixing salary.

3. A royal burgh having been extended by the inclusion of a neighbouring burgh, the town-council raised the town-clerk's salary from £100 to £120. The town-clerk brought an action against the town-council for declarator that the defenders were bound to pay him a reasonable and suitable salary as fixed by the Court. The pursuer averred that the increased salary as fixed by the town-council after the extension was quite inadequate looking to the increase of the town-clerk's duties. The Court assoilzied the defenders, holding that the question of an increase in the amount of the salary of a town-clerk was a matter for the discretion of the town-council, with the bona fide exercise of which the Court would not interfere. Sutherland v. Magistrates of Wick, Jan. 11, 1905, p. 374.

Town-clerk—Burgh Register of Sasines—Authentication of Minutes.

4. Authority granted to the town-clerk of a royal burgh to authenticate and subscribe minutes in the minute-books of the Burgh Register of Sasines which had not been authenticated by his predecessors, and to record the petition and warrant in the Burgh Register of Sasines. Hepburn, Feb. 3, 1905, p. 484.

Property and Rights—Declarator of patrimonial right in burgh lands by Freemen—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 27.

5. Held that section 27 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, did not give the Sheriff jurisdiction in an action brought by the freemen of a burgh of barony, which had been formed into a police burgh, for declarator that the freemen had a private and patrimonial right in the property of the burgh of barony. Freemen of Prestwick v. Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of Prestwick, March 17, 1905, p. 602.

Property and Rights—Register of Voters—County Assessor—Remuneration—"Expense of making up register"—Town-Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900, secs. 26, 27, and 67.

6. Held that under sec. 67 of the Town-Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900, a burgh was liable only for the actual outlay of the county assessor in preparing the municipal register of voters, and not for anything by way of remuneration to the assessor for his personal services. Maxtone v. Magistrates of Dunoon, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 276.

See Police.

BURSARY. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 2, 3, 5, 7, 12.

CESSIO BONORUM. Process—Instance—Withdrawal of Petitioning Creditor—Interlocutor pronounced without sisting party.

In a petition for cessio the Sheriff pronounced a deliverance ordaining the bankrupt to appear on a specified day for public examination. On the day appointed the petitioning creditor withdrew from the process, and the bankrupt did not appear. M., an agent for other creditors, appeared in Court, but none of them was sisted or otherwise made a party to the process. On M.'s motion the Sheriff pronounced an interlocutor, by which he held the failure of the bankrupt to appear to be wilful, appointed a trustee in the cessio, and ordained the bankrupt to execute a disposition omnium bonorum in his favour. In an appeal, the Court recalled the interlocutor of the Sheriff, on the ground that at the date it was pronounced there was no party in the process at whose instance a decree could be pronounced. M'Lauchlan v. M'Lauchlan's Trustee, March 8, 1905, p. 542.

CHARITABLE AND EDUCATIONAL BEQUESTS AND TRUSTS. Constitution—Construction—Bequest for building church—Conditions impossible of fulfilment.

1. A testator directed his trustees to expend two sums of £20,000 each upon the erection of two Roman Catholic churches or "such smaller sum or sums as may be necessary . . . my intention being merely to have such church . . . completed although it may be at a less cost than £20,000 each"; any unexpended balance to revert to the residue of his estate. Except for a provision of £10,000 for the endowment of one of the two churches, the trust-disposition and settlement contained no provision for endowment. Upon the completion of the buildings the trustees were directed to convey them, on certain specified conditions, to trustees to be appointed respectively by the Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese in which the churches were to be situated. In a multiplepoinding raised after the death of the testator the Bishops stated they were unable to accept the bequests under the conditions specified, on the ground that owing to want of endowment the conditions could not be implemented. They proposed that the testamentary trustees should either accumulate the funds till they amounted to a sum sufficient to build and endow the churches, or that the funds should be applied in accordance with a scheme to be approved by the Court. Held that either proposal was contrary to the truster's intention, and that the bequests having lapsed owing to the refusal of the Bishops to accept them on the conditions specified by the testator the sums in question fell into residue. Marquess of Bute's Trustees v. Marquess of Bute, Nov. 16, 1904, p. 49.

Constitution—Construction—University—Bursary—Bursary to "one or other of the Colleges of St Andrews"—Subsequent affiliation of another college with the University of St Andrews.

2. A Dundee lady, who died in 1880, by her trust-disposition and settlement, dated in 1878, conveyed a fund to trustees "for the purpose of establishing one or more bursaries in either one or other of the colleges of St Andrews," as her trustees might determine. In 1880 the University of St Andrews consisted of two colleges—the United College and St Mary's College. In 1897 the University College of Dundee (instituted in 1881) was affiliated to and became part of the University of St Andrews. Held, on a construction of the settlement, that the bequest was conceived in favour only of the two colleges of St Andrews existing at the date of the testator's death, and that her trustees were not entitled to extend the benefit of the bequest to the University College of Dundee. Blyth Scholarship Fund Trustees v. University Court of St Andrews, June 28, 1905, p. 855.

Constitution—Construction—University—Bursary—Female Students.

3. A testator, who died in 1880, by her trust-disposition and settlement left a fund to trustees for the establishment of bursaries for "students" in the University of St Andrews. In 1880 the University of St Andrews was open to male students only, but in 1892, under the Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889, it was opened to female students also. Held that under the settlement the trustees had authority to admit female students in St Andrews to the benefits of the trust, there being nothing in the settlement to shew that the testator intended that female students should be excluded. Blyth Scholarship Fund Trustees v. University Court of St Andrews, June 28, 1905, p. 855.

Constitution—Construction—Ragged School—Identity of Institution—Change in methods of attaining objects—School sold and funds devoted to providing clothes and books for destitute children.

4. A bequest was made to a Ragged Industrial School which had been established in 1857 by an association "to rescue" destitute children, "and to fit them for the duties of life by imparting to them a good, common, and Christian education." The members of the society had power to alter the constitution. Originally, and till after the testator's death, the society conducted a school of its own. Owing to the provision of free education it closed and sold its school, and thereafter devoted its funds under an amended constitution to providing destitute children with clothing and books to enable them to attend the board school. Vesting of the legacy was postponed until an event which occurred after these changes had been introduced. Held that the bequest had not lapsed by failure of the legatee, the institution not having lost its identity, although it had altered its methods of attaining its objects. Playfair v. Kelso Ragged Industrial School, June 6, 1905, p. 751.

CHARITABLE AND EDUCATIONAL BEQUESTS AND TRUSTS—Continued.

Constitution—Construction—Uncertainty—"Bursary Fund of University"—Scheme.

5. By his will a testator left the residue of his estate "to the Bursary Fund of the University of Aberdeen to help in the education of poor and struggling youths of merit," and "in order to carry out and give effect to my wishes" he appointed two persons as executors. The various bursary endowments of the University were not merged in one general bursary fund, but each endowment was kept separate and devoted to the special purpose for which it was founded. By the Universities (Scotland) Act, 1889, the University Court were given power to administer funds mortified for bursaries. Held (1) that the bequest was valid and not void from uncertainty, and (2) that the University Court were entitled to receive and discharge the residue, on condition of submitting to the Court and obtaining approval of a scheme for the administration thereof as a bursary fund. Milne's Executors v. Aberdeen University Court, May 16, 1905, p. 642.

Constitution—Uncertainty—"Charitable or Religious Institutions and Societies."

6. A testator by his trust-disposition and settlement directed his trustees to divide a portion of the residue of his estate "to and among such charitable or religious institutions and societies as my trustees or the survivors or survivor of them may select, and in such proportion to each or any as they may fix." Held (rev. judgment of Second Division) that the bequest was void from uncertainty. Grimond or Macintyre v. Grimond's Trustees, March 6, 1905 (H. L.), p. 90.

Constitution—Construction—Church—Union of dissenting churches—Ex officio trustees—Bursary.

7. A minister of the United Presbyterian Church, who died in 1869, by his settlement appointed certain trustees to hold and administer the residue of his estate as an endowment for bursaries for students who were studying for the ministry of the United Presbyterian Church. Among the trustees appointed were the ministers of certain churches in the United Presbyterian Church and their successors in these several churches ex officio. In 1900 the United Free Church was formed by the union of the United Presbyterian Church with a majority of the Free Church. In a petition for the settlement of a scheme for the administration of the trust, held (1) that the ministers of the churches named by the truster, and since 1900 belonging to the United Free Church, and their successors in office, were entitled to act as trustees; and (2) that the bursaries fell to be awarded to students for the ministry of the United Free Church. Mailler's Trustees v. Allan, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 326.

Constitution—Failure of trust purposes—School Sites Act, 1841.

8. In 1858, by disposition bearing to be granted under the authority of the School Sites Act, 1841, H., a fee-simple proprietor, conveyed to certain persons as trustees four acres of land "to be applied as a site for a school for the district of . . . for children of the labouring, manufacturing, and other poorer classes . . . and for a residence for the teacher or teachers, and for no other purposes whatever." A school was erected. In 1903 the trustees closed the school, and intimated that they were no longer able to maintain it. The heir of H. brought an action against them, concluding for declarator that the site had reverted to him. Held (1) that the provisions of the School Sites Act were incorporated in the trust, although the site granted exceeded one acre, and (2) that the pursuer was entitled to decree on the ground that the irritancy provided by the Act had been incurred, or (per Lord Young) on the ground that, apart from the Act, the property of the trust reverted to the donor because the trust purposes had failed, and no legitimate scheme for the use of the property for analogous purposes had been suggested. Houldsworth v. School Board of Cambusnethan, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 291.

Settlement of Scheme—Trustees—Meetings—Voting—Quorum.

9. A proposed scheme for the administration of a charitable trust, under which there were four ex officio trustees, contained this article,—"At all meetings two of the trustees shall be a quorum. . . . All questions to be determined by a majority of those present. The chairman to have a second or casting vote in addition to his deliberative vote." The Court sanctioned the article, but altered the word "two" into "a majority," in respect that if the clause were sanctioned as it stood the chairman might do what he liked if only two trustees were present. Mailler's Trustees v. Allan, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 326.

Settlement of Scheme—Accounts—Audit.

10. The Court refused to sanction an article in a proposed scheme for the administration of a charitable trust under which the trust accounts were to be audited by the trustees themselves. Mailler's Trustees v. Allan, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 326.

Settlement of Scheme—Trustees—Powers.

11. The Court refused to sanction an article in a scheme for the administration of a charitable trust conferring extensive powers of selling, leasing, borrowing, &c., on the ground that the trustees either had the power at common law or must make special application to the Court when circumstances made the exercise of the power necessary. Mailler's Trustees v. Allan, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 326.

Settlement of Scheme—Bursary.

12. A truster left the residue of his estate for the endowment of bursaries restricted to students born in the counties of Perth or Kinross. The Court refused to sanction an article in a proposed scheme for the administration of the trust under which the trustees were to be empowered to confer the bursaries on students not born in Perth or Kinross, should there be no applicant who was born in either of these counties. The truster further provided,—"No student when he gains a bursary shall be entitled to hold it longer than one year, and in order to retain it he must compete and gain it in each year." The proposed scheme contained an article under which the bursaries were to be tenable for the whole of the student's curriculum, provided that in each year he passed certain of the University examinations for the degree of M.A. The Court refused to sanction the article. Mailler's Trustees v. Allan, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 326.

Settlement of Scheme—Endowment and proceeds of sale of school—Religious Education—Technical Instruction—Evening Classes.

13. In a deed of trust, the truster, upon the narrative of his "being sensible of the benefit of extending religious education to the children of the working classes," provided for the endowment of a school at G., and directed that the Bible should be read daily in the school. Owing to modern educational requirements it was ultimately found impossible to carry on the school, and it was sold under authority of the Court. The committee of management then presented a scheme for the application of the endowment. The Court approved of the scheme in so far as it proposed to devote the funds to providing technical instruction in manufactures, agriculture, and dairy work and ambulance work; but refused to sanction their application to promoting instruction in Scripture knowledge in G., and maintaining a Sunday school library and providing prizes for the Sunday school at G., and to establishing evening classes in the Board School there. Sutherland, May 12, 1905, p. 634.

CHARITABLE AND EDUCATIONAL BEQUESTS AND TRUSTS—Continued.

CHEQUE. See Local Government.

CHURCH. Glebe—Designation of Glebe—Excambion of Glebe—Decree of Presbytery.

1. Where a glebe is excambed, the title to the new glebe flows from the excamber, and the decree of the Presbytery completing the title is not a judicial determination, but merely gives the sanction of the Presbytery to the transaction, and impresses the land given to the minister with the character and status of a glebe. Cadell v. Allan, March 17, 1905, p. 606.

Glebe—Boundary—Foreshore—Minerals under Foreshore—Property—Title—Competition of Title.

2. In exchange for an old glebe, a new glebe bounded by the sea was acquired by excambion in 1817. The new glebe had originally formed part of a portion of the barony of Grange, known as the 24 acres. In 1613 the 24 acres bounded by the sea had been feued by the proprietor of Grange to Bruce, the coal being reserved by the granter. In 1643 the granter obtained a Crown charter of resignation which contained a grant of the coal in the foreshore as a separate estate. In 1673 the proprietor of Grange, in consideration of a money payment, granted a charter of novodamus conveying the 24 acres (without reservation of the coal) to Bruce's successor, who in the same year took infeftment upon a precept contained in the charter. In 1904 the right of the minister to the coal in the foreshore ex adverso of the glebe was challenged by the proprietor of Grange in a process of interdict brought by him against the minister's mineral tenants. The complainer founded on the Crown charter of resignation of 1643, which contained a grant of the minerals in the 24 acres as a separate tenement, and contended that the charter of novodamus of 1673 merely gave of new what was given in the feu-contract of 1613. The mineral tenants in answer founded on the novodamus of 1673 as conveying the coal in the 24 acres from the proprietor of Grange to Bruce's successor. Held that the charter of novodamus of 1673 included the coal, and contained a valid grant by the proprietor of Grange of the 24 acres, without reservation, and that therefore the proprietor of Grange had no title to challenge the minister's right to the coal in the foreshore ex adverso of the glebe. Cadell v. Allan, March 17, 1905, p. 606.

Dissenting Church—Union of two dissenting Churches—Abandonment of fundamental principle—Property claimed by minority.

3. In 1843 a majority of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland (consisting of ministers and elders elected by the Presbyteries), in consequence of certain decisions of the Civil Courts which they considered to interfere with the constitution and spiritual independence of the Church, protested and withdrew from the Establishment, maintaining in other respects the doctrines, polity, and discipline of the Established Church, and claiming to be the Church of Scotland free from State control. They along with others adhering to them formed the Free Church.

CHURCH—Continued.

Large sums were, at the Disruption and subsequently, contributed for the purposes of the Free Church. On 30th October 1900 the General Assembly of the Free Church, with consent of a majority of the Presbyteries, passed an Act agreeing to a union with the United Presbyterian Church, and relative Acts followed transferring the property of the Free Church to trustees for the new United Church. A small minority of the Assembly of the Free Church, regarding the Acts as incompetent, protested against and dissented from them, and professed to act as the Assembly of the Free Church. On 14th December 1900 they raised an action in name of the General Assembly of the Free Church against the General Trustees of the Free Church and the General Trustees of the United Free Church and its Assembly, concluding for declarator that the United Free Church had no right to the lands, property, or funds of the Free Church, and that the pursuers were and lawfully represented the Free Church, and were entitled to its property and funds. Evidence upon which held (rev. judgment of the Second Division) (1) that the Free Church of 1843 held as one of its fundamental and distinctive doctrines the duty of the State to maintain and support an establishment of religion in accordance with God's word; (2) that the Free Church Assembly, with consent of a majority of the Presbyteries, was not entitled to depart from this doctrine and to make it an open question, and to share the funds of the Free Church with another Church which did not hold this doctrine, and, further, was not entitled to deprive the minority of their rights in the funds because they refused to hold the doctrine an open question and to enter into the United Church; and therefore (3) that neither the United Free Church nor any of its members had right to any part of the property belonging to the Free Church. Free Church of Scotland v. Lord Overtoun—Macalister v. Young, Aug. 1, 1904 (H. L.), p. 1.

See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 1, 6, 7—Interdict, 2.

CITATION. See Bankruptcy, 2—Justiciary Cases, 22—Sheriff, 6.

COMMON PROPERTY. See Property, 1.

COMPANY. Management—Dividend or Conversion into capital—Bonus paid out of reserve fund—Fee and Liferent.

1. The directors of a limited company, who had power to divide as dividend part of its reserve fund (accumulated from undivided profits), resolved to divide a portion of its reserve fund among the shareholders in the shape of a bonus of 50 per cent on the amount paid up, and at the same time to increase the capital of the company by issuing, concurrently with the payment of the bonus, preference shares of an amount equal in value to the bonus. A circular was sent to each shareholder intimating the sum to which he was entitled as bonus and the number of preference shares he was entitled to, and enclosing an application form for the new shares. Subsequently warrants for the bonus dividend were sent to the shareholders payable on the day on which payment of the new shares was due. The trustees of a deceased shareholder, who were directed by the trust-deed to hold certain shares in the company for one person in liferent and for others in fee, took up their quota of the new shares, and applied the bonus in payment thereof. In a question between the liferenter and fiars of the original shares, held that the operation was a payment of dividend, and not a conversion of profits into capital, and that the liferenter was entitled to have the bonus dividend paid to her. Blyth's Trustees v. Milne, June 23, 1905, p. 799.

Winding-up—Compulsory—Intimation of petition for winding-up—Just and equitable—Act 1862, sec. 79.

2. Certain holders of fully paid-up preference shares, representing less than one-thirteenth of the share capital of a company, presented a petition for its compulsory winding-up, on the ground that in the circumstances it was just and equitable that it should be wound up. On a motion being made in the Single Bills for an order for intimation, advertisement, and service, appearance was made for the company, for the holders of first and second debentures, and for almost all the creditors whose respective claims exceeded £50. Their counsel moved the Court to dismiss the petition without pronouncing an order, and stated that the intimation craved would be prejudicial to the credit of the company. The Court, after considering minutes lodged by the petitioners and by the objectors, and coming to the conclusion that the winding-up of the company would be detrimental to all concerned, and having regard to the wishes of the creditors and of the great majority of the shareholders, refused to order intimation, and refused the prayer of the petition. Black v. United Collieries, Limited, Oct. 28, 1904, p. 18.

COMPANY—Continued.

Winding-up—Voluntary—Title to object—Contributories but not Members of Company—Trustees of deceased shareholder—Act 1862, sec. 76.

3. Testamentary trustees were, under sec. 76 of the Companies Act, 1862, contributories but not members of a company in which the deceased held shares at the time of his death. Held that the trustees had a good title to challenge the validity, on the ground of non-compliance with the articles of association, of a special resolution of the Company for voluntary liquidation and the appointment of a liquidator. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

Winding-up—Voluntary—Resolution to wind up—Validity—Articles of Association—Construction.

4. Art. 61 of the articles of association of a company incorporated under the Companies Acts provided :—"No business shall be transacted at any general meeting, except the declaration of a dividend, unless there shall be personally present at the commencement of the business ten or more members." Art. 130 provided :—"On the dissolution of the Company the affairs of the Company shall be wound up in terms of the Acts of Parliament under which the Company is incorporated." Held that at a meeting for the passing of a special resolution for the voluntary winding-up of the Company, there must be at least ten members personally present in terms of art. 61 of the articles of association, and that it was not sufficient that the meeting satisfied the provisions of the Companies Acts as to the passing of special resolutions. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

Winding-up—Voluntary—Interdict—Competency.

5. Question, per Lord Kyllachy, whether a note of suspension and interdict to have the respondent interdicted from acting as liquidator of a company under an ex facie valid special resolution of the Company for voluntary liquidation, and the appointment of the respondent as liquidator, was competent. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

Winding-up—Liquidator—Conduct of Liquidation—Compromise with debtor—Refusal of Liquidator to apply for sanction of Court—Locus Pœnitentiæ—Personal Exception—Act 1862, sec. 160.

6. In an action by a company, which was being wound up subject to the supervision of the Court, and its liquidator against an alleged debtor of the company, the defender pleaded that the liquidator having agreed to a compromise of the claim sued for, and having failed to apply to the Court for its sanction, was barred personali exceptione from insisting in the action. The Court repelled this plea upon the ground that there was locus pœnitentiæ until the sanction of the Court had been obtained, and that the liquidator was not bound to apply for the sanction of the COMPANY—Continued.

Court or to recommend the compromise to it; and per Lord Kinnear also upon the grounds (1) that the liquidator could not be barred from insisting in an action brought on behalf of the company and its creditors by an exception personal to himself; and (2) that, apart from the absence of sanction by the Court there was in fact no finally concluded agreement between the parties. Reid & Laidlaw, Limited, v. Reid, Jan. 26, 1905, p. 457.

Winding-up—Note for authority to liquidator to pay—Objection by preferable claimant—Title or interest to defend—Preference—Poor-Rates—Poor-Law (Scotland) Act, 1845, sec. 88.

7. In a note by the liquidators of a company for authority, inter alia, to take credit for their remuneration, as fixed by the Court, and to pay the law expenses, and to pay the preferable claims as set forth in a schedule, among which was included a claim for poor-rates due by the company, answers were lodged by a collector of poor-rates, who maintained that the liquidators should be ordained to pay the claim for poor-rates preferably to the liquidators' remuneration and their law expenses. The liquidators stated that their accounts shewed a balance in their hands more than sufficient to pay in full all the preferable claims, after payment of the liquidator's remuneration and law expenses, and that the respondent had been informed of this before he lodged answers. Held that, in respect the liquidators had admitted the claim for poor-rates to a preferential ranking and tendered payment thereof in full, there was no proper question presented to the Court for adjudication on the answers, and note remitted to the Lord Ordinary to proceed. Liquidators of Scottish Drug Depot, Limited, v. Fraser, May 16, 1905, p. 646.

Winding-up — Poor-Rates — Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, sec. 1, (1) (3).

8. Opinion, per Lord Low, Ordinary, (1) that the provisions of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, are applicable to Scotland, in so far as they deal with the case of companies which are being wound up under the Companies Acts, and (2) that under section 1, subsections (1) and (3), of that Act, poor-rates due by a company at the commencement of the winding-up thereof do not fall to be paid preferably to the liquidator's fees and the law expenses incurred by him in the liquidation. Liquidators of Scottish Drug Depot, Limited, v. Fraser, May 16, 1905, p. 646.

COMPENSATION. See Master and Servant.

CONFIDENTIALITY. See Contract, 4.

CONQUEST. See Marriage-Contract, 3, 4.

CONTEMPORANEA EXPOSITIO. See Property, 2.

CONTRACT. Consensus in idem—Sale or Hire—Hire Purchase Agreements—Construction of verbal contract.

1. A, a piano merchant who was in the practice of disposing of his pianos in one of three ways—1st, in sales for cash; 2, in hire purchase agreements; 3, in letting them for hire—made an oral offer to B of a piano "at the value of £26, payable 15s. per month." B accepted the offer, and after the lapse of a month paid certain instalments. B having subsequently failed to continue the payments, A raised an action in the Sheriff Court for re-delivery of the piano, alleging that it had been let on hire to B. It appeared from a proof that A in making his offer had intended the transaction to be on the hire-purchase system, while B understood it to be a sale for a price payable by instalments. The Sheriff held that as there had been no consensus in idem, there was no valid contract between the parties, and that A was entitled to have the piano restored. In an appeal, held that B understood, and was entitled to understand from the terms of A's offer, that the transaction was an immediate sale for a price payable by instalments, and that a contract of sale had been completed by B's acceptance. Muirhead & Turnbull v. Dickson, June 1, 1905, p. 686.

CONTRACT—Continued.

Locus Pœnitentiæ—Personal Exception—Company—Winding-up—Conduct of Liquidation—Compromise with debtor—Sanction of Court—Companies Act, 1862, sec. 160.

2. In an action by a company, which was being wound up subject to the supervision of the Court, and its liquidator against an alleged debtor of the company, the defender pleaded that the liquidator having agreed to a compromise of the claim sued for, and having failed to apply to the Court for its sanction, was barred personali exceptione from insisting in the action. The Court repelled this plea upon the ground that there was locus pœnitentiæ until the sanction of the Court had been obtained, and that the liquidator was not bound to apply for the sanction of the Court or to recommend the compromise to it; and per Lord Kinnear also upon the grounds (1) that the liquidator could not be barred from insisting in an action brought on behalf of the company and its creditors by an exception personal to himself; and (2) that, apart from the absence of sanction by the Court there was in fact no finally concluded agreement between the parties. Reid & Laidlaw, Limited, v. Reid, Jan. 26, 1905, p. 457.

Arbitration Clause—Arbitration Clause in Principal Contract incorporated in Subcontract.

3. A contractor, who had contracted with a railway company for the construction of certain works, entered into a subcontract for the execution of part of the work. In the contract between the principal contractor and the subcontractor it was stipulated that the work was to be executed "according to plans and specifications," which included a "general specification," forming part of the contract between the principal contractor and the railway company. This "general specification" contained a clause providing that disputes were to be submitted to arbitration. Held that the arbitration clause of the general specification—while it was incorporated in the subcontract to the effect of making the decisions of an arbiter in questions between the railway company and the principal contractor binding upon the subcontractor—was not incorporated in the subcontract quoad matters which concerned only the rights inter se of the principal contractor and the subcontractor. Goodwins, Jardine, & Co., Limited, v. Brand & Son, July 19, 1905, p. 995.

Breach of Contract—Confidentiality—Breach of confidence by medical practitioner.

4. The question whether a breach of medical confidence is actionable depends on the character of the disclosure made.

In an action of damages against a medical adviser for breach of confidentiality, held that the pursuer was not entitled to the general issue whether the defender, to the pursuer's damage, disclosed matters relative to her state of health ascertained in the course of confidential employment. A B v. C D, Nov. 18, 1904, p. 72.

Breach of Contract—Measure of Damages—Misrepresentation by agent to principal that contract concluded—Shipbroker.

5. A shipbroker who had been employed by a foreign shipowner to find a cargo for his vessel, in the expectation of completing a contract with a coal merchant (for whom he did not act as agent) informed his principal that he had completed a contract on certain terms. No contract was completed, and the principal raised an action of damages against his agent for the profit he would have gained if the contract had been com- pleted. Held (aff. judgment of Second Division) that the pursuer was entitled to the actual damage he had sustained by being led to believe that a contract had been completed, but had no claim for loss of profit. Salvesen & Co. v. Rederi Aktiebolaget Nordstjernan, April 14, 1905 (H. L.), p. 101.

CONTRACT—Continued.

Breach of Contract — Measure of Damages — Ship — Charter-party — Failure to provide ship.

6. Manufacturers of wood pulp at Stocka, Sweden, in January 1900 entered into a charter-party with a British shipowner for the carriage of two cargoes of wood pulp from Stocka to Cardiff, the first to be lifted at Stocka "May (f.o.w.), (first open water), and the second in August/September, owners' option." The ordinary length of the voyage was twenty-two days. In an action by the charterers against the shipowner for damages for an admitted breach of the contract by the failure of the shipowner to send a ship to Stocka for the second cargo before the last day of September, it was proved that the shipment was intended by the charterers for delivery at Cardiff in implement of a contract of sale between the charterer and Owen, Cardiff, which set forth as the "mode and place of delivery—c.i.f., Cardiff. Time of delivery—in two cargoes first open water and August/September 1900." The delivery of the first cargo was duly made, but on 29*th September Owen having ascertained that the ship for the second cargo could not sail from Stocka before* 12*th October, bought in against the charterers the remainder of the wood pulp contracted to be delivered. The charterers paid Owen the loss he had thus sustained, and claimed this sum from the shipowner as the damage sustained by him.* Held (rev. the judgment of the First Division) that when the charterers ascertained that the ship could not leave Stocka before 12*th October they were entitled to buy in, or to allow their purchaser to buy in, other goods to replace those which could not be delivered in terms of the charter-party, and that the measure of damages for the shipowners' breach of contract was the extra cost thus occasioned.* Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison, Aug. 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 131.

Breach of Contract—Penalty or Liquidate Damages.

7. By two contracts dated respectively in June and December 1896 the Spanish Government contracted with a Clyde shipbuilding firm for the building of four torpedo boat destroyers at the price under one contract of £67,180, and under the other of £65,650 for each vessel, delivery to be within periods varying from six and a half to seven and three quarter months from the date of the contract. The contracts provided that "The penalty for late delivery shall be at the rate of £500 per week for each vessel." At the date of the contracts the Spanish Government was endeavouring to suppress the insurrection in Cuba, and feared the armed intervention of the United States. All the vessels having been delivered many months after the stipulated dates of delivery the Spanish Government brought an action against the shipbuilders for £500 for each week of late delivery of each vessel. The defenders pleaded that the sum of £500 stipulated in the contracts was penalty, not liquidate damages. Held (aff. judgment of Second Division) that the sum of £500 a week was to be regarded as liquidate damages and not as penalty, and that the Spanish Government were entitled to the full sum of £500 a week as damages. Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co., Limited, v. Don Jose Ramos Yzquierdo y Castaneda, Nov. 17, 1904 (H. L.), p. 77.

Breach of Contract—Payment of price without reservation of claim of damages—Personal Objection—Waiver.

8. Circumstances in which held (aff. judgment of Second Division) that payment, without reservation, of the last instalment of the price of a ship and acceptance of delivery by the purchaser after the date stipulated for delivery did not import a waiver by the purchaser of his right under a clause in the contract entitling him to a specified sum as damages for late delivery. Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co., Limited, v. Don Jose Ramos Yzquierdo y Castaneda, Nov. 17, 1904 (H. L.), p. 77.

CONTRACT—Continued.

See Insurance—Limitation of Actions.

COUNTY COUNCIL. See Local Government.

CROFTER. Bankruptcy—Forfeiture of tenancy precluding renunciation—Compensation for improvements—Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, secs. 1, 3, 7, and 8—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856, sec. 81.

1. Where the estates of a crofter had been sequestrated, but his landlord had taken no steps to remove him, held that the crofter having been made notour bankrupt his tenancy was forfeited under section 3 of the Crofters Act, and consequently that he could not be called upon by the trustee to renounce a tenancy which no longer existed. Mackenzie's Trustee v. Mackenzie, Feb. 17, 1905, p. 505.

Interdict between crofters on same estate as to taking seaware—Landlord not called—Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886.

2. In 1903 crofters, who were in the occupation of their crofts at the passing of the Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, and whose rents were fixed by the Commissioners under the Act in 1889, brought an action against certain neighbouring crofters who held of the same landlord, for interdict against the defenders infringing rights which the pursuers averred that they possessed, as pertinents of their crofts, of taking seaware from the seashore (belonging to the common landlord) in the neighbourhood of the crofts. The defenders' crofts were not in existence at the passing of the Crofters Holdings Act, 1886, but were formed out of two farms under the powers of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897. The pursuers averred that they were entitled to take seaware to the extent to which they had been in use to take it at the date when their rents were fixed; and that the defenders were not entitled to take it to any greater extent than the two tenant farmers had been in use to take it at that date. They averred that the defenders were now taking more than the farmers had been in use to take. The pursuers did not produce any written contract, estate regulation, or finding of the Crofter Commission defining the extent of seaware to which they were entitled. The defenders stated that they had the authority of the landlord for taking seaware as they had taken it, and pleaded "All parties not called," in respect that the landlord had not been called as a defender. The Court sustained the plea and dismissed the action. Mackinnon v. Macdonald, March 16, 1905, p. 589.

CROWN. Volunteer Regiment—Reparation.

In an action for damages against a regiment of volunteers and against the officer commanding the regiment, as representing the regiment, and as an individual, by the father of a child, who was killed on the public street by an ammunition waggon, the horses of which had bolted, the pursuer averred that the accident had been caused by the fault of the commanding officer in not seeing that quiet horses were used, that competent drivers were employed, that the waggons were driven according to military regulations, and that a competent commissioned officer was present to superintend the parade. The Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy) dismissed the action as against the regiment and its commanding officer as representing it, on the ground that the funds of the regiment belonged to the Crown, and that the Crown could not be sued for damages caused by the wrongful acts of its officers. Wilson v. 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 168.

CUSTOM. See Bill of Exchange, 1—Ship, 7, 8.

CY-PRÈS. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 13.

DECREE. See Diligence.

DILIGENCE. Enforcement of Decree—Warrant to open lockfast places.
The curator bonis of an incapax obtained a decree in absence against the wife of his ward, ordaining her to deliver to the curator a certain policy of insurance on his ward's life. A charge upon this decree having expired without result, the curator, being in a difficulty, presented a note to the Junior Lord Ordinary, in which, on the narrative that he believed that the execution of a warrant to imprison would not be effectual to enforce production, he craved for a warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places. The Junior Lord Ordinary having reported the matter to the Inner-House, the Court granted the warrant asked for. Ferguson's Curator Bonis, July 4, 1905, p. 898.

DISCHARGE. Discharge on Compromise—Discharge conditional on truth, accuracy, and completeness of statement of assets—Mora.
The City of Glasgow Bank went into liquidation in 1878, under the supervision of the Court, and in 1879, Bain, one of the contributories, settled with the liquidators and was discharged by them of his liabilities to the bank on payment of a sum of money, being the value of his property as disclosed in a written state, which he solemnly declared to be true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief. The state was submitted by him to the liquidators in answer to certain printed queries addressed to him by them, one of which was,—"What property do you possess, and what is its nature and value to the best of your knowledge and belief?" The discharge, which followed on a compromise approved by the Court, bore to be "on the basis, and on condition of the truth, accuracy, and completeness" of the said state. In 1901 the Assets Company, Limited, who were in right of the whole assets of the bank, raised against Bain's trustees an action of reduction of the interlocutor approving of the compromise and of the discharge by the liquidators, on the ground that two promissory-notes granted in Bain's favour by his sons previous to his discharge were not disclosed in the state of his affairs upon which the discharge proceeded. In an appeal held (rev. the judgment of Second Division) (1) that it was not a condition of the discharge that the contributory's disclosure of his assets should be in writing, (2) that as twenty years had elapsed since the date of the discharge the onus lay upon the pursuers of proving that Bain had not made a full disclosure of his assets either in writing or orally, (3) that the pursuers had failed to discharge this onus, and that the defenders were entitled to absolvitor. Bain v. Assets Co., June 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 104.
See Succession, 2.

DOCK. See Master and Servant, 3, 7.

EJECTION, SUMMARY. See Sheriff, 4.

ELECTION. See Master and Servant, 4.

ELECTION LAW. Ownership Franchise—Property situated in one and Residence within seven miles of another Parliamentary Burgh in the same district of burghs—Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1832, sec. 11—Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 59.
1. The owner of heritage situated in one of the burghs forming a Parliamentary district of burghs has not resided within seven miles of the burgh in the sense of sec. 11 of the Representation of the People Act, 1832, by residing for the qualifying period within seven miles of another of the burghs of the same district. Dunlop v. Mackenzie, Nov. 25, 1904, p. 155.

ELECTION LAW—Continued.

Household Franchise — Defeasibility of Tenure — Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 3—Representation of the People Act, 1884, secs. 2, 3, and 7 (4).

2. Where a workman has been an inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house belonging to his employer, whether under his contract of service or under a contract of lease, for the twelve months necessary to give a qualification for the franchise, his qualification will not be affected by the fact that his occupancy might have been terminated by his employer at any time during the twelve months.

Observed that there is only one household franchise enacted by the Representation of the People Act, 1884—that of inhabitant occupier as owner or as tenant of a dwelling-house—and that all that a claimant for the franchise as tenant has to prove in order to establish his right is that he is of full age and has occupied the house for the qualifying period, whether under a contract of service or under an ordinary contract of lease. Urquhart v. Adam, Nov. 25, 1904, p. 157.

Lodger Franchise—Erroneous declaration by claimant—Evidence of value of lodgings—Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 4 —Registration Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1885, sec. 14.

3. A claimed to be enrolled in the register of voters of a burgh as a lodger in respect of "Bedroom and use of Public Room" in a house occupied by his mother. In the declaration annexed to his claim A declared that he had been "the occupier as lodger tenant of the above-mentioned lodgings" during the requisite period; and "that such lodgings are of the clear yearly value, if let unfurnished, of £10 or upwards." The Sheriff having after objection admitted the claim, the objector appealed. The case for appeal set forth that the claimant had for the qualifying period under contract with his mother the right to occupy as a lodger the said bedroom with board and use of the public room; and that for this he paid 20s. per week; that other members of the family used the public room; that no evidence was led as to the rental of the house, or as to the value of the bedroom and the use of the public room separately. The Court sustained the appeal on the ground that there was no evidence of the letting value of the bedroom alone. Barr v. Ireland, Nov. 25, 1904, p. 153.

See Burgh, 6.

ENFORCEMENT OF DECREE. See Diligence.

ENTAIL. Revenue—Estate-Duty—Property passing on death of heir of entail—"Competent to dispose"—Estate-duty paid by deceased heir of entail and not charged on entailed estates—Finance Act, 1894, secs. 2, 9, and 22.

An heir of entail who had paid estate-duty due on the death of his predecessor died without having applied for a certificate or taken any steps to charge the sum so paid on the entailed estate. The Crown having claimed estate-duty on the sum so paid from his trustees, held (rev. judgment of First Division) that under sec. 9, subsec. 6, of the Finance Act, 1894, the heir of entail, being a person having a limited interest who had paid the estate-duty, had by the statute the same charge on the estate as if he held a mortgage over the estate for the amount of the duty, and that the charge being a vested transmissible interest belonging to the deceased at the time of his death, his trustees were liable for the duty. Lord Advocate v. Earl of Moray's Trustees, Aug. 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 116.

ESTATE DUTY. See Revenue, 1, 2, 3.

EXECUTOR. See Succession, 8.

EXPENSES. Awarding—Modification—Interim Execution pending appeal—Court of Session Act, 1808, sec. 17.

1. In an action of damages for breach of contract the pursuer was found entitled to damages and to expenses, "reserving consideration as to modification" until the approval of the Auditor's report. After the expenses had been taxed, but before the Auditor's report had come up for approval, the defenders appealed to the House of Lords. In a petition presented by the pursuer for interim execution pending the appeal, including interim execution for the taxed expenses, the Court refused the petition quoad the expenses, in respect that after the appeal had been presented it was incompetent to deal with the question of modification of the expenses. Williamson v. Macpherson & Co., Dec. 8, 1904, p. 231.

Awarding—Modification—Jury Trial.—Small amount recovered.

2. In an action for £500 of damages at common law, or £249 under the Employers Liability Act, for personal injuries, proof was allowed in the Sheriff Court. On appeal by the pursuer the Court of Session sent the case to trial by jury. The defenders did not move to have the case remitted to the Sheriff Court. The jury awarded £35 of damages. The defenders, who had made no tender, moved that expenses to the pursuer should be subject to modification in respect that the case, as tested by the amount of damages awarded, should properly have been tried in the Sheriff Court. Held that the pursuer was entitled to expenses without modification. Ridley v. Kimball & Morton, Limited, May 23, 1905, p. 655.

3. Held that a pursuer, who had appealed for jury trial and had obtained a verdict for £25 of damages, was entitled to expenses without modification, on the ground that, though the Court had power to relieve the losing litigant of any part of the expenses which might have been unnecessarily or unreasonably incurred by his successful opponent, no special reason for modification had been shewn in this case. M'Daid v. Coltness Iron Co., Limited, Nov. 4, 1904, p. 32.

4. In an action raised in the Court of Session by an inspector of police against a railway company for £500 of damages for assault, the jury awarded £10 of damages. The defenders had made no tender. The defenders moved that expenses to the pursuer should be subject to modification, in respect that the case should have been tried in the Sheriff Court. The Court refused the motion. M'Gilp v. Caledonian Railway Co., Oct. 26, 1904, p. 4.

Awarding—Amendment of Record—Court of Session Act, 1868, sec. 29.

5. In an action for damages raised by the Clippens Oil Company, Limited, against the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees a proof was led and judgment given in favour of the pursuers. Reclaiming notes having been lodged by both parties, the defenders craved leave to amend their record by adding a plea in law, founded on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, which, if sustained, would have rendered the action incompetent. The pursuers objected to the amendment being allowed except on condition of payment of expenses since the closing of the record. The Court allowed the amendment, reserving all questions of expenses. Clippens Oil Company, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees, July 6, 1905, p. 914.

Awarding—Action for implement of sale of heritage—Objections to title.

6. The purchaser of subjects exposed to public roup under the powers of a bond who had objected to the title found liable in the expenses of an action for implement in respect that none of his objections were substantial. Roscoe v. Mackersy, June 8, 1905, p. 761.

EXPENSES—Continued.

Liability for—Bankrupt Estate—Failure to insert notice in Gazette—Petition to fix another date for meeting—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856, secs. 48 and 67.

7. On 8th May 1905, on the petition of John Somerville & Company and others, creditors of Alexander Ross Mackenzie, Resolis, Mackenzie's estates were sequestrated by the Lord Ordinary on the Bills. The deliverance appointed a meeting of the creditors for the election of a trustee to be held on 18th May. The petitioners having failed to insert the statutory notice of this meeting in the London Gazette of 9th May, it became necessary to have another date fixed for the meeting. The petitioners having presented an application for this purpose the Court appointed the meeting to be held on 27th May, and remitted to the Sheriff to proceed, with a declaration that the expenses of the application and procedure connected therewith were not to be allowed against the estate. Somerville & Company, Limited, May 16, 1905, p. 651.

Liability for—Trust-Estate—Liability of trust-estate to law-agents for expense of unsuccessfully defending an action.

8. In an action against the sole trustee under a testamentary trust, the final interlocutor decerned against the trustee for payment of a sum of money, and found "that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate." The trust-estate having subsequently been sequestrated on the petition of the successful pursuer of the action, the law-agents who had acted for the testamentary trustee claimed to be ranked on the sequestrated estate for their expenses. Held that as the law-agents for the trustee were presumably acquainted with the whole circumstances of the trust, they were not entitled to rank for their account. Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee, July 6, 1905, p. 902.

Taxation—Remit to English Taxing Officer—Account incurred to English solicitors in preparing case.

9. Where in connection with the preparation of his case a party in an action, who was found entitled to expenses, had incurred an account to English solicitors, the Court found that this account fell to be taxed as between party and party according to English rules, and remitted it to the Taxing Officer of the Supreme Court of Judicature, London, with a request that he would examine and report at what figure the said account fell to be taxed as between party and party. Foreman v. Duke of Buccleuch, Dec. 24, 1904, p. 366.

Taxation—Stated Case—"Expenses of stated case"—Adjustment of case—Fee to counsel—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

10. The respondent in an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, was found entitled to "the expenses of the stated case." The Auditor taxed off all the items charged in the respondent's account of expenses in connection with the adjustment of the stated case, amounting in all to £7, 7s. 2d. The respondent having objected to the Auditor's report, the Court held that "the expenses of the stated case" included the legitimate expenses in connection with the adjustment of the case, and allowed £2, 2s. of modified expenses under this head.

Fee to counsel for revising the case disallowed. London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. Brown, Feb. 16, 1905, p. 488.

Taxation—Fees to Skilled Witnesses—Certificate—Action settled before trial—A. S. 15th July 1876, V. iii. (2).

11. Held that the provision of the Act of Sederunt of 15th July 1876, requiring the certificate of the Judge who tries a case to warrant an additional allowance to expert witnesses, does not apply where a case is settled before trial, and that in such cases a party entitled to expenses is entitled to charge for reasonable remuneration to experts. Clements v. Corporation of Edinburgh, May 20, 1905, p. 651.

EXPENSES—Continued.
See Trust, 5.

EXPENSES (CAUTION FOR). See Process, 9.

FACTORY. See Master and Servant, 7, 8, 9.

FACULTIES AND POWERS. See Succession, 10, 17—Trust, 1, 2, 6.

FEE AND LIFERENT. Rights of Liferenter and Fiar—Company—Bonus paid out of reserve fund—Simultaneous issue of new capital equal in amount to the bonus.
The directors of a limited company, who had power to divide as dividend part of its reserve fund (accumulated from undivided profits), resolved to divide a portion of its reserve fund among the shareholders in the shape of a bonus of 50 per cent on the amount paid up, and at the same time to increase the capital of the company by issuing, concurrently with the payment of the bonus, preference shares of an amount equal in value to the bonus. A circular was sent to each shareholder intimating the sum to which he was entitled as bonus and the number of preference shares he was entitled to, and enclosing an application form for the new shares. Subsequently warrants for the bonus dividend were sent to the shareholders payable on the day on which payment of the new shares was due. The trustees of a deceased shareholder, who were directed by the trust-deed to hold certain shares in the company for one person in liferent and for others in fee, took up their quota of the new shares, and applied the bonus in payment thereof. In a question between the liferenter and fiars of the original shares, held that the operation was a payment of dividend, and not a conversion of profits into capital, and that the liferenter was entitled to have the bonus dividend paid to her. Blyth's Trustees v. Milne, June 23, 1905, p. 799.
See Right in Security, 3—Succession, 13, 14—Trust, 4, 6.

FISHING. See Justiciary Cases, 1, 12, 13—Valuation Acts, 1.

FOREIGN. See Jurisdiction—Justiciary Cases, 1—Process, 16—Reparation, 1, 7—Succession, 6.

FORESHORE. See River, Loch, Sea, 3, 4.

FORUM NON CONVENIENS. See Jurisdiction, 4, 5.

FRANCHISE. See Election Law.

FRAUD. Misrepresentation—Sham Antiques—Res ipsa loquitur.
1. A wholesale dealer sold certain articles of jewellery, which he had got made to resemble antiques, to a retail dealer. In an action of rescission of the sale on the ground of misrepresentation the buyer gave evidence to the effect that the seller had stated that the articles were the antiques they appeared to be. The evidence of the seller was that he said nothing about them. The Court, preferring the evidence of the buyer, held (aff. judgment of Lord Low) that the pursuer was entitled to rescind the sale. Opinion (per Lord Kyllachy) that the offer of articles appearing to be antiques was in itself a misrepresentation, on the principle of res ipsa loquitur, and that the seller was not entitled to leave the articles to speak for themselves, but was bound to displace the inferences which to his knowledge their appearance was calculated to suggest. Patterson v. Landsberg & Son, May 24, 1905, p. 675.

Loss arising by fraud on two innocent parties—Sale on Approbation—Goods pawned by retail dealer.
2. Ehrmann, a wholesale jeweller, was in the habit of sending goods to Anderson, a retail jeweller, with the wholesale prices marked, with power to sell and deliver on his own account and for his own profit any articles he might sell, Anderson being liable only for the wholesale price. At the same time Ehrmann sent a printed notice headed "approbation note," stating that the goods were to remain the property of the sender till invoiced by him to Anderson. Anderson having retained a diamond necklace for several months, Ehrmann in April 1903 urged Anderson to purchase the necklace himself, and offered to take bills for the price. Anderson agreed to do so, and the necklace was invoiced to him, and the bills were granted by him. Anderson having subsequently become bankrupt, Bryce, a pawnbroker, with whom Anderson had in December 1902, without Ehrmann's knowledge, pledged the necklace, raised an action of multiplepoinding to determine the right thereto. Claims were lodged by Ehrmann, by Bryce, and by Anderson's trustee, but the claim by the last was not insisted in. Held (1) that as in December 1902 Anderson had been put by Ehrmann in a position to give a good title to a purchaser, he could validly pledge the necklace, and had validly pledged it to Bryce; (2) that as Anderson's trustee did not insist in his claim Ehrmann was entitled to delivery of the necklace after satisfying Bryce's claim. Bryce v. Ehrmann, Oct. 28, 1904, p. 5.

FRAUD—Continued.

3. Discharge on compromise—Discharge conditional on truth, accuracy, and completeness of statement of assets—Written statement incomplete—Presumption—Mora—Reduction. Bain v. Assets Co., June 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 104.

See Interdict, 1.

GAME. See Justiciary Cases, 10, 11.

GAMING. See Justiciary Cases, 5, 6, 7, 8.

GOODWILL. See Heritable and Moveable.

HARBOUR. Boundary—Foreshore—Rights of owners of foreshore included in harbour—Musselburgh Harbour Act, 1840, secs. 2, 49, 76.

The Musselburgh Harbour Act, 1840, sec. 2, enacts that the word "harbour" shall be understood to mean the "Harbour of Fisherrow," and shall include the whole precincts thereof as after specified. Sec. 76 enacts that for the purposes of this Act, and for no other purpose whatever, the said harbour shall be deemed to extend "along the shore" from the M. Burn on the west to the R. Burn on the east, and to seaward to the extent of one hundred yards beyond low-water mark opposite the shore between the aforesaid burns. The distance between the two burns was about two miles. Sec. 49 makes it unlawful for "any person to dig or take away from the said harbour or its precincts any sand, gravel, shingle, or stones," except with the authority of the Harbour Commissioners. In an action by the Harbour Commissioners against persons claiming to be the proprietors of part of the foreshore between the two burns, held (aff. judgment of Second Division) (1) that the harbour and its precincts included the whole foreshore between the two burns, rejecting a plea for the defenders that the words "along the shore" in sec. 76 of the Act excluded the foreshore; and (2) that the defenders, although owners of part of the foreshore, were not entitled to remove sand from their part without the authority of the Harbour Commissioners. Musselburgh Real Estate Co. v. Magistrates of Musselburgh, July 31, 1905, (H. L.) p. 113.

HERITABLE AND MOVEABLE. Goodwill—Public-House—Terce—Jus relictæ. The question whether the goodwill of a public-house is heritable or moveable depends on the circumstances of each case. Muirhead's Trustees v. Muirhead, Feb. 17, 1905, p. 496.

See Succession, 3.

HIRE PURCHASE AGREEMENT. See Sale, 1.

HIRING. See Lease, 2.

HOUSE OF LORDS. Practice—Peer appearing as counsel in Appeal Cases.
Resolved that according to present practice there is no reason why a Peer should not be heard as counsel on an appeal at the Bar of the House of Lords, but that this resolution is not intended to apply to the appearing of barristers who are Peers before Committees of the House, or before the House when sitting under the presidency of the Lord High Steward on a criminal case. In re Lord Kinross, July 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 138.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. Constitution of Marriage—Consent de præsenti—Written declaration before witnesses—Mental reservation.
1. In a declarator of marriage it is not sufficient for the pursuer to produce a writing signed by the parties stating that they have taken each other as husband and wife. The pursuer must also shew the circumstances in which the writing was completed, and shew that they were consistent with an intention on the part of the parties to contract marriage.
A party to a mutual declaration of marriage will not be allowed to plead that he did not truly consent to the marriage if he induced the other party to believe that he did consent.
Circumstances in which held that marriage had been proved by written declaration signed by the parties before witnesses. Duran v. Duran, Nov. 18, 1904, p. 87.

Divorce—Proof and Oath de calumnia taken on commission before case called.
2. A naval artificer-engineer, who was the pursuer in an action of divorce, presented a petition in which he stated that the summons in the action had been signeted and served edictally, but could not be called in Court until after the date when the ship upon which he and another material witness were serving was under orders to proceed to sea, and moved the Court to appoint a commissioner to take his oath de calumnia and the evidence of himself and the other material witness, the depositions to lie in retentis subject to the orders of the Court. The Court granted the prayer of the petition, reserving to the defender all objections competent to her to the competency of the petition. Pringle, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 525.

INCOME-TAX. See Revenue, 4 to 9.

INHABITED HOUSE DUTY. See Revenue, 10.

INSANITY. See Poor, 3.

INSURANCE. Construction of contract—Accident Insurance by Newspaper—Payment to person adjudged by editor to be next of kin.
1. A weekly periodical named Answers contained a statement that in the event of any person being killed by an accident to any train in which he was travelling as a passenger with a copy of the current number in his possession, £1000 would be paid to "the person adjudged by the editor to be the next of kin of the deceased." It was added that "The person or persons who shall be adjudged by the editor to be the next of kin of the deceased shall be the only person or persons entitled to receive and give a valid discharge for the money." H was killed in an accident to a train in which he was travelling, having in his possession a copy of the current number of Answers. He was survived by three brothers and a sister. After inquiry, the editor adjudged the sister to be his next of kin, and paid £1000 to her. In an action by the brothers against her, held that they had no right to share in the sum so paid. Hunter v. Hunter, Nov. 24, 1904, p. 136.

Construction of Contract—Widows' Fund limited to members of a Society—Contributor expelled from the Society—Right to remain a contributor—Glasgow Faculty of Procurators Act, 1875, sec. 3.
2. By the Act 3 Will. IV. c. lxiv., the contributors to the Glasgow Pro-

INSURANCE—Continued.

curators' Widows' Fund were incorporated into a Society, and persons under fifty years of age becoming members of the Faculty of Procurators of Glasgow were required to become contributors. By the Glasgow Faculty of Procurators Act, 1875, it was enacted that after the passing of the Act [April 1875], "No person shall be obliged or be entitled to become a member of the Society or a contributor to the fund," and that "no person other than the widows and children of then deceased contributors . . . and the persons who shall then be contributors . . . shall have any interest in the fund." In 1901 C., a Glasgow procurator, who had become a contributor to the Widows' Fund in 1870, was struck off the roll of the Faculty in respect of his having been convicted of a crime, and subsequently the Widows' Fund Society declined to receive his contributions. In an action brought by C. and his wife and children against the Widows' Fund Society, held that as C. was no longer a member of the Faculty of Procurators he was not entitled to contribute to the Widows' Fund, and that at his death his widow and children would have no right to the benefit of the fund. Colquhoun v. Society of Contributors to Widows' Fund of Faculty of Procurators in Glasgow, Dec. 22, 1904, p. 345.

INTERDICT. Interim Interdict—Publication of Trade Circular.

1. M., who had formerly been one of the managing directors of H. & Co., artesian well engineers and mineral boring prospectors, having commenced business in the same line on his own account, issued an advertising trade circular, headed "Artesian Tube Wells," under his firm name of M. & Co., in which it was stated that "our Mr M. has had extensive experience as managing director for many years with the largest artesian well engineers in Scotland, and is an expert in this class of work," and lists were given (1) of persons for whom artesian wells had been successfully put down, "a special visit having been made by him (M.) in each case," (2) of boring work which he had "under his personal supervision," and (3) of contracts completed "under his directorship." The circular did not state (as was the fact) that the work referred to had been done by H. & Co. while M. was one of their managing directors. Held that the circular was likely to mislead an ordinary reader into the belief that the work specified had been done by M. & Co. and not by H. & Co., and that H. & Co. were entitled to interim interdict against M. & Co. publishing, issuing, or circulating it. John Henderson & Son v. Alexander Munro & Co., May 12, 1905, p. 636.

Interim Interdict—Prima facie title—Dissenting Church.

2. In 1900 a majority of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland passed an Act uniting that Church with the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the united Church to be called the United Free Church of Scotland. In 1904 the Free Church of Scotland, composed of the minority of the original Free Church who had not entered into the union, obtained a judgment of the House of Lords to the effect that all the general property belonging to the original Free Church and held by trustees for behoof of that Church fell to be made over to trustees for behoof of the Free Church as it existed after the union. At the same time, in an action raised by the United Free Church against trustees holding church buildings in trust for behoof of the Buccleuch-Greyfriars congregation in Edinburgh for declarator that the said church buildings were held for behoof of the United Free Church congregation, the House of Lords held that the congregation of the United Free Church had no right to the buildings. Thereafter the Free Church and the congregation of the Free Church at Strathpeffer, founding on these judgments, presented a note of suspension and interdict against the United Free Church and the congregation of the United Free Church at Strathpeffer, praying for interdict against the United Free Church congregation using the church at Strathpeffer, which was held on a trust title prima facie identical with the title of the Buccleuch-Greyfriars Church in Edinburgh. The complainers having moved for interim interdict, the United Free Church congregation maintained that interim interdict ought not to be granted, in respect (1) that the judgments of the House of Lords were not res judicatæ against the present respondents, and were pronounced upon incomplete information as to the facts; (2) that the church at Strathpeffer had been built by subscription in 1886 after the original Free Church had (in 1873) resolved that there was no bar in principle to union with the United Presbyterian Church, while the Buccleuch-Greyfriars Church was built at a much earlier date, and that the subscribers to the building of the church at Strathpeffer as a body were in favour of the competency and the expediency of the union; and (3) that the Government intended to take immediate legislative action with a view to a settlement of the differences between the two Churches. Held that the church at Strathpeffer being held on a title prima facie identical, mutatis mutandis, with that of the Buccleuch-Greyfriars Church, interim interdict fell to be granted. General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland v. Johnston, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 517.

INTERDICT—Continued.

Wrong done by English Company in Scotland—Jurisdiction.

3. Held (aff. judgment of Lord Stormonth-Darling) (1) that the Court of Session has jurisdiction to interdict, at the instance of an English Company, the infringement in Scotland of a patent belonging to them by another English Company, although no arrestments have been used to found jurisdiction and personal service has not been made on the respondents; and (2) (repelling plea of forum non conveniens) that the Court of Session was the appropriate forum in which to seek interdict against a continuance of the alleged wrong. Toni Tyres, Limited, v. The Palmer Tyre, Limited, Jan. 31, 1905, p. 477.

Competency—Company—Winding-up.

4. Question, per Lord Kyllachy, whether a note of suspension and interdict to have the respondent interdicted from acting as liquidator of a company under an ex facie valid special resolution of the Company for voluntary liquidation, and the appointment of the respondent as liquidator, was competent. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

INTEREST. See Ship, 4.

ISSUES. Slander—Slander by Servant.

1. Where the pursuer in an action of slander alleged that a letter containing defamatory expressions had been written by the defenders' secretary in the course of their business, the Court approved of an issue "whether the defenders by their general secretary and manager wrote and dispatched" the letter complained of. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Seduction.

2. In an action of damages for seduction the method of seduction alleged to have been employed must be set forth in the issue. Cathcart v. Brown, July 12, 1905, p. 951.

JOINT AND SEVERAL. See Master and Servant, 6—Process, 3.

JUDICIAL FACTOR. Curator Bonis—Enforcement of Decree to deliver document—Warrant to open lockfast places.

1. The curator bonis of an incapax obtained a decree in absence against the wife of his ward, ordaining her to deliver to the curator a certain policy of insurance on his ward's life. A charge upon this decree having expired without result, the curator, being in a difficulty, presented a note to the Junior Lord Ordinary, in which, on the narrative that he believed that the execution of a warrant to imprison would not be effectual to enforce production, he craved for a warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places. The Junior Lord Ordinary having reported the matter to the Inner-House, the Court granted the warrant asked for. Ferguson's Curator Bonis, July 4, 1905, p. 898.

Curator Bonis—Heritable and Moveable—Conversion.

2. The curator bonis of a lunatic expended the whole moveable estate of the ward on her maintenance, and thereafter, on the advice of the Accountant of Court, and by the authority of the Sheriff, sold the ward's heritable property, the income of which was not sufficient to maintain her. Held that the balance of the ward's estate remaining at her death was moveable quoad succession, on the ground that in order to maintain the ward it was necessary for the curator to sell her heritable estate. M'Adam's Executor v. Souters, Dec. 2, 1904, p. 179.

Special Powers—Permission to retain shares involving liability for calls—Distinction between position of a Judicial Factor on a trust-estate and a Curator Bonis.

3. A judicial factor presented a petition for authority to retain for two years shares in a limited company which were subject to a liability for possible calls of £8, 10s. per share, and which could only be disposed of by payment of £3 per share. The petitioner stated that the prospects of the company were improving. On the report of the Junior Lord Ordinary the Court, in the circumstances, authorised the factor to retain the shares, but only hoc statu and for no definite time, and directed the factor, should any change occur in the circumstances of the company, to communicate with the Accountant of Court.

Observations (per the Lord Ordinary, Johnston) as to the distinction between the position of a judicial factor appointed on a trust-estate and a curator bonis or factor loco tutoris, with regard to his powers, and responsibilities and his right to apply to the Court for instructions. Browning's Factor, July 20, 1905, p. 1037.

JURISDICTION. Ownership of heritage in Scotland—Sale of the heritage.

1. A foreigner, the proprietor of a house in Scotland, conveyed it to his daughter by an absolute disposition, which was recorded a few days before a Court of Session summons in a petitory action was served upon him. Held that the Court had not jurisdiction over him by reason of the ownership of Scots heritage. Buchan v. Grimaldi, July 6, 1905, p. 917.

Forty days' residence in Scotland.

2. Jurisdiction constituted over a foreigner by his residence in Scotland for over forty days ceases when he leaves Scotland; it does not continue for forty days after he has left. Buchan v. Grimaldi, July 6, 1905, p. 917.

Arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causa—Amendments made in the course of the action.

3. Arrestments jurisdictionis fundandæ causa found jurisdiction not only in the action as originally laid, but as competently amended. Hope v. Derwent Rolling Mills Co., Limited, June 27, 1905, p. 837.

INTERDICT—Continued.

pension and interdict against the United Free Church and the congregation of the United Free Church at Strathpeffer, praying for interdict against the United Free Church congregation using the church at Strathpeffer, which was held on a trust title prima facie identical with the title of the Buccleuch-Greyfriars Church in Edinburgh. The complainers having moved for interim interdict, the United Free Church congregation maintained that interim interdict ought not to be granted, in respect (1) that the judgments of the House of Lords were not res judicatæ against the present respondents, and were pronounced upon incomplete information as to the facts; (2) that the church at Strathpeffer had been built by subscription in 1886 after the original Free Church had (in 1873) resolved that there was no bar in principle to union with the United Presbyterian Church, while the Buccleuch-Greyfriars Church was built at a much earlier date, and that the subscribers to the building of the church at Strathpeffer as a body were in favour of the competency and the expediency of the union; and (3) that the Government intended to take immediate legislative action with a view to a settlement of the differences between the two Churches. Held that the church at Strathpeffer being held on a title prima facie identical, mutatis mutandis, with that of the Buccleuch-Greyfriars Church, interim interdict fell to be granted. General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland v. Johnston, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 517.

Wrong done by English Company in Scotland—Jurisdiction.

3. Held (aff. judgment of Lord Stormonth-Darling) (1) that the Court of Session has jurisdiction to interdict, at the instance of an English Company, the infringement in Scotland of a patent belonging to them by another English Company, although no arrestments have been used to found jurisdiction and personal service has not been made on the respondents; and (2) (repelling plea of forum non conveniens) that the Court of Session was the appropriate forum in which to seek interdict against a continuance of the alleged wrong. Toni Tyres, Limited, v. The Palmer Tyre, Limited, Jan. 31, 1905, p. 477.

Competency—Company—Winding-up.

4. Question, per Lord Kyllachy, whether a note of suspension and interdict to have the respondent interdicted from acting as liquidator of a company under an ex facie valid special resolution of the Company for voluntary liquidation, and the appointment of the respondent as liquidator, was competent. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

INTEREST. See Ship, 4.

ISSUES. Slander—Slander by Servant.

1. Where the pursuer in an action of slander alleged that a letter containing defamatory expressions had been written by the defenders' secretary in the course of their business, the Court approved of an issue "whether the defenders by their general secretary and manager wrote and dispatched" the letter complained of. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Seduction.

2. In an action of damages for seduction the method of seduction alleged to have been employed must be set forth in the issue. Cathcart v. Brown, July 12, 1905, p. 951.

JOINT AND SEVERAL. See Master and Servant, 6—Process, 3.

JUDICIAL FACTOR. Curator Bonis—Enforcement of Decree to deliver document—Warrant to open lockfast places.

1. The curator bonis of an incapax obtained a decree in absence against the wife of his ward, ordaining her to deliver to the curator a certain policy of insurance on his ward's life. A charge upon this decree having expired without result, the curator, being in a difficulty, presented a note to the Junior Lord Ordinary, in which, on the narrative that he believed that the execution of a warrant to imprison would not be effectual to enforce production, he craved for a warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places. The Junior Lord Ordinary having reported the matter to the Inner-House, the Court granted the warrant asked for. Ferguson's Curator Bonis, July 4, 1905, p. 898.

Curator Bonis—Heritable and Moveable—Conversion.

2. The curator bonis of a lunatic expended the whole moveable estate of the ward on her maintenance, and thereafter, on the advice of the Accountant of Court, and by the authority of the Sheriff, sold the ward's heritable property, the income of which was not sufficient to maintain her. Held that the balance of the ward's estate remaining at her death was moveable quoad succession, on the ground that in order to maintain the ward it was necessary for the curator to sell her heritable estate. M'Adam's Executor v. Souters, Dec. 2, 1904, p. 179.

Special Powers—Permission to retain shares involving liability for calls—Distinction between position of a Judicial Factor on a trust-estate and a Curator Bonis.

3. A judicial factor presented a petition for authority to retain for two years shares in a limited company which were subject to a liability for possible calls of £8, 10s. per share, and which could only be disposed of by payment of £3 per share. The petitioner stated that the prospects of the company were improving. On the report of the Junior Lord Ordinary the Court, in the circumstances, authorised the factor to retain the shares, but only hoc statu and for no definite time, and directed the factor, should any change occur in the circumstances of the company, to communicate with the Accountant of Court.

Observations (per the Lord Ordinary, Johnston) as to the distinction between the position of a judicial factor appointed on a trust-estate and a curator bonis or factor loco tutoris, with regard to his powers, and responsibilities and his right to apply to the Court for instructions. Browning's Factor, July 20, 1905, p. 1037.

JURISDICTION. Ownership of heritage in Scotland—Sale of the heritage.

1. A foreigner, the proprietor of a house in Scotland, conveyed it to his daughter by an absolute disposition, which was recorded a few days before a Court of Session summons in a petitory action was served upon him. Held that the Court had not jurisdiction over him by reason of the ownership of Scots heritage. Buchan v. Grimaldi, July 6, 1905, p. 917.

Forty days' residence in Scotland.

2. Jurisdiction constituted over a foreigner by his residence in Scotland for over forty days ceases when he leaves Scotland; it does not continue for forty days after he has left. Buchan v. Grimaldi, July 6, 1905, p. 917.

Arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causa—Amendments made in the course of the action.

3. Arrestments jurisdictionis fundandæ causa found jurisdiction not only in the action as originally laid, but as competently amended. Hope v. Derwent Rolling Mills Co., Limited, June 27, 1905, p. 837.

JURISDICTION—Continued.

Forum non conveniens—Sist of action to preserve arrestment on dependence.

4. In an action by one Englishman against another who had estate in Scotland, a plea of forum non conveniens was sustained. The pursuer moved the Court to sist the action to enable him to preserve arrestments on the dependence till he should raise and follow forth an action in England. The Court refused the motion and dismissed the action. Atkinson & Wood v. Mackintosh, March 17, 1905, p. 598.

Preventive Jurisdiction—Interdict—Wrong done by English Company in Scotland—Forum non conveniens.

5. Held (aff. judgment of Lord Stormouth-Darling) (1) that the Court of Session has jurisdiction to interdict, at the instance of an English Company, the infringement in Scotland of a patent belonging to them by another English Company, although no arrestments have been used to found jurisdiction and personal service has not been made on the respondents; and (2) (repelling plea of forum non conveniens) that the Court of Session was the appropriate forum in which to seek interdict against a continuance of the alleged wrong. Toni Tyres, Limited, v. The Palmer Tyre, Limited, Jan. 31, 1905, p. 477.

See Justiciary Cases, 1 to 4—Sheriff, 1.

JUS QUÆSITUM TERTIO. See Mines and Minerals, 2.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. Jurisdiction—Police Burgh—Licensing Offences—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 91.

Held that the Justices of the Peace of a county have concurrent jurisdiction along with the Magistrates of a police burgh situated within the county to try offences under the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, where such offences are committed within burgh by persons residing therein. Tasker v. Simpson, Dec. 21, 1904 (J. C.), p. 33.

JUSTICIARY CASES. Jurisdiction—Territorial Waters—Three-mile limit—Fishing—Trawling—Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889, sec. 6, and Schedule.

1. Held that sec. 6 of the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889, prohibiting otter-trawling in, inter alia, the Dornoch Firth as defined by the Act, applied to foreign trawlers. Peters v. Olsen, July 13, 1905 (J. C.), p. 86.

Jurisdiction—Civil or Criminal—Suspension—Competency—Summary Procedure Act, 1864, sec. 28.

2. In a complaint for recovery of a penalty under an Act by which the Court was not authorised to pronounce sentence of imprisonment, or in default of payment of the penalty to grant a warrant of imprisonment for a specified time, the Court granted a warrant to imprison the respondent for one month unless the penalty should be sooner paid. Held that the complaint was civil, and that a suspension in the High Court of Justiciary was incompetent. Todd v. Magowan, June 27, 1905 (J. C.), p. 50.

Jurisdiction — Civil or Criminal—Summary Procedure Act, 1864, sec. 28—Summary Prosecutions Appeals (Scotland) Act, 1875, sec. 7—Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1881, sec. 9—Statute Law Revision Act, 1894, sec. 1.

3. In a summary complaint against an incorporated company the jurisdiction is civil within the meaning of sec. 28 of the Summary Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1864, and an appeal under the Summary Prosecutions Appeals (Scotland) Act, 1875, in such a complaint lies to the Court of Session—not to the Court of Justiciary. Lauder v. Hurst, Nelson, & Co., Limited, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 65.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Jurisdiction—Justice of Peace—Jurisdiction in Police Burgh—Licensing Offences—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 91.

4. Held that the Justices of the Peace of a county have concurrent jurisdiction along with the Magistrates of a police burgh situated within the county to try offences under the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, where such offences are committed within burgh by persons residing therein. Tasker v. Simpson, Dec. 21, 1904 (J. C.), p. 33.

Statutory Offences—Betting and Gaming—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 407—House, room, or place used as betting-house.

5. Held that a space of ground enclosed by walls, but not roofed in, which was entered by a door with a lock, and which was fitted up as a quoiting ground, but was used primarily as a place for conducting betting transactions, was a "place" used as a betting-house within the meaning of section 407 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, and that a person who was not the tenant of the ground, or employed by him, but was the person who had conducted the betting there, was rightly convicted of a contravention of that section. Flannagan v. Hill, Dec. 20, 1904 (J. C.), p. 26.

Statutory Offences—Betting and Gaming—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 407—Forfeiture of money found in place where betting conducted.

6. Held that it was not a valid objection to a conviction and sentence for using a place as a betting-house contrary to section 407 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, that the magistrate had not, as part of the sentence, forfeited the money found on the accused when he was apprehended. Flannagan v. Hill, Dec. 20, 1904 (J. C.), p. 26.

Statutory Offences — Betting and Gaming — Implement for practising game of hazard—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 406.

7. In a prosecution under sec. 406 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, against a confectioner, for exhibiting in his shop a machine or implement for playing a game of hazard in order to induce persons to play thereat, it was proved that the machine was put in motion by placing a penny in a slot, that this enabled a spring to be worked which propelled a ball into the upper part of the machine, whence it descended past pins (which caused irregularity in its course) to the bottom of the machine, unless it was intercepted by a sliding cup manipulated by the player, who, if he succeeded in intercepting the ball, received a metal disc entitling him to twopenceworth of goods in the shop, and, if he failed, forfeited his penny. There was no part of the machine where the ball could descend that the manipulator could not reach with the sliding cup. It was found by the magistrate that, although a certain amount of success in working the machine could be acquired by practice, yet that to an ordinary member of the public having no special opportunity of acquiring skill at it, its working depended on chance. Held that the machine or implement was an implement for playing a game of hazard within the meaning of the section. Forte v. Dewar—Ogilvie v. Benigno, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 82.

8. Held in a prosecution under sec. 406 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, for exhibiting an implement for playing a game of hazard in order to induce persons to play thereat, that it was not sufficient to prevent a conviction under section 406 that the player, irrespective of success or failure, received an article of some value, but of less value than the sum paid for playing. Forte v. Dewar—Ogilvie v. Benigno, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 82.

Statutory Offences—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 49, General Rule 24, and sec. 51 and Special Rules—Winding-Engineman—Re- sponsibility of Manager—Person not qualified allowed to work engine for raising material only.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

9. Held that section 49, General Rule 24, of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, with regard to the qualifications and duties of winding-enginemen, and a special rule in force at a particular mine under section 51 of that Act, forbidding the winding-engineman to allow any person to interfere with the engine while being wrought, applied when the engine was being used for raising and lowering material as well as when it was being used for raising and lowering persons; and that a colliery manager, who had permitted a person not qualified in respect of age to raise material but not persons by means of the winding-engine when it was under the charge of a qualified winding-engineman, had failed to the best of his power to enforce the special rule, and was consequently guilty of a contravention of section 51 of the Act. Soutar v. Clark, Dec. 15, 1904 (J. C.), p. 1.

Statutory Offences—Poaching—Game (Scotland) Act, 1832, sec. 1.

10. In a summary prosecution against five persons for trespassing in pursuit of game or conies in the daytime, contrary to the Game (Scotland) Act, 1832, sec. 1, the prosecutor concluded for the forfeiture and payment by each person of a sum not exceeding £2, being the maximum penalty attached to the offence when committed by fewer than five persons. Held that although five persons were alleged to have participated in the trespass the prosecutor was entitled to restrict himself to the minor offence and the minor penalty. Saunders v. Paterson, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 58.

Statutory Offences—Poaching—Proof of title to prosecute—Game Tenant.

11. Held that in a prosecution for day poaching, where it was alleged in the complaint that the prosecutor was the game tenant, and no objection had been taken to the prosecutor's title to prosecute at the outset, it was not necessary for the prosecutor to prove his title. Saunders v. Paterson, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 58.

Statutory Offences—Salmon Fisheries—Act 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109, sec. 11—Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862, sec. 33.

12. In a prosecution for using a fixed engine to catch salmon in the Solway Firth, contrary to the English Act 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109, sec. 11, and the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862, sec. 33, which made the provisions of the English Act with regard to the use of fixed engines applicable to the waters of the Solway Firth in Scotland as the same should be fixed by the Commissioners, opinion per cur. that the complaint was irrelevant because it failed to state that the Commissioners under the Act of 1862 had made sec. 11 of the English Act applicable to the locus of the alleged illegal fishing. Phyn v. Kenyon, Feb. 21, 1905 (J. C.), p. 47.

13. In a prosecution for using a fixed engine to catch salmon in the Solway Firth, contrary to 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109, sec. 11, and the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862, sec. 33, it was found by the Sheriff that the accused were fishermen in the employment of the tenant of the salmon-fishings in question, and that they used the alleged fixed engine complained of in accordance with their master's instructions. Held that the accused were not "owners" of the fixed engine in the sense of sec. 11 of the Act 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109, and were therefore not liable for penalties under that section. Phyn v. Kenyon, Feb. 21, 1905 (J. C.), p. 47.

Procedure—Indictment—Instance—Private Prosecutor—Competency—Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1887, sec. 2—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, sec. 2 (6).

14. Held that apart from the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, an indictment in the Sheriff Court at the instance of a private prosecutor for his private interest with concurrence of the Lord Advocate was not competent, and that the proviso in sec. 2 (6) of that Act, assuming it to apply to Scotland, does not by implication make such an indictment competent. Question, whether indictment is competent in any Court at the instance of a private prosecutor with concurrence of the Lord Advocate. Dunbar v. Johnston, Dec. 22, 1904, p. 40.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Procedure—Proof—Witness—Commission to examine witness abroad—Act 1587, cap. 91.

15. The Court of Justiciary will not grant a commission to examine a witness abroad with a view to his deposition being read to the jury at the trial, such evidence being contrary to the Act 1587, cap. 91, and to the practice of the Court of Justiciary since its institution. H. M. Advocate v. Hunter, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 73.

Procedure—Proof—Witness—Evidence of youth released under First Offenders Act, 1887—Competency.

16. A, B, and C having been charged with theft the charge was not proceeded with against A and B. C pleaded guilty, and was conditionally released under the First Offenders Act. The prosecutor having brought a new complaint against A and B tendered C as a witness. Held that C's evidence was admissible. Todd v. Priestly, July 14, 1905 (J. C.), p. 94.

Summary Procedure—Complaint—Relevancy—Specification—Statutory Offence—Motor Car Act, 1903, sec. 1, subsec. (1).

17. A complaint under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts set forth that the accused, time and place libelled, "did drive a motor car on" a highway libelled, "negligently, whereby said car came into collision with a horse and van which was then on said highway, contrary to the Motor Car Act, 1903, section 1." The Sheriff-substitute dismissed the complaint as irrelevant in respect that there was no specification of the modus of negligence. On appeal held that no further specification of modus was necessary, and that the complaint was relevant. Todrick v. Dennelar, Dec. 15, 1904 (J. C.), p. 8.

Summary Procedure—Complaint—Relevancy—Act 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109, sec. 11—Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862, sec. 33.

18. In a prosecution for using a fixed engine to catch salmon in the Solway Firth, contrary to the English Act 24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109, sec. 11, and the Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862, sec. 33, which made the provisions of the English Act with regard to the use of fixed engines applicable to the waters of the Solway Firth in Scotland as the same should be fixed by the Commissioners, opinion per cur. that the complaint was irrelevant because it failed to state that the Commissioners under the Act of 1862 had made sec. 11 of the English Act applicable to the locus of the alleged illegal fishing. Phyn v. Kenyon, Feb. 21, 1905 (J. C.), p. 47.

Summary Procedure—Complaint—Penalty—Poaching—Game (Scotland) Act, 1832, sec. 1.

19. In a summary prosecution against five persons for trespassing in pursuit of game or conies in the daytime, contrary to the Game (Scotland) Act, 1832, sec. 1, the prosecutor concluded for the forfeiture and payment by each person of a sum not exceeding £2, being the maximum penalty attached to the offence when committed by fewer than five persons. Held that although five persons were alleged to have participated in the trespass the prosecutor was entitled to restrict himself to the minor offence and the minor penalty. Saunders v. Paterson, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 58.

Summary Procedure—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, sec. 2 (6).

20. Question, whether the proviso in sec. 2 (6) of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, that a person charged before a Court of summary jurisdiction shall be informed of his right to be tried on indictment, applies to Scotland. Dunbar v. Johnston, Dec. 22, 1904 (J. C.), p. 40.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Summary Procedure—Conduct of Trial—Recall of witness—Evidence (Scotland) Act, 1852, sec. 4.

21. Opinion, that in a summary prosecution for day poaching at the instance of a person alleged in the complaint to be the game tenant it was competent for the Sheriff-substitute, ex proprio motu, after both the prosecutor and the accused had closed their proof, and been heard in argument, to recall a witness for the prosecution to prove the prosecutor's title to prosecute. Saunders v. Paterson, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 58.

Summary Procedure—Conviction in Absence—Record of Proceedings—Citation—Omission to state that accused duly summoned—Execution of Citation not produced as evidence—Summary Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1864, secs. 6, 7, and 16, and Schedule I.

22. To entitle a Sheriff or Magistrate to dispose of a summary complaint in the absence of the respondent in terms of sec. 7 of the Summary Procedure Act, 1864, it is necessary that he should have proof that the respondent has been duly cited. The execution of citation lodged with the Sheriff-clerk will not be regarded as satisfying the condition when it is not noted on the record of the proceedings as having been produced in evidence. Powdrell v. Galloway, Dec. 15, 1904 (J. C.), p. 9.

Summary Procedure—Conviction and Sentence—Signature by one magistrate when three alleged to be present.

23. In a suspension of a conviction and sentence under a summary complaint the complainer averred that, while the conviction and sentence was signed by one magistrate only, there were three magistrates present on the bench at the trial, who all took part in the deliberations on the case. The record of procedure bore that the trial was in presence of the only magistrate who had signed. Held that, the procedure being ex facie of the record quite regular, there was nothing in the averments of the complainer to entitle him to suspension of the conviction, and motion for inquiry as to whether the magistrates who did not sign in fact acted at the trial, refused. Wright v. Thomson, Dec. 16, 1904 (J. C.), p. 18.

Summary Procedure—Conviction and Sentence—Betting and Gaming Offences—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 407—Forfeiture of money found in place where betting conducted.

24. Held that it was not a valid objection to a conviction and sentence for using a place as a betting-house contrary to section 407 of the Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, that the magistrate had not, as part of the sentence, forfeited the money found on the accused when he was apprehended. Flannagan v. Hill, Dec. 20, 1904 (J. C.), p. 26.

Summary Procedure—Sentence—Imprisonment—Summary Procedure Act, 1864, sec. 18 (6).

25. Opinion per cur. that in the case of complaints for contravention of an Act of Parliament which imposes a penalty for contravention but contains no special provision for the recovery thereof or for the substitution of a term of imprisonment in default of payment, section 18 (6) of the Summary Procedure Act, 1864, does not authorise the granting of a warrant for the detention of a respondent "for" a specified term "unless the penalty shall be sooner paid." Todd v. Magowan, June 27, 1905 (J. C.), p. 50.

Summary Procedure—Sentence—Imprisonment—Summary Procedure Act, 1864, sec. 18 (6), Schedule K (6).

26. Schedule K (6) of the Summary Procedure Act, 1864, supplies (in cases where it is inexpedient to issue a warrant of arrestment, poinding and sale) a form of warrant for imprisonment, in default of payment of a penalty, for a specified period, unless the penalty be paid before its termination, but provides that this form is only to be used "where the Acts founded on authorise imprisonment for a specified period." Opinion per cur. that the words "authorise imprisonment" could not be read as "do not exclude imprisonment," and that consequently it was not competent to use this form of warrant in a case where the Act imposing the penalty did not authorise imprisonment for a specified period in default of payment. Todd v. Magowan, June 27, 1905 (J. C.), p. 50.

JUSTICIARY CASES—Continued.

Review—Suspension—Mora—Acquiescence—Sentence implemented.

27. A suspension of a conviction and sentence upon a summary complaint was presented fourteen months after the conviction had been pronounced and the sentence implemented. The complainer explained that he had objected to the relevancy of the charge, and that the first six months of the delay was due to his having waited for the result of an appeal to the High Court in another case, raising the same question, which was not decided until five months after his conviction, and that the subsequent delay was due to the fault of the Police Court officials. The Court refused the bill. Kelly v. Smith, Dec. 16, 1904 (J. C.), p. 14.

Review—Suspension—Oppression—Order for detention of child in industrial school—Notice to father—Industrial Schools Act, 1866, sec. 15.

28. On 11th August 1904 a boy of eleven was summoned to appear on 15th August in a Burgh Police Court to answer to a charge of theft. The summons was handed to the boy's mother in her shop, and a copy of the complaint was served at the same time. The boy's father was not present. On 15th August the boy appeared in Court, but neither his father nor his mother attended the Court. The boy pleaded guilty. The prosecutor then withdrew the charge of theft, and the magistrate granted an order for the detention of the boy in an industrial school until he attained the age of sixteen. In a suspension at the instance of the boy and his father on the ground that the order for the detention of the boy in the industrial school was oppressive, in respect that it had been pronounced without notice to the father, held that the order was not in the circumstances oppressive, and suspension refused. Hunter v. Waddell, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 61.

See Public Health, 2—Public-House, 3, 4—Sheriff, 5.

LAWFUL DAY. See Burgh, 2.

LEASE. Management and Occupation—Shop—Affixing show-cases outside shop—Reasonable use of premises.

1. The tenant of a draper's shop in Ayr, without the consent of the landlord, put up show-cases attached by stanchions to the outside walls of the shop. Held that, in the absence of proof of general custom of trade in Ayr, this was not impliedly authorised by the lease. British Linen Co. v. Purdie, July 7, 1905, p. 923.

Sequestration for Rent—Hired Furniture—Right of owner of hired furniture to have tenant's own effects sold first.

2. When an article of furniture, hired by a tenant, is sequestrated for the tenant's rent along with the tenant's own effects, and the owner of the hired article desires that it should not be sold unless the tenant's own effects prove insufficient to meet the landlord's claims, the owner of the hired article ought to apply to the Sheriff or to the judge of the roup, to have the sale of the article reserved; if the owner of the hired article does not so apply, and the article is sold while effects belonging to the tenant remain unsold, the owner has no remedy against the landlord, even although he has intimated to the landlord that the article is his property. M'Intosh v. Potts, June 8, 1905, p. 765.

LEASE—Continued.

Improvements — Compensation — Arbitration — Statutory Arbitration — Agreement in Writing — Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, Second Schedule, Part II., secs. 1 and 4.

3. Held that a clause in an agricultural lease referring to two arbiters certain questions of compensation under the lease was not an agreement in writing in the sense of sec. 1 of the Second Schedule, Part II., of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, July 20, 1905, p. 1115.

Improvements—Compensation—Arbitration—Statutory Arbitration—Provision for arbitration in lease—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, sec. 2.

4. An agricultural lease gave the tenant right on the termination of the lease to compensation for manure and feeding stuffs purchased by the tenant and applied to the lands, the amount of compensation to be determined by arbitration in the manner and according to the rules set forth in the lease. On the termination of the lease the tenant lodged a claim in an arbitration under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, in which he claimed, inter alia, compensation for manure and feeding stuffs. Held that the claim, in so far as it was for compensation for manure and feeding stuffs, was incompetent, in respect that such compensation fell to be determined by arbitration under the lease. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, July 20, 1905, p. 1115.

Improvements—Compensation—Statute — Retrospective Effect — Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, First Schedule, Part III.

5. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, gives tenants right to compensation, inter alia, for "laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy." Held that a tenant, whose tenancy terminated less than two years from the date of the Act, was entitled to compensation under this enactment. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, July 20, 1905, p. 1115.

Improvements—Compensation—Notice—Dispensation with notice of consent—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, sec. 4.

6. Held that an agreement under sec. 4 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883, to dispense with written notice need not be in writing. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, July 20, 1905, p. 1115.

Lease of Extraordinary Duration—Ruinous Buildings—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, secs. 196, 197, 200—Sale by order of Sheriff—Title of Purchaser—Liability for Rent—Rights of Lessor.

7. The Burgh Police Act, 1892, provides for the sale by auction of ruinous buildings and waste ground which have become a nuisance and the owners of which cannot be found, for the consignment of the price, and for the completion of a purchaser's title, by recording in the Register of Sasines a decree of the Sheriff declaring the purchase duly completed, and authorising immediate possession of the tenements sold. Ruinous buildings sold under the above enactment were situate on ground let on a building lease for 999 years. After the purchaser had completed his title by recording the Sheriff's decree and had disponed the subjects, an action was raised against the disponee for payment of rent due under the long lease, the pursuer contending that the purchaser had acquired the property tantum et tale as it stood in the lessee. The defender founded on the recorded decree as giving him an unqualified statutory title to the land. The Court sustained the defence. Opinions per Lord M'Laren and Lord Kinnear that the lessor's remedy was to claim against the deposited purchase price. Young's Trustees v. Grainger, Dec. 8, 1904, p. 232.

LEGACY. See Succession.

LEGITIM. See Succession, 2.

LICENCE. See Burgh, 2—Public Health, 1—Public-House.

LIFERENT. See Fee and Liferent—Right in Security, 3—Succession, 13, 14—Trust, 5, 7.

LIMITATION OF ACTION. Public Authorities—Colonel Commanding Volunteer Regiment—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1.

1. In an action for damages against a regiment of volunteers and against the officer commanding the regiment, as representing the regiment, and as an individual, by the father of a child, who was killed on the public street by an ammunition waggon, the horses of which had bolted, the pursuer averred that the accident had been caused by the fault of the commanding officer in not seeing that quiet horses were used, that competent drivers were employed, that the waggons were driven according to military regulations, and that a competent commissioned officer was present to superintend the parade. The action was not raised within six months after the date of the accident. Held that the action against the commanding officer, as an individual, was excluded by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1, on the ground that the fault averred against him was neglect of duty in his public capacity as commanding officer. Wilson v. 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 168.

Public Authorities—Breach of Contract—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1.

2. The Magistrates of a burgh let the town hall, which belonged to the common good of the burgh, to A, a public entertainments manager, for the purpose of giving a public entertainment therein on 7th September 1903. On that day the Magistrates refused to allow A the use of the town hall unless he agreed to omit a wrestling competition from the entertainment, and A having refused to do this, the entertainment did not take place. On 8th April 1904 A brought an action of damages for breach of contract against the Magistrates, who pleaded sec. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Held that the Act did not apply. M'Phie v. Magistrates of Greenock, Dec. 10, 1904, p. 246.

LOAN. Proof—Writ sufficient to prove Loan.

Held that, the passing of money from A to B having been proved by means of a cheque, post entries in pencil in B's ledger and an entry by B in a statement of account between himself and A were sufficient to establish that the money passed from A to B under a contract of loan. Hope v. Derwent Rolling Mills Co., Limited, June 27, 1905, p. 837.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Audit of County Council Accounts—Illegal Payments—Surcharge by Secretary for Scotland on persons "making" the payments—Finality of Secretary's determination—Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, secs. 70 and 75.

The Secretary for Scotland, on a report by a county auditor, under sec. 70, subsec. (5), of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, disallowed certain payments made out of county funds, and surcharged them upon the individuals who signed and countersigned the cheques in terms of sec. 75, subsec. (1). The county auditor having brought an action in the Sheriff Court against the persons surcharged by the Secretary for Scotland for decree for the amounts of the cheques, the defenders maintained that they were not liable on the grounds (1) that the Secretary's determination was not final as regarded the legality of the payments in question, and that the payments were legal, and (2) that, in any view, the Secretary's determination was ultra vires in so far as it surcharged the defenders, in respect that they were not the persons "making" the payments within the meaning of the Act, since they had acted merely ministerially in signing and countersigning the cheques. Held (1) that as regarded the legality of the payments in question the determination of the Secretary for Scotland was final and not open to review; and (2) that the defenders had rightly been surcharged, in respect that, being the persons who had signed or countersigned the cheques, they were the persons "making" the payments in the sense of the Act. County Auditor of Lanark v. Lambie, July 20, 1905, p. 1049.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT—Continued.

LOCUS PŒNITENTIÆ. See Contract, 2.

LUNACY. See Poor, 3.

MANDATARY. See Process, 8.

MARRIAGE. See Husband and Wife.

MARRIAGE-CONTRACT. Antenuptial—Alimentary Provision—Power to trustees to advance trust funds to spouses—Spouses a majority of trustees.
1. An antenuptial marriage-contract appointed the spouses and the wife's father the sole trustees, and the trustees were empowered at the joint request of the spouses to advance such portion of the trust-estate to the husband as the trustees might think right. Under the marriage-contract the wife had a liferent allenarly, which was declared not to be affectable by her own or her husband's debts or deeds or the diligence of their creditors. Held that as the spouses were a majority of the trustees, and might consequently lend any part of the trust funds to the husband, the marriage-contract was not effectual to protect the wife's liferent. M'Callum v. M'Culloch's Trustees, Dec. 22, 1904, p. 337.

Antenuptial—Assignation of Acquirenda—Estate acquired by Wife after Dissolution of Marriage.
2. By antenuptial contract of marriage a wife conveyed to trustees "her whole means and estate which she might acquire or succeed to." Held that estate to which the wife succeeded after the dissolution of the marriage did not fall under the clause of assignation of acquirenda. Boyd's Trustees v. Boyd, March 14, 1905, p. 576.

Antenuptial—Assignation of Acquirenda—Conquest—Accumulations of income.
3. By an antenuptial marriage-contract executed in 1848, the wife bound herself to convey to the trustees the whole funds and estate, real and personal, which she might thereafter "conquest and acquire by purchase, succession, or otherwise." The trustees were directed to pay the income of the trust-estate to the wife during her life, for her own separate benefit and use, exclusive of the jus mariti. Held (aff. judgment of First Division) that the clause of conquest did not extend to estate which, as ascertained at the dissolution of the marriage, consisted of, or was purchased with, accumulations of the wife's income. Dunbar Dunbar v. Dunbar Dunbar, April 11, 1905 (H. L.), p. 92.

Vesting.
4. By antenuptial contract of marriage the husband conveyed to trustees £5000 as an alimentary fund for behoof of the family establishment, with power to the trustees to pay over the free income to either of the spouses, and to continue such payments until the death or re-marriage of the survivor; "and upon the death or re-marriage of the said survivor the principal sum or the investments on which it stands shall belong and be made over in equal sums to and among the children equally of the marriage," declaring that the shares of any children who might be minors at the time should be held and administered by the trustees for their behoof until their majority, and that, in the event of the predecease of any of them before majority, their shares should belong to their lawful issue, and, failing issue, should accresce to their surviving brothers and sisters; "in the event of failure of issue of the present intended marriage," the said sum to be at the disposal of the spouses; which provisions in favour of children were declared to be in full satisfaction of their legal rights on the death of their father. Held that a proportionate share of the estate vested in a son who survived the dissolution of the marriage and attained majority but predeceased the survivor of the spouses. Boyd's Trustees v. Boyd, March 14, 1905, p. 576.

MARRIAGE-CONTRACT—Continued.

See Revenue, 1—Succession, 2.

MASTER AND SERVANT. Nature and Constitution—Engagement "for one year certain"—Shipping Agent—Tacit Relocation—Termination of contract.

1. By letter, dated 29th December 1891, the manager of the North British Railway Company appointed Stevenson, a coal exporter, to be "agent for this Company as from 1st ulto. (for the purpose of attending to the Company's interests in connection with their shipping trade to Hamburg at Bo'ness, Burntisland, and Methil), at a salary of £450 per annum, for one year certain." Stevenson's duty as agent was to endeavour to get coal taken by the Railway Company's lines to the ports named and shipped thence to Hamburg. On 7th December 1892 the contract was renewed "for another year." Thereafter Stevenson continued to discharge the duties of agent until 1900 without formal reappointment. He always received his salary in one sum for each year ending 31st October. On 2d January 1901 the Railway Company gave Stevenson notice that his services would not be required after three months from that date. In an action by Stevenson against the Railway Company for payment of the balance of his salary to 31st October 1901, held after a proof that the contract between the pursuer and the defenders was a yearly contract, and, therefore, that the defenders were not entitled to terminate it, after a year had begun, on three months' notice. Stevenson v. North British Railway Co., July 20, 1905, p. 1106.

Liability of Master for Servant—Slander by Servant.

2. A master is liable for a slander uttered by his servant while acting within the scope of his employment, although without special instructions. So held where the master was a voluntary association.

Where the pursuer in an action of slander alleged that a letter containing defamatory expressions had been written by the defenders' secretary in the course of their business, the Court approved of an issue "whether the defenders by their general secretary and manager wrote and dispatched" the letter complained of. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 1, subsec. (1)—Accident arising out of and in the course of the employment—"Accident"—Voluntary attempt to rescue fellow-workman.

3. A steamship was moored to a quay in a dock discharging her cargo under a stevedore, who had contracted with her owners to unload her. The labourers in the employment of the stevedore were each appointed to work in connection with a particular hold of the vessel, either on board her or on the quay. A, who was employed on the quay to discharge cargo from the afterhold, and who did not require in the performance of his duty to go on board the vessel, on being informed that one of his fellow-workmen employed in the forehold was lying there in an unconscious condition owing to inhaling noxious gas, offered to attempt a rescue, and after a handkerchief had been tied round his mouth, was lowered into the forehold, where both he and the man he had attempted to rescue were suffocated by carbonic acid gas. A acted without instructions from his employer—the stevedore—who had gone for rescue appliances. A's mother brought a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, against the steamship owners as the undertakers in the sense of the Act. Held that A met his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 1, subsec. (1), and that the respondents were liable in compensation to A's mother. London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. Brown, Feb. 16, 1905, p. 488.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 1, subsec. (2) (b)—Action for reparation by person found not entitled to compensation.

4. Held that a claimant who had been refused compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, on the ground that she was not a dependant of the deceased workman, was not thereby barred under sec. 1, subsec. (2) (b), of the Act from raising an action of reparation at common law, or under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, against the deceased's employer. M'Donald v. James Dunlop & Co. (1900), Limited, Feb. 25, 1905, p. 533.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 1, subsec. (2)—Injury "attributable" to serious and wilful misconduct.

5. A miner while riding on the top of a loaded hutch in the mine, in breach of one of the rules in force in the mine, was killed by the fall of a stone from the roof of the tunnel in which the hutch was running. Held that although the miner was guilty of serious and wilful misconduct his death was not "attributable" thereto in the sense of section 1, subsection 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that his widow was not barred from claiming compensation. Glasgow Coal Co., Limited, v. Sneddon, Feb. 14, 1905, p. 485.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 4—Claim against undertakers and employers jointly and severally—Competency.

6. A workman, while engaged in the employment of a glass-merchant in repairing the glass on the roof of a factory occupied by a firm of wool manufacturers, fell from a scaffold on the roof and was killed. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, his widow and children claimed compensation from the glass-merchant and the firm of wool manufacturers, "jointly and severally, or severally, or in such proportions between them as to the Court should seem just." Held that as the Act imposed no joint liability, the application, as directed against the two defenders jointly and severally, was incompetent, and application dismissed. Herd v. Summers, June 28, 1905, p. 870.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7—Factory—Dock—Ship in dry dock undergoing repair—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, sec. 23.

7. Shipowners took a ship into a dry dock, which they had hired for the purpose of repairing the ship. A workman, who had served as ship's carpenter on board the ship during one voyage, and was engaged for her next voyage, in the interval between the voyages was employed by the shipowners in the work of repairing the ship. While engaged in unshackling the ship's cable, in order to turn it end for end, he fell into the dock, and sustained injuries from which he died. Held that when the accident happened he was employed as a workman in the repair of a ship in or about a "factory," in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that the shipowners were liable to pay compensation. Cayzer, Irvine, & Co. v. Dickson, June 3, 1905, p. 723.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7 (1) and (2)—"Undertaker"—"Factory"—"Warehouse"—"Occupier"—Purchaser of Goods stored in warehouse—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, sec. 104.

8. The owner of 600 bolls of peas lying in bulk in a grain store belonging to a warehouseman sold 200 bolls thereof to a firm, who received a delivery-order therefor. The grain store was a "warehouse" within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. Held that the purchasers were not "occupiers" of the store in the sense of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, sec. 104, and that the dependants of a carter in their employment, who was killed by the fall of a bag while taking delivery of part of the peas at the store, were not entitled to compensation from his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Ramsay v. Mackie, Nov. 19, 1904, p. 106.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7 (1) and (2)—Factory—Warehouse—Uncovered yard used for storage of material—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, sec. 104 (1).

9. A workman was injured while breaking stones in the employment of the Corporation of Perth by an accident which occurred in a yard in Perth belonging to the Corporation. The yard was uncovered, but at the side of it was a large shed in which implements were kept and work was done in wet weather. The yard was principally used to store materials for the repair of roads and drains and for other works executed by the Corporation either on its own account or to a small extent for private individuals, and it contained bings of stone which the workman was employed in breaking at the time of the accident. No mechanical power was used in the yard. Held that the yard was not a warehouse in the ordinary sense of the word, and therefore not a factory within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Opinions that the reference to warehouses in sec. 104 (1) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, was not to warehouses in general, but merely to warehouses used in connection with docks. M'Ewan v. Magistrates of Perth, June 2, 1905, p. 714.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7 (1) and (2)—Mine—Siding—Private Railway from mine to main line—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 75.

10. A mine was connected with a main line of railway by a private line, about a mile and a quarter in length. At a point in this private line, about 800 yards from the mine, there was a drum-house and sidings connected therewith. At this point an engine-driver in the employment of the mineowners was accidentally killed in the course of his employment. In an application by his mother for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, held that the place where the accident occurred was on, or in, or about a "mine," within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Anderson v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., Limited, Dec. 6, 1904, p. 187.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7 (1) and (2)—Mine—"About" mine—Railway Company's Siding—Private Road to mine—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 75.

11. A workman employed as a carter at a coal mine sustained fatal injuries while transferring timber to a colliery cart from a railway waggon at a railway siding belonging to and in the occupation of a railway company. The place where the accident occurred was about 400 yards from the pit, the distance being made up of (1) railway siding (123 yards), (2) the breadth of a public road, and (3) a private cart road leading to the pit (259 yards). Held that the workman was not injured in the course of employment "on, or in, or about" "a mine" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 7. Coylton Coal Co. v. Davidson, June 6, 1905, p. 727.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7—"Undertakers"—"Engineering Work."

12. A workman in the employment of a firm of boilermakers was injured in the course of repairing a boiler in a spinning-mill belonging to a third person. The work in which he was engaged at the time of the accident was all done by hand, and no mechanical power was being used, although there was on the premises steam power available for use. Held (1) that, as the spinning-mill was not a factory occupied by the workman's employers, it was not a factory of which they were the undertakers in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 7; (2) that the work in which the workman was engaged was not an engineering work in the sense of the Act; and therefore (3) that the workman was not entitled to compensation under the Act. Cooper & Greig v. Adam, May 30, 1905, p. 681.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7, subsec. (2)—"Workman"—Contractor—"Undertaker."

13. An estate owner, through his factor, engaged a man to quarry from a quarry on the estate stone blocks for wire fences and farm buildings to meet estate requirements, in such quantities as the factor should direct. He was to be paid 5s. a day, though in fact he was not paid daily, and might employ assistants to be paid through him at the same rate. The estate forester visited the quarry, and kept a note of the days on which the quarryman worked. The tools were supplied partly by the quarryman and partly by the estate. He was told where he was to work, but was free to choose the part of the quarry where the excavation was to be made. The quarryman having been injured by an explosion while engaged in his work, claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, from the estate owner. The Sheriff disallowed the claim on the ground that the claimant was a contractor and not a workman. The claimant appealed upon a stated case, in which the only question put was whether the claimant was a servant or a workman in the sense of the Act. Held that the claimant was a servant or workman in the sense of the Act.

Opinions reserved (per the Lord President and Lord M'Laren) whether a workman could at the same time be a contractor and a workman in the sense of the Act.

Question (per Lord M'Laren) whether a landed proprietor who works a quarry on his estate for estate purposes is an "undertaker" in the sense of the Act. Paterson v. Lockhart, July 13, 1905, p. 954.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7 (2) (b), and First Schedule 1 (a)—Dependants—Dependence in law or in fact.

14. In a claim by a widow for compensation for the death of her son it was proved that the applicant was, at the date of the death, undergoing a sentence of confinement in a State Reformatory for Inebriates, that during the four years preceding she had been in prison with the exception of ten months, and that during that period she had occasionally earned a little by outdoor work, but was otherwise entirely dependent upon her son, who had contributed 5s. or 6s. a week towards her support. Held that the applicant was not wholly or partially dependent on her son's earnings at the time of his death within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 7, and compensation refused. Robert Addie & Sons' Collieries, Limited, v. Trainer, Nov. 22, 1904, p. 115.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, section 7, subsection (2)—Dependants.

15. A workman's daughter, who had previously been earning wages, after her mother's death remained at home to keep her father's house, getting from him board, lodging, and clothing, but no wages. The workman was killed by accident in the course of his employment. Held that the daughter was a dependant of the workman in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 7. Moyes v. William Dixon, Limited, Jan. 13, 1905, p. 386.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, sec. 7 (2)—Dependants—"In part dependent upon the earnings of the workman."

16. The father of a workman who died from injuries sustained in the course of his employment claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The son's average weekly earnings from his employment were £1, 4s. 1d. He also practised a systematic course of betting, which brought him a substantial profit. The father, who was a widower, 54 years of age, and without dependants, suffered from bronchitis and rheumatism, and his capacity for work was consequently precarious, but his average weekly earnings during a period of forty weeks were £1, 4s. 11d. The son made payments to his father which averaged 10s. per week. Father and son did not live together. Held that the father was not in part dependent upon the earnings of his son within the meaning of section 7 (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Sir Wm. Arrol & Co., Limited, v. Kelly, July 6, 1905, p. 906.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, First Schedule, section 1 (b)—Average weekly earnings—Continuity of employment—Miner employed by contractors passing into employment of mine owners.

17. A miner employed by a contractor in a coal-mine was dismissed from his employment on 7th October. On Friday 9th October he got employment from the coalmaster in the same mine. On Monday 12th October he was injured in the course of his employment. In a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, against his employer, held that in estimating his average weekly earnings, his earnings under the contractor could not be taken into account. Hunter v. William Baird & Co., Limited, Dec. 17, 1904, p. 304.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, First Schedule, sec. (2)—Wage-earning capacity.

18. Opinion, that while the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, First Schedule, sec. (2), requires an arbitrator in fixing the amount of a weekly payment to have regard to the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident, and to the average amount he is earning after the accident, the latter is not conclusive as to the workman's wage-earning capacity. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co., July 18, 1905, p. 975.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, First Schedule, sec. (11)—Medical examination of workman—Certificate of medical practitioner appointed under the Act—Review of Weekly Payments.

19. A mason's labourer, sixty-six years of age, whose left eye had been injured in the course of his employment, was awarded under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the maximum weekly payment for total incapacity. Prior to an application by the employers to have the payment diminished, the workman was examined by one of the medical men appointed by the Secretary of State. The medical certificate bore that the workman's right eye was healthy, and the vision good, but that the left eye was seriously defective. "His disability is, however, at present great enough to unfit him for his usual occupation of a mason's labourer, though I am of opinion he is quite fit for any work where he would not have to exercise for the safety of life or limb that nice discrimination as to distances for which the sight of two eyes is necessary." Neither party moved for proof. The Sheriff held (1) that the certificate was conclusive as to the workman's condition, and that other evidence as to the workman's present earning capacity was incompetent; and (2) that the certificate did not shew that the workman's earning capacity had increased to such an extent as to justify a reduction of the weekly payment. In an appeal, held (1) that the certificate of the medical practitioner under section 11 was conclusive evidence of the workman's condition; and (2) that as the certificate bore that the workman was unfit for his usual occupation, although fit for work of a particular character, and as his employers did not state or offer to prove that he could get such employment, the Sheriff was entitled to decide the question of compensation without further evidence. Bryce & Co. v. Connor, Dec. 6, 1904, p. 193.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, First Schedule, secs. (11) and (12)—Medical Examination of Workman—Obstruction—Review of weekly payment.

20. An injured workman, in receipt of weekly payments under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, went to Australia without intimating to his employers that he was going or leaving his address. In an application by the employers for review of the weekly payments, the Court suspended in hoc statu the workman's right to the weekly payments on the ground that he was obstructing medical examination in the sense of sec. (11) of the First Schedule of the Act. Finnie & Son v. Duncan, Dec. 13, 1904, p. 254.

21. A workman who was receiving weekly payments as compensation fixed by agreement under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and who had twice submitted himself for examination by a medical practitioner provided by the employers, and been certified not to have recovered, immediately after the second examination went to Ireland to reside with his father. About two months thereafter he was again required to submit himself at Glasgow for examination by the employers' medical man. He offered to submit himself to a medical man near the place where he was residing in Ireland, but he refused to come to Glasgow for examination unless his expenses were paid. Held that the workman had not refused to submit himself to medical examination or obstructed the same in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Schedule I., section 11, and that the employers were not entitled to suspend payment of his compensation. William Baird & Co., Limited, v. Kane, Jan. 28, 1905, p. 461.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, First Schedule, secs. (12), (13) —Compensation—Amount—Nominal award of a penny per week—Competency.

22. In an application by an employer to have a weekly payment to an injured workman reviewed and ended, held that it is incompetent for the arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, if either party objects, to postpone the determination of the question of compensation by making an interim nominal award of one penny per week. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co., July 18, 1905, p. 975.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, First Schedule, sec. 14*—Compensation—Setting off expenses against weekly payment.*

23. Held that an employer, who had been found liable in a weekly payment under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to a workman, could not set off against that payment a sum awarded to him as expenses against the workman in an application for the diminution of the weekly payment. Rosewell Gas Coal Co. v. M'Vicar, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 290.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897, Second Schedule, sec. (14) (c) —A. S. 3d June 1898, sec. 9 (a)—Stated Case—Non-compliance with regulations for obtaining.

24. On the last day allowed for taking an appeal against an award by a Sheriff dismissing a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the claimant's Edinburgh agent telegraphed to the local agent to apply for a case for appeal. The local agent being out of town, his clerk obtained the services of another agent, who went to the Sheriff Court office and wrote on the interlocutor sheet "The pursuer appeals against the foregoing judgment, and requests a case to be stated." He did not set forth any question of law, and he did not deposit £1, as required by the Act of Sederunt 3d June 1698, sec. 9 (a). He was informed by the clerk in attendance at the Sheriff Court office that a deposit was not necessary. The Sheriff stated a case. At the hearing on the appeal the deposit of £1 had not been made. The Court, on the objection of the respondents, dismissed the appeal in respect of the appellant's failure to comply with the regulations enacted by sec. 9 (a) of the Act of Sederunt, 3d June 1898. Murphy v. Blair & White, June 28, 1905, p. 863.

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897—A. S., 3d June 1898, sec. 9 (f)—Stated Case—Transmission of Process.

25. In a stated case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, one of the parties moved for an order on the Sheriff-clerk to transmit the process, on the ground that there was a note appended by the Sheriff-substitute to his interlocutor which it was advisable that the Court should have before them when the stated case came up for decision. The Court refused the motion. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Clelland, May 20, 1905, p. 654.

Workmen's Compensation Acts—Act 1897—Stated Case—Expenses of Stated Case—Adjustment of case—Fee to counsel.

26. The respondent in an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, was found entitled to "the expenses of the stated case." The Auditor taxed off all the items charged in the respondent's account of expenses in connection with the adjustment of the stated case, amounting in all to £7, 7s. 2d. The respondent having objected to the Auditor's report, the Court held that "the expenses of the stated case" included the legitimate expenses in connection with the adjustment of the case, and allowed £2, 2s. of modified expenses under this head. Fee to counsel for revising the case disallowed. London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. Brown, Feb. 16, 1905, p. 488.

See Minor and Pupil, 3—Process, 17 to 22, 24—Reparation, 4, 21, 22.

MEDICAL PRACTITIONER. See Contract, 4—Reparation, 15.

MINES AND MINERALS. Right to support—Feu-disposition reserving the minerals—Clause of Exemption from claims for surface damage—Construction—"Persons deriving right from" superior—Right derived from author of superior.

1. The testamentary trustees of the twelfth Duke of Hamilton granted a feu-disposition of a plot of building ground, reserving the minerals, and stipulating that no claim for surface damage should lie against the trustees "or persons deriving right from them." The minerals belonged to and were worked by a company under deeds granted by the twelfth Duke and by the eleventh Duke. Held that the company "derived right from" the trustees within the meaning of the feu-disposition, and consequently were not liable to the feuar for surface damages. Pringle v. Carron Co., June 23, 1905, p. 820.

Right to support—Liability of mineral tenant for damages to feuars—Large increase of feuing subsequent to date of lease—Jus quæsitum tertio.

2. By a lease dated in 1877 Wemyss let an extensive coalfield to a company for thirty years, with a break every four years. The mineral tenants were taken bound to work the coal "by the longwall or other method of complete excavation, and so as to insure the greatest output," but were bound to leave solid unworked masses of coal where it might be necessary for the support of existing buildings on the lands. They further obliged themselves during the currency of the lease "to make compensation . . . for all ground" which they might "use or injure by any of their operations under this tack, and to make good and discharge all damages of what kind soever" which they "may in any way occasion to any lands, crops thereon, houses, or woods, or fences and drains, wells or water-courses, and whether such damage shall be due to the lessors of the colliery or to the landlord, or land tenants, feuars, or others." In 1894 Wemyss feued off a piece of ground, taking the feuar bound to erect thereon a house of a specified value, but reserved to himself and his successors the whole minerals in the ground feued, declaring that the feuar should have no claim for any damage against him and his successors caused by the working of the minerals, but reserving to the feuar all claims which might be competent to him in respect of any such damage against the "tenants or tacksmen of the minerals and others . . . in so far as such tenants or tacksmen may be liable for such damage, without having any right of recourse or relief, or any other remedy" against Wemyss or his successors. At or about the date of this feu-disposition Wemyss gave off about thirty other feus in terms, mutatis mutandis, identical with the foregoing, and houses were built on each feu. The houses were all miners' houses or houses of a similar class. In 1903 the feuar under the feu-disposition above set forth brought an action against the mineral tenants for damages on account of injury to the house on his feu admittedly occasioned solely by subsidence due to the complete excavation of the coal in terms of the mineral lease. Held (1) that under his feu-disposition the pursuer's common law right to support of the surface was reserved to him intact except as regarded the liability of the superior, Wemyss, directly or by way of relief; (2) that the defenders, being bound by their lease to make good all damage to "feuars," were liable in damages to the feuars directly and without right of relief against Wemyss; (3) that the fact that a large number of feus had been granted and houses erected thereon did not affect the liability of the defenders to the pursuer, as a feuar, whatever might have been the liability of the defenders in a question with Wemyss himself; and therefore (4) that the pursuer was entitled to damages from the defenders. Dryburgh v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, July 20, 1905, p. 1083.

MINES AND MINERALS—Continued.

Statutory Regulation—Mine—Siding—Private line of railway leading from mine to main line—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 75.

3. Opinion (per the Lord Justice-Clerk) that the whole of a private line leading from a mine to the main line of railway is not a siding adjacent to the mine within the meaning of sec. 75 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887. Anderson v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., Limited, Dec. 6, 1904, p. 187.

4. A workman employed as a carter at a coal mine sustained fatal injuries while transferring timber to a colliery cart from a railway waggon at a railway siding belonging to and in the occupation of a railway company. The place where the accident occurred was about 400 yards from the pit, the distance being made up of (1) railway siding (123 yards), (2) the breadth of a public road, and (3) a private cart road leading to the pit (259 yards). Held that the workman was not injured in the course of employment "on or in or about" "a mine" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 7. Coylton Coal Co. v. Davidson, June 6, 1905, p. 727.

Statutory Regulation—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 49, General Rule 24, and sec. 51 and Special Rules — Winding-Engineman—Responsibility of Manager—Person not qualified allowed to work engine for raising material only.

5. By section 49, General Rule 24, of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, it is enacted that a man not under twenty-two years of age shall be appointed for working machinery which is employed in lowering and raising persons, and shall attend for that purpose during the whole time any person is below ground in the mine. By Special Rule in force under section 51 of the Act it was provided that the engineman should not allow any person to interfere with the engine while being wrought. Held that these general and special rules applied when the engine was being used for raising and lowering material as well as when it was being used for raising and lowering persons; and that a colliery manager who had permitted a person under twenty-two years of age to raise material but not persons by means of the winding-engine when it was under the charge of a qualified winding-engineman, had failed to the best of his power to enforce the Special Rule, and was consequently guilty of a contravention of section 51 of the Act. Soutar v. Clark, Dec. 15, 1904 (J. C.), p. 1.

MINES AND MINERALS—Continued.

See Master and Servant, 5, 13—Railway—Reparation, 22.

MINOR AND PUPIL. Custody—Legitimate Children—Petition for custody—Respondent obstructing execution of service.

1. In a petition by a father for the custody of his infant child against his father-in-law, in whose possession the child was alleged to be, the latter deliberately obstructed and prevented service of the petition upon him. The Court granted the prayer of the petition without service having been effected. Busby v. Clark, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 162.

Custody—Illegitimate Child—Right of mother or her nominee to custody—Petition for custody refused—Custody of Children Act, 1891, sections 1 and 3.

2. Circumstances in which a petition by a mother for the custody of her illegitimate child, whom she had entrusted more than seven years before to the care of her cousin, refused, on the ground that it was not for the best interests of the child to deliver it to the petitioner or her nominee.

Observations by the Lord President upon sections 1 and 3 of the Custody of Children Act, 1891. Mitchell v. Wright, March 14, 1905, p. 568.

Capacity to Contract—Lesion—Enorm Lesion—Compromise of Claims under Workmen's Compensation Act—Reduction on ground of Minority and Lesion—Inadequate Consideration—Effect of offer to reinstate workman in employment.

3. A workman, nineteen years of age, who had his right hand permanently disabled by an accident in the course of his employment and would have been entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, entered, with consent of his father, his curator, into an agreement with his employers, H. & Sons, for compensation, under which he received £25 and an assurance that while the employers could not guarantee a permanent situation they would, so far as they could, give him employment. The workman was subsequently retained in the employment of H. & Sons for three years and six months, when he was dismissed. The workman thereupon raised an action of reduction of the agreement and of a discharge following thereon on the ground of minority and lesion. Held (1) that the money payment was not the only consideration for the discharge which the Court must take into account in deciding the question of lesion; and (2) that the offer of employment was a determining factor in effecting the compromise, and, looking to the circumstances of the parties at the time, was likely to be of such advantage to the minor as to make the compromise reasonable and not liable to reduction on the ground of lesion. Robertson v. S. Henderson & Sons, Limited, June 16, 1905, p. 776.

See Parent and Child.

MORA. Delay in bringing Bill of Suspension—Sentence implemented.

1. A suspension of a conviction and sentence upon a summary complaint was presented fourteen months after the conviction had been pronounced and the sentence implemented. The complainer explained that he had objected to the relevancy of the charge, and that the first six months of the delay was due to his having waited for the result of an appeal to the High Court in another case, raising the same question, which was not decided until five months after his conviction, and that the subsequent delay was due to the fault of the Police Court officials. The Court refused the bill. Kelly v. Smith, Dec. 16, 1904 (J. C.), p. 14.

MORA—Continued.

Discharge—Discharge on Compromise—Discharge conditional on truth, accuracy, and completeness of statement of assets—Written statement incomplete—Presumption of full disclosure—Fraud—Reduction.

2. The City of Glasgow Bank went into liquidation in 1878, under the supervision of the Court, and in 1879, Bain, one of the contributories, settled with the liquidators and was discharged by them of his liabilities to the bank on payment of a sum of money, being the value of his property as disclosed in a written state, which he solemnly declared to be true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief. The state was submitted by him to the liquidators in answer to certain printed queries addressed to him by them, one of which was,—"What property do you possess, and what is its nature and value to the best of your knowledge and belief?" The discharge, which followed on a compromise approved by the Court, bore to be "on the basis, and on condition of the truth, accuracy, and completeness" of the said state. In 1901 the Assets Company, Limited, who were in right of the whole assets of the bank, raised against Bain's trustees an action of reduction of the interlocutor approving of the compromise and of the discharge by the liquidators, on the ground that two promissory-notes granted in Bain's favour by his sons previous to his discharge were not disclosed in the state of his affairs upon which the discharge proceeded. In an appeal held (rev. the judgment of Second Division) (1) that it was not a condition of the discharge that the contributory's disclosure of his assets should be in writing, (2) that as twenty years had elapsed since the date of the discharge the onus lay upon the pursuers of proving that Bain had not made a full disclosure of his assets either in writing or orally, (3) that the pursuers had failed to discharge this onus, and that the defenders were entitled to absolvitor. Bain v. Assets Co., June 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 104.

MOTOR CAR. See Justiciary Cases, 17.

MUNUS PUBLICUM. See Public Officer.

NEWSPAPER. See Advertisement—Insurance, 1—Reparation, 11, 12.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. Public Official—Town-clerk—Burgh Register of Sasines—Authentication of Minutes—Omission of former Town-clerk to authenticate Minutes.

1. Authority granted to the town-clerk of a royal burgh to authenticate and subscribe minutes in the minute-books of the Burgh Register of Sasines which had not been authenticated by his predecessors, and to record the petition and warrant in the Burgh Register of Sasines. Hepburn, Feb. 3, 1905, p. 484.

Statutory Proceedings—Bankruptcy—Sequestration—Gazette Notice—Expenses—Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856, secs. 48 and 67.

2. On 8th May 1905, on the petition of John Somerville & Company and others, creditors of Alexander Ross Mackenzie, Resolis, Mackenzie's estates were sequestrated by the Lord Ordinary on the Bills. The deliverance appointed a meeting of the creditors for the election of a trustee to be held on 18th May. The petitioners having failed to insert the statutory notice of this meeting in the London Gazette of NOBILE OFFICIUM—Continued.

9th May, it became necessary to have another date fixed for the meeting. The petitioners having presented an application for this purpose the Court appointed the meeting to be held on 27th May, and remitted to the Sheriff to proceed, with a declaration that the expenses of the application and procedure connected therewith were not to be allowed against the estate. Somerville & Co., Limited, May 16, 1905, p. 651.

ONUS. See Mora, 2—Patent, 3—Public House, 4—Ship, 1, 2.

PARENT AND CHILD. Illegitimate Children — Aliment — Twins — Arrangement between the parents.

By arrangement between the father and the mother of illegitimate twins each parent took the custody of and supported one of the children. After this arrangement had been in force for about six weeks, the mother brought an action against the father for a yearly contribution towards the aliment of the child in her custody. Held that no ground being alleged for disturbing the agreement between the parents, the father was not liable hoc statu for the contribution claimed. Wilson v. M'Minnin, Feb. 25, 1905, p. 538.

See Minor and Pupil, 1, 2—Poor, 1, 2, 3.

PATENT. Infringement—Master or Pioneer Patent—Mechanical Equivalent.

1. B. patented an invention for the economy of steam in steam steering engines by means of a cut-off valve actuated by the control valve. The object of the invention was to prevent the loss of steam during the intervals in steering when the engine was at rest. Prior patentees had used the same and other similar mechanical devices for the economy of steam in engines of various kinds while at work, but the application of this device to an engine at rest was a novelty, and the result attained—the economy of steam while the engine was at rest—had never been achieved before. In a question with the holder of a patent of later date for a device, also designed to prevent the escape of steam from steam steering engines when the engine was at rest, but using to obtain that result a stop valve worked in unison with the control valve by a steam relay instead of a stop valve worked by the direct mechanical action of the control valve, held that B.'s patent was a master or pioneer patent, and that the new patent was an infringement. Brown v. John Hastie & Co., Limited, Nov. 18, 1904, p. 97.

Infringement — Particulars of breach — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, secs. 29 and 107.

2. In an action for damages for infringement of two patents for the manufacture of electrical insulating sheets the pursuers averred that the defenders, in manufacturing micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth, "have used and employed the inventions protected by the said letters-patent, or one or other of them"; and they further averred that the defenders had purchased from other persons "micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth made in contravention and infringement of the said letters-patent, or one or other of them," and in particular had purchased "micanite made in contravention of said letters-patent," and "machines insulated in infringement of said letters-patent." Held (1) that sec. 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, applied to Scotland, and that, as enacted by that section, particulars of the breach must be set forth, but that they fell to be set forth, in accordance with the forms of process of the Courts in Scotland, in the condescendence, and not in a separate statement; and (2) that the particulars of breach set forth were not sufficient, in respect that they did not specify the manner in which the infringement had taken place, nor which of the two protected processes of manufacture had been infringed. Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited, July 11, 1905, p. 944.

PATENT—Continued.

Infringement—Amended Patent—Damages for Infringement before and after Amendment—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, sec. 20.

3. In an action of damages in respect of amended patents for infringement both before and after amendment, held that, although it was not necessary that separate sums should be claimed as damages in the summons, yet, owing to the heavier onus laid upon the pursuer by sec. 20 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, in proving actionable infringement for the period prior to the amendment, the amounts claimed for breach prior to and after the amendment must be distinguished in the condescendence. Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited, July 11, 1905, p. 944.

Patent Agent—Liability—Negligence — Damages for loss of patent—Defence of invalidity of patent.

4. In an action of damages against patent agents, the pursuer averred that the defenders had charge of two patents held by him, and that they had allowed them to lapse by failing to give him notice that certain payments were necessary to keep them in force. The defenders pleaded that there was no loss, as the patents were invalid by reason of anticipation by prior patents specified. Held that the defence was irrelevant. Alexander Turnbull & Co., Limited, v. Cruickshank & Fairweather, June 23, 1905, p. 791.

PAWNBROKER. See Right in Security, 4.

PAYMENT. Bill of Exchange—Approved Acceptance.

An "approved acceptance" in a mercantile contract means an acceptance to which no reasonable objection can be taken.

A contract of sale provided for payment by "approved acceptance." The seller on 18th September took the buyer's acceptance. On 25th September the seller stopped the goods in transitu. The buyer was sequestrated on 1st October. Held that the acceptance did not operate as payment so as to deprive the seller of his right to stop the goods in transitu. M'Dowall & Neilson's Trustee v. J. B. Snowball Co., Limited, Nov. 8, 1904, p. 35.

See Local Government.

PENALTY. See Contract, 7—Justiciary Cases, 19, 24, 25, 26.

PERSONAL EXCEPTION. Constitution of Marriage—Consent de præsenti—Mental Reservation.

1. A party to a mutual declaration of marriage will not be allowed to plead that he did not truly consent to the marriage if he induced the other party to believe that he did consent. Duran v. Duran, Nov. 18, 1904, p. 87.

Liquidator of Company—Compromise with debtor—Refusal of Liquidator to apply for sanction of Court—Companies Act, 1862, sec. 160.

2. In an action by a company, which was being wound up subject to the supervision of the Court, and its liquidator against an alleged debtor of the company, the defender pleaded that the liquidator having agreed to a compromise of the claim sued for, and having failed to apply to the Court for its sanction, was barred personali exceptione from insisting in the action. The Court repelled this plea upon the ground that there was locus pœnitentiæ until the sanction of the Court had been obtained, and that the liquidator was not bound to apply for the sanction of the Court or to recommend the compromise to it; and per Lord Kinnear also upon the ground that the liquidator could not be barred from insisting in an action brought on behalf of the company and its creditors by an exception personal to himself. Reid & Laidlaw, Limited, v. Reid, Jan. 26, 1905, p. 457.

PERSONAL EXCEPTION—Continued.

Waiver—Breach of Contract—Payment of price without reservation of claim of damages.

3. Circumstances in which held (aff. judgment of Second Division) that payment, without reservation, of the last instalment of the price of a ship, and acceptance of delivery by the purchaser after the date stipulated for delivery, did not import a waiver by the purchaser of his right under a clause in the contract entitling him to a specified sum as damages for late delivery. Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co., Limited, v. Don Jose Ramos Yzquierdo y Castaneda, Nov. 17, 1904 (H. L.), p. 77.

PLEDGE. See Right in Security, 4, 5.

POLICE. Building Regulations—Ruinous Buildings—Owner unknown—Sale by order of Sheriff—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, secs. 196, 197, 200.

1. Ruinous buildings sold under the Burgh Police Act, 1892, secs. 196, 197, and 200, were situate on ground let on a building lease for 999 years. After the purchaser had completed his title by recording the Sheriff's decree and had disponed the subjects, an action was raised against the disponee for payment of rent due under the long lease, the pursuer contending that the purchaser had acquired the property tantum et tale as it stood in the lessee. The defender founded on the recorded decree as giving him an unqualified statutory title to the land. The Court sustained the defence.

Opinions per Lord M'Laren and Lord Kinnear that the lessor's remedy was to claim against the deposited purchase price. Young's Trustees v. Grainger, Dec. 8, 1904, p. 232.

Building Regulations—Street—Statutory Remedy—Declarator and reduction pending statutory appeal—Competency—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 9 (2).

2. The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, by sec. 9 (2), directs that a Register of Streets shall be prepared, in which, inter alia, the width of streets may be entered, and that any proprietor aggrieved by any entry in the register may appeal to the Sheriff, whose decision shall be final. A proprietor of subjects fronting on various streets in Glasgow brought an action in the Court of Session for declarator that the width of streets entered in the register must be the actual width, and that the width entered in certain cases opposite his properties was not the actual width, with conclusions for deletion of the entries and for interdict, and reduction. On the same date he appealed to the Sheriff against these entries. Held that the action, although not incompetent, was premature, and fell to be dismissed. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation, July 19, 1905, p. 1020.

Building Regulations—Street—Width of Street—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 20.

3. In an application for a warrant to erect buildings, held that in fixing the width of a street under the provisions of sec. 20 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, the Master of Works is entitled and bound to apply his mind to the whole circumstances of the case, and to fix what he considers the proper width, even though the result of his determination is to dedicate to the public for street purposes ground which is the private property of the person proposing to build. M'Dougall v. Nisbet, Nov. 17, 1904, p. 55.

But see 5 and 6 infra.

Building Regulations—Street—Width of Street—Formation of Pavement

POLICE—Continued.

—Glasgow Police Act, 1866, sec. 366—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 20.

4. The proprietor of ground adjoining a public street in Glasgow obtained a lining in the Dean of Guild Court for certain buildings upon a plan which shewed that they were to be erected at a distance of 30 feet from the centre of the street in compliance with section 366 of the Glasgow Police Act, 1866. At the time the lining was granted the actual width of one-half of the street at the place in question was 20 feet, and no steps had been taken to fix the width of the street in terms of section 20 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900. After the buildings had been erected a statutory notice at the instance of the Master of Works was served upon the proprietor, calling upon him to lay a foot-pavement on the space of 10 feet intervening between the buildings and the original boundary of the street, and in the course of the proceedings to enforce the notice in the Dean of Guild Court, the width of one-half of the street was fixed at 30 feet under the provisions of section 20 of the Act of 1900. Held (1) that in view of the provisions of section 20 of the Act of 1900 it must be presumed that the lining was granted on condition that one-half of the street, measuring from the centre of the street towards the buildings, should be cleared of all structures and dedicated to the public for street purposes, and (2) that the proprietor was bound to form the foot-pavement in front of the buildings. Neilson v. R. B. Wilson & Co., Nov. 17, 1904, p. 60.

But see 5 and 6 infra.

Building Regulations—Street—Width of Street—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, secs. 4, 9 (2), and 20.

5. Opinion (per cur.) that in preparing the Register of Streets provided for by sec. 9 (2) of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, "the width" of streets when entered therein must be the actual width of the street at the various points in its course, and not an ideal width fixed with a view to a public improvement. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation, July 19, 1905, p. 1020.

Building Regulations—Street—Width of Street—Burgh—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, secs. 4, 9 (2), 18, 20, and 21.

6. Held that, under secs. 20 and 21 of the Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, the Master of Works and the Dean of Guild on appeal from him are not entitled in fixing the width of an existing street to fix such width at anything else than the actual existing width of the street. Hamilton v. Nisbet, July 19, 1905, p. 1034.

Building Regulations—Street—Improving Line of Street—Resolution of Commissioners allowing Buildings to be set forward so as to close up existing Public Street—Effect of General Improvement Scheme—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 157.

7. Held that it was competent for Burgh Commissioners under sec. 157 of the Burgh Police Act, 1892, to allow a building to be set forward with the effect of closing one end of a public lane, the alteration being part of an improvement scheme which provided another entrance for the lane. Parish Council of Rutherglen v. Magistrates of Rutherglen, June 23, 1905, p. 829.

See Burgh,—River, Loch, Sea, 1, 3, 4.

POOR. Pauperisation—Maintenance by School Board of child in Blind Asylum—Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890.

1. The maintenance of a child in a blind asylum by a school board, under the Education of Blind and Deaf-Mute Children (Scotland) Act, 1890, has not the effect of pauperising the child. Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council, June 29, 1905, p. 884.

POOR—Continued.

Settlement—Derivative Settlement—Illegitimate Minor—Mother with Derivative Settlement.

2. Andrew M., an illegitimate child, was born in the parish of Govan. A year after the child's birth the mother married, and through her husband acquired a settlement in the parish of Greenock. When the child was eight years old the mother died. Down to the date of the mother's death the child had lived in the parish of Greenock with his mother and her husband, but after her death the child ceased to live with the husband. Two years after attaining puberty the child became chargeable. In a question between Greenock and Govan, held that the mother having died while the child was still in pupilarity, and the child not having become chargeable until after attaining puberty, the settlement in Greenock possessed by the mother at her death, being a settlement acquired by her through marriage, and not by her own residence, did not enure to the child when he attained puberty; and consequently that the child's settlement was in Govan, the parish of his birth. Greenock Parish Council v. Govan Combination Parish Council, June 29, 1905, p. 884.

Settlement—Pauper Lunatic not forisfamiliated—Residential Settlement of Father—Relief given to son while living with father—Admission of Liability—Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857, sec. 75.

3. In November 1876 a boy, aged fourteen, of weak intellect, and living with his father, received parochial relief from the parish of Montrose, in which his father was then residing. At that date the father had not acquired a residential settlement in Montrose, and, in March 1877, Brechin, the parish of the father's birth, admitted liability for the relief given to the son. In May 1877 the father had acquired a residential settlement in Montrose, unless he was to be regarded as a pauper in respect of the relief given to his son in 1876. The son was never forisfamiliated or able to maintain himself. In September 1891 he was placed in an asylum as a pauper lunatic by order of the Sheriff, and was subsequently supported there by the parish of Brechin. On 6th October 1897 Brechin gave Montrose the statutory notice claiming repayment of the charges incurred on behalf of the pauper. In an action by Brechin against Montrose for repayment of its disbursements since 6th October 1896, one year before the statutory notice, held that Montrose was liable, on the grounds (1) that the son followed the settlement of his father; (2) that the father was not made a pauper by the relief given to his son in 1876, and had acquired a residential settlement in Montrose in May 1877; and (3) that the admission of liability properly made by Brechin in March 1877 was not binding after the father had acquired a residential settlement in Montrose. Brechin Parish Council v. Montrose Parish Council, Dec. 6, 1904, p. 207.

Poor-Rates—Preference—Company—Poor-Law (Scotland) Act, 1845, sec. 88.

4. In a note by the liquidators of a company for authority, inter alia, to take credit for their remuneration, as fixed by the Court, and to pay the law expenses, and to pay the preferable claims as set forth in a schedule, among which was included a claim for poor-rates due by the Company, answers were lodged by a collector of poor-rates, who maintained that the liquidators should be ordained to pay the claim for poor-rates preferably to the liquidators' remuneration and their law expenses. The liquidators stated that their accounts shewed a balance in their hands more than sufficient to pay in full all the preferable claims, after payment of the liquidators' remuneration and law expenses, and that the respondent had been informed of this before he lodged answers. Held that, in respect the liquidators had admitted the claim for poor-rates to a preferential ranking and tendered payment thereof in full, there was no proper question presented to the Court for adjudication on the answers, and note remitted to the Lord Ordinary to proceed. Liquidators of Scottish Drug Depot, Limited, v. Fraser, May 16, 1905, p. 646.

POOR—Continued.

Poor-Rates—Company—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, sec. 1, (1) (3).

5. Opinion, per Lord Low, Ordinary, (1) that the provisions of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, are applicable to Scotland, in so far as they deal with the case of companies which are being wound up under the Companies Acts, and (2) that under section 1, subsections (1) and (3), of that Act, poor-rates due by a company at the commencement of the winding-up thereof do not fall to be paid preferably to the liquidator's fees and the law expenses incurred by him in the liquidation. Liquidators of Scottish Drug Depot, Limited, v. Fraser, May 16, 1905, p. 646.

POST OFFICE. See Reparation, 7.

POWERS. See Succession, 10, 17—Trust, 1, 2, 6.

PRESCRIPTION. See Limitation of Action—Property, 5.

PRESUMPTION. See Mora, 2—Patent, 3—Public-House, 4—Ship, 1, 2.

PROCESS. Citation—Petition for custody of child—Respondent obstructing execution of service.

1. In a petition by a father for the custody of his infant child against his father-in-law, in whose possession the child was alleged to be, the latter deliberately obstructed and prevented service of the petition upon him. The Court granted the prayer of the petition without service having been effected. Busby v. Clark, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 162.

Summons—Instance—Several Pursuers—Competency—Community of Interest.

2. An action was raised at the instance of four pursuers concluding against one defender for separate sums of damages, on the allegation that the pursuers had been induced to purchase shares in a mining syndicate by false and fraudulent statements made to each of them by the defender at different times and different places, the statements in each case being of a similar nature. Held that the action was incompetent, on the ground that the pursuers had no real and true community of interest. Killin v. Weir, Feb. 22, 1905, p. 526.

Summons—Conclusions—Competency—Action against wife and husband concluding for one sum of damages for separate slanders.

3. In an action of damages for slander at the instance of a female servant against her mistress and the husband of the mistress, the pursuer concluded for decree against the defenders "conjunctly and severally, or otherwise severally or according to their respective liabilities as the same may be determined, to make payment to the pursuer of the sum of £400 sterling." The pursuer averred a slander uttered in January 1904 by the wife when the husband was not present, and further averred that in February 1904 the husband "received a letter from the pursuer's agent specially stating the charges made by his wife. In his reply this defender repeated the slanderous statements" of his wife. "By this and subsequent letters he adopted responsibility for the statements" of his wife. Held that the action was incompetent, in respect that it concluded for a lump sum as damages for separate slanders, one uttered by the wife and the other by the husband, without any averment of conspiracy or complicity. Hook v. M'Callum, Feb. 25, 1905, p. 528.

PROCESS—Continued.

Summons—Condescendence—Action for infringement of patent—Particulars of Breach—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, secs. 29 and 107.

4. In an action for damages for infringement of two patents for the manufacture of electrical insulating sheets the pursuers averred that the defenders, in manufacturing micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth, "have used and employed the inventions protected by the said letters-patent, or one or other of them"; and they further averred that the defenders had purchased from other persons "micanite and extra flexible micanite cloth made in contravention and infringement of the said letters-patent, or one or other of them," and in particular, had purchased "micanite made in contravention of said letters-patent," and "machines insulated in infringement of said letters-patent." Held (1) that sec. 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, applied to Scotland, and that in accordance with that section particulars of the breach must be set forth, but that they fell to be set forth, in accordance with the forms of process of the Courts in Scotland, in the condescendence, and not in a separate statement; and (2) that the particulars of breach set forth were not sufficient, in respect that they did not specify the manner in which the infringement had taken place, nor which of the two protected processes of manufacture had been infringed. Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited, July 11, 1905, p. 944.

Summons—Conclusions—Condescendence—Action for Infringement of Patent—Damages for Infringement before and after Amendment—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, sec. 20.

5. In an action of damages in respect of amended patents for infringement both before and after amendment, held that, although it was not necessary that separate sums should be claimed as damages in the summons, yet, owing to the heavier onus laid upon the pursuer by sec. 20 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, in proving actionable infringement for the period prior to the amendment, the amounts claimed for breach prior to and after the amendment must be distinguished in the condescendence. Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited, July 11, 1905, p. 944.

Summons—Amendment—Competency—Summons laid on Bill of Exchange—Alternative conclusion added by amendment.

6. Held that it was competent to amend a summons concluding for payment of the sum due under a bill of exchange by inserting an alternative conclusion for payment of the sum for which the bill was granted, and adding to the condescendence a statement of the circumstances in which the bill was granted. Hope v. Derwent Rolling Mills Co., Limited, June 27, 1905, p. 837.

Summons—Amendment—Expenses—Court of Session Act, 1868, sec. 29.

7. In an action for damages raised by the Clippens Oil Company, Limited, against the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees a proof was led and judgment given in favour of the pursuers. Reclaiming notes having been lodged by both parties, the defenders craved leave to amend their record by adding a plea in law, founded on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, which, if sustained, would have rendered the action incompetent. The pursuers objected to the amendment being allowed except on condition of payment of expenses since the closing of the record. The Court allowed the amendment, reserving all questions of expenses. Clippens Oil Co., Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees, July 6, 1905, p. 914.

Mandatary—Multiplepoinding.

8. In a multiplepoinding which had been brought in the Sheriff Court to determine a question under a codicil to a will, and in which the holder of the fund in medio had been exonered and discharged, two claimants residing in Australia, who had been called as defenders, appealed against a judgment of the Sheriff repelling their claim. The respondents (successful claimants) moved that the appellants should be ordained to sist a mandatary. The Court refused the motion. Elmslie v. Pauline, March 4, 1905, p. 541.

Caution for Expenses—Bankruptcy—Petition for Discharge—Appeal.

9. A bankrupt, whose petition for discharge had been refused by the Sheriff, which refusal was affirmed on appeal, presented a year later another application for discharge. This application having been refused by the Sheriff, the bankrupt lodged an appeal. The respondents moved the Court to ordain the appellant to find caution. The Court refused the motion. Melrose-Drover, Limited, v. Heddle, June 28, 1905, p. 852.

Preliminary Pleas—"All parties not called"—Interdict between crofters on same estate as to taking seaware—Landlord not called—Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886.

10. In 1903 crofters, who were in the occupation of their crofts at the passing of the Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, and whose rents were fixed by the Commissioners under the Act in 1889, brought an action against certain neighbouring crofters who held of the same landlord, for interdict against the defenders infringing rights which the pursuers averred that they possessed, as pertinents of their crofts, of taking seaware from the seashore (belonging to the common landlord) in the neighbourhood of the crofts. The defenders' crofts were not in existence at the passing of the Crofters Holdings Act, 1886, but were formed out of two farms under the powers of the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act, 1897. The pursuers averred that they were entitled to take seaware to the extent to which they had been in use to take it at the date when their rents were fixed; and that the defenders were not entitled to take it to any greater extent than the two tenant farmers had been in use to take it at that date. They averred that the defenders were now taking more than the farmers had been in use to take. The pursuers did not produce any written contract, estate regulation, or finding of the Crofter Commission defining the extent of seaware to which they were entitled. The defenders stated that they had the authority of the landlord for taking seaware as they had taken it, and pleaded "All parties not called," in respect that the landlord had not been called as a defender. The Court sustained the plea, and dismissed the action. Mackinnon v. Macdonald, March 16, 1905, p. 589.

Reclaiming—Leave to reclaim where earlier reclaiming note refused as incompetent—Court of Session Act, 1808, sec. 16.

11. Defenders, against whom decree had been pronounced in the Outer-House, presented a reclaiming note, to which was appended a copy of the closed record in a previous action between the same parties, instead of the closed record in the action. Copies of the wrong record were also boxed with the boxing copies of the reclaiming note. The reclaiming note was refused as incompetent, in respect of the failure to box copies of the closed record. The defenders then presented a minute to the Lord Ordinary, craving leave to reclaim under sec. 16 of the Administration of Justice and Appeals Act, 1808. The defenders stated that the failure to box copies of the record had arisen through the mistake or inadvertency of the pursuer's printers in supplying copies of the wrong record. The Lord Ordinary granted leave to reclaim. Tough v. Macdonald, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 324.

PROCESS—Continued.

Decree—Decree ad factum præstandum—Enforcement of Decree to deliver document—Warrant to open lockfast places.

12. The curator bonis of an incapax obtained a decree in absence against the wife of his ward, ordaining her to deliver to the curator a certain policy of insurance on his ward's life. A charge upon this decree having expired without result, the curator, being in a difficulty, presented a note to the Junior Lord Ordinary, in which, on the narrative that he believed that the execution of a warrant to imprison would not be effectual to enforce production, he craved for a warrant to messengers-at-arms to search for and recover the document, and if necessary, to open all shut and lockfast places. The Junior Lord Ordinary having reported the matter to the Inner-House, the Court granted the warrant asked for. Ferguson's Curator Bonis, July 4, 1905, p. 898.

Proof—Diligence and Recovery of Writs—Hereditary Office.

13. In an action by Lord Lauderdale against Scrymgeour Wedderburn for declarator that the pursuer had the sole right to the office of Hereditary Royal Standard-Bearer for Scotland, the defender stated that he was heir-male of a Scrymgeour to whom the office had been confirmed and of new granted in 1600, and heir-male of the original grantee of the office, to whom it was said to have been granted between 1057 and 1124. Proof having been allowed, the defender, with the view of ascertaining and proving his pedigree, moved for a diligence for recovery of documents under a specification which did not specify any particular document, and in effect embraced all documents relating to the family of Scrymgeour now in the possession of Lord Lauderdale or others on his behalf, provided that they were not titles of any lands now possessed by him. The Court granted the diligence. Earl of Lauderdale v. Scrymgeour Wedderburn, July 20, 1905, p. 1045.

Proof—Proof on Commission—Deposition of Witnesses to lie in retentis—Proof and oath de calumnia taken on commission.

14. A naval artificer-engineer, who was the pursuer in an action of divorce, presented a petition in which he stated that the summons in the action had been signeted and served edictally, but could not be called in Court until after the date when the ship upon which he and another material witness were serving was under orders to proceed to sea, and moved the Court to appoint a commissioner to take his oath de calumnia and the evidence of himself and the other material witness, the depositions to lie in retentis subject to the orders of the Court. The Court granted the prayer of the petition, reserving to the defender all objections competent to her to the competency of the petition. Pringle, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 525.

Proof—Proof on Commission—Jury Trial—Examination of Pursuer on Commission—Postponement of Trial.

15. An issue for the trial by jury of an action of damages for slander was adjusted on 30th October 1903. The trial of the action was postponed in July 1904, owing to the inability of the pursuer from ill-health to attend at the trial for examination as a witness. The case was again set down for trial at the Spring Sittings in 1905. The pursuer moved for a commission to take the pursuer's evidence, and produced a medical certificate which stated that the pursuer was not in a fit state of health to attend the trial, that it was impossible to state when he would be able to do so, but that there was little prospect of his being able to do so within the next twelve months. The defender asked that the trial should be again postponed. The Court refused to postpone the trial again, and granted the pursuer's motion. Anderson v. Morrison, March 11, 1905, p. 561.

Proof—Proof on Commission—Evidence to be laid before a foreign Court

PROCESS—Continued.

—Appointment of Commissioner—Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856, sec. 1.

16. Held that the Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856, in authorising a Court to pronounce an order for the examination of witnesses on oath at the request of a foreign tribunal does not authorise an order for their examination before a Court, but only before a Commissioner. Baron de Bildt, July 4, 1905, p. 899.

Proof—Jury Trial—Proof or Jury Trial—Discretion of Lord Ordinary —Action of damages for personal injuries—Special Cause—Action transmitted under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, sec. 6 (3)—Evidence (Scotland) Act, 1866, sec. 4.

17. The Lord Ordinary in an action under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, which had been transmitted to the Court of Session under section 6 (3) of that Act, sent the case to proof instead of to a jury, upon the ground that the averments were of doubtful relevancy, and that there might be difficulty in distinguishing the averments which were relevant from those which were not. Held that the Lord Ordinary had a discretion as to what was special cause for not sending a case of this kind to a jury, that the Court ought not readily to interfere with what he had done in the exercise of it, and that there was no ground for doing so in this case.

The Lord Ordinary has the same discretion as regards the mode of proof in an action transmitted under section 6 (3) of the Employers Liability Act, 1880, as in an action originated in the Court of Session. Vallery v. M'Alpine & Sons, May 16, 1905, p. 640.

Proof—Jury Trial—Proof or Jury Trial—Appeal for Jury Trial—Remit to Sheriff—Judicature Act, sec. 40—Court of Session Act, 1868, sec. 73.

18. In an action of damages at common law for £500 for personal injuries in the Sheriff Court, the pursuer appealed for jury trial. The Court refused a motion by the defender to remit the case to the Sheriff Court for proof on the ground that there was nothing to shew that the pursuer had not a genuine claim for an amount exceeding £40. Duffy v. Young, Nov. 3, 1904, p. 30.

19. Per curiam (after consulting Judges of the Second Division)—The principles to be deduced from the authorities are clear, and may be summarised thus: (1) When a case is appealed for jury trial the Court is not bound to grant a jury trial, but may either (a) decide the case on any legal ground which will allow the case to be disposed of without inquiry, or (b) order inquiry by some other method than jury trial, if it considers jury trial unsuitable. Such inquiry may be either by proof before a Judge in the Court of Session, or by proof before the Sheriff: and in deciding between the two methods the Court will keep in view, in relation to the nature of the case, that the one course will, and the other will not, allow of ultimate appeal to the House of Lords on the facts. (2) In deciding whether a case is or is not suitable for jury trial it will apply the same criterion as it does in cases raised before itself. That is to say, it will consider whether the action is of the class specially appropriated by statute to jury trial, and if so, whether there is any special cause for not so trying it. And further, as to amount, it will be guided by the standard fixed by the Legislature, viz., £40, so that unless the action on the face of it discloses a claim which, in the opinion of the Court, could not reasonably be entitled to a verdict amounting to more than £40, it will not refuse a jury trial to an otherwise appropriate case. Sharples v. Yuill & Co., May 23, 1905, p. 657.

20. In an action of damages under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, the pursuer averred that while engaged in the employment of the defenders

PROCESS—Continued.

—a firm of stevedores—in discharging iron ore from a ship, a piece of ore weighing seven or eight pounds fell and caused injuries to his wrist which necessitated his going to the infirmary, "where the wound was stitched. Pursuer will be unable to resume work for a considerable time to come." He further averred that his average wages were 30s. a week. The action was raised about a week, and the record was closed ten weeks, after the date of the injury. The Sheriff having allowed a proof, the pursuer appealed for jury trial. The Court, being of opinion that the pursuer's averments disclosed a case which could not reasonably entitle him to a verdict for £40 damages, refused the appeal, and remitted to the Sheriff to proceed with the proof. Dawson v. Stewart & Shaw, June 8, 1905, p. 769.

Proof—Jury Trial—Proof or Jury Trial—Appeal for Jury Trial—Remit to Sheriff—Judicature Act, sec. 40—Court of Session Act, 1868, sec. 73—Employers Liability Act, 1880, secs. 4 and 7—Notice of Injury.

21. Per cur. (after consultation with the Judges of the Second Division)—When a question of want of notice under the Employers Liability Act is raised, it should be dealt with by the Sheriff as a prejudicial plea, and a proof should be allowed on this prejudicial plea before a proof is allowed on the merits. If, on proof being allowed on the prejudicial plea, one of the parties appeals to the Court of Session for jury trial, the case will be sent back to the Sheriff to have this prejudicial plea disposed of. Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, July 15, 1905, p. 958.

Proof—Jury Trial—Appeal for Jury Trial—Action under Employers Liability Act—Competency—Judicature Act, sec. 40—Court of Session Act, 1868, sec. 73—Employers Liability Act, 1880, sec. 6 (1) and (3).

22. Held, following Paton v. Niddrie and Benhar Coal Company, Limited, Jan. 14, 1885, 12 R. 538, that it is competent in an action under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, to appeal for jury trial under section 40 of the Judicature Act and section 73 of the Court of Session Act, 1868. Kelly v. James Fraser & Co., March 10, 1905, p. 559.

Proof—Jury Trial—Slander—Written Slander—Production of Writing.

23. It is not necessary as a condition of an issue being allowed in an action for written slander that the writing complained of should be produced by the pursuer. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Proof—Jury Trial—Motion for new trial—Third Trial allowed.

24. The pursuer in an action of damages for the death of her husband, who had been killed while checking waggons on railway sidings, obtained a verdict, which was set aside on the ground that contributory negligence on the part of the deceased had been proved. At the new trial the pursuer, upon the same evidence, again obtained a verdict. The Court set aside the second verdict, and granted a third trial. Watson v. North British Railway Co., Dec. 6, 1904, p. 220.

Particular Actions—Declarator and reduction pending statutory appeal—Competency—Statutory Remedy—Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, sec. 9 (2).

25. The Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900, by sec. 9 (2), directs that a Register of Streets shall be prepared, in which, inter alia, the width of streets may be entered, and that any proprietor aggrieved by any entry in the register may appeal to the Sheriff, whose decision shall be final. A proprietor of subjects fronting on various streets in Glasgow brought an action in the Court of Session for declarator that the width of streets entered in the register must be the actual width, and that the width entered in certain cases opposite his properties was not the actual width, with conclusions for deletion of the entries and for interdict, and reduction. On the same date he appealed to the Sheriff against these entries. Held that the action, although not incompetent, was premature, and fell to be dismissed. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation, July 19, 1905, p. 1020.

PROCESS—Continued.

Particular Actions—Multiplepoinding—Competency—Double Distress.

26. Where a testator left legacies to various persons, and a question arose as to the construction of one of these bequests, the trustees, before making payment of certain of the legacies as to which there was no dispute, raised an action of multiplepoinding for distribution of the balance in their hands and for exoneration. Held that the action was incompetent in so far as it submitted for adjudication the legacies other than the one in dispute. MacGillivray's Trustees v. Dallas, June 6, 1905, p. 733.

Particular Actions—Proving the Tenor—Casus amissionis—Adminicle—Mortis Causa Disposition and Settlement.

27. An action was brought in 1903 to prove the tenor of a mortis causa disposition and settlement, dated 13th November 1848. It was proved that the deceased, on 13th November 1848, the day of his death, had executed a settlement, which had been prepared by a law-agent, and was brought by him for signature, and that the deceased's estate had been administered in accordance with the terms of the deed libelled. No witness was adduced who had ever seen the original of the deed. The adminicle produced bore to be a copy of a mortis causa disposition and settlement signed by the deceased and his wife before witnesses on 13th November 1848, with testing-clause and signatures. The copy was in the handwriting of a clerk in the employment of the law-agent who had prepared the deed, and it was initialed on the back as compared. It was proved that upon the death of the law-agent in 1872 such of his papers as had not been claimed by clients were removed to the chambers of another law-agent, who had himself thereafter had more than one removal, and that upon search being made in 1903 the original deed could not be found. The action was defended by the deceased's heir-at-law, who had acquiesced in the administration till 1903, when he discovered that no will could be found. He contended that the settlement must be held to have been destroyed by the granter animo revocandi. He did not question the bona fides of the administrators. Held that the pursuers had proved that the testator had left a settlement in the terms libelled, and that a sufficient casus amissionis had been proved. Young v. Anderson, Nov. 23, 1904, p. 128.

Particular Actions—Reduction—Partial Reduction and Declarator—Competency—Sanction of Local Authority subject to conditions—Claim to reduce sanction quoad condition only—Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, sec. 32.

28. A firm of glue manufacturers who proposed to start the business of glue making, in a district where that business had been duly declared to be an offensive business under section 32 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, obtained the sanction of the Local Authority under that section, but subject to the condition that the products of the business should be manufactured "from hide clippings only." The firm thereupon brought an action, in which they maintained that the insertion of this condition in the sanction was ultra vires of the Local Authority, and concluded for reduction of the order granting the sanction in so far as it imposed the condition, and for declarator that the sanction should be valid and effectual to the pursuers as if the condition had not been inserted. Held that, whether the insertion of the condition was or was not ultra vires of the Local Authority, the action was incompetent, the condition being an inseparable part of the sanction as granted by the authority which alone had power to grant it. John Darney & Son v. Calder District Committee, Dec. 9, 1904, p. 239.

PROCESS—Continued.

Particular Actions—Special Case—Two distinct litigations combined in one special case.

29. A special case was presented for the determination of questions between the first parties as superiors and two different vassals, the second and third parties, who held separate and distinct estates under different titles. Observed that this method of combining two distinct litigations in one special case was irregular, in respect that each of the vassals was made a party to statements of fact affecting the other with which he had no concern, and his concurrence in which was nevertheless made the basis of a judgment inter alios. Church of Scotland v. Watson, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 395.

Particular Actions—Suspension and Interdict—Competency—Company—Liquidation—Interdict of Liquidator from acting.

30. Question whether a note of suspension and interdict to have the respondent interdicted from acting as liquidator of a company, under an ex facie valid special resolution of the company for voluntary liquidation, and the appointment of the respondent as liquidator, was competent. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

Particular Actions—Stated Case—Non-compliance with regulations for obtaining—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Second Schedule, sec. 14 (c)—A. S., 3d June 1898, sec. 9 (a).

31. On the last day allowed for taking an appeal against an award by a Sheriff dismissing a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the claimant's Edinburgh agent telegraphed to the local agent to apply for a case for appeal. The local agent being out of town, his clerk obtained the services of another agent, who went to the Sheriff Court office and wrote on the interlocutor sheet "The pursuer appeals against the foregoing judgment, and requests a case to be stated." He did not set forth any question of law, and he did not make any deposit of £1, as required by sec. 9 (a) of the Act of Sederunt, 3d June 1898. He was informed by the clerk in attendance at the Sheriff Court office that a deposit was not necessary. The Sheriff stated a case. At the hearing on the appeal the deposit of £1 had not been made. The Court, on the objection of the respondents, dismissed the appeal in respect of the appellant's failure to comply with the regulations enacted by sec. 9 (a) of the Act of Sederunt, 3d June 1898. Murphy v. Blair & White, June 28, 1905, p. 863.

Particular Actions—Stated Case—Transmission of Process—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—A. S., 3d June 1898, sec. 9 (f).

32. In a stated case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, one of the parties moved for an order on the Sheriff-clerk to transmit the process, on the ground that there was a note appended by the Sheriff-substitute to his interlocutor which it was advisable that the Court should have before them when the stated case came up for decision. The Court refused the motion. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Clelland, May 20, 1905, p. 654.

Appeal—Printing and Boxing—Bankruptcy—Petition for Discharge.

33. A bankrupt, whose petition for discharge had been refused by the Sheriff, which refusal was affirmed on appeal, presented a year later another application for discharge. This application having been refused by the Sheriff, the bankrupt lodged an appeal, but for more than two months thereafter did not print or box to the Court the note of appeal and other documents relative thereto. Thereupon the respondents in the appeal presented a note craving the Court to ordain the appellant to print and box the note of appeal and relative documents. The Court ordained the appellant to print and box within ten days, under certification that, if he failed to do so, the appeal would be dismissed. Melrose-Drover, Limited, v. Heddle, June 28, 1905, p. 852.

PROCESS—Continued.
See Appeal—Arrestment—Expenses—Interdict—Sheriff.

PROOF. Res ipsa loquitur—Misrepresentation—Sham Antiques.
1. A wholesale dealer sold certain articles of jewellery, which he had got made to resemble antiques, to a retail dealer. Opinion per Lord Kyllachy, in an action of rescission of the sale on the ground of misrepresentation, that the offer of articles appearing to be antiques was in itself a misrepresentation, on the principle of res ipsa loquitur, and that the seller was not entitled to leave the articles to speak for themselves, but was bound to displace the inferences which to his knowledge their appearance was calculated to suggest. Patterson v. Landsberg & Son, May 24, 1905, p. 675.

Reference to oath.
2. Refusal to hear supplementary statement by deponent on oath. Paterson v. Cowie's Executor, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 68.
See Bills of Exchange, 2—Justiciary Cases, 11, 15, 16, 21—Loan—Process, 13 to 24, 27.

PROPERTY. Common Property—Trees near boundary of adjacent properties.
1. Opinion (per Lord Stormonth-Darling, Ordinary) that trees whose stems are wholly on one side of the boundary of two adjacent properties, but which stand so near the boundary as to extend their roots into the other side of it, are not the common property of both proprietors. Hetherington v. Galt, June 2, 1905, p. 706.

Boundaries—Line of trees planted as boundary under verbal agreement between adjacent feuars—Question with singular successor—Bounding Title — Measurements — "Or thereby" — Measurements inaccurate — Contemporanea Expositio.
2. Two adjacent plots of ground, belonging to different persons, were described in their titles by a plan and by measurements, qualified in the latter case by the words "or thereby." Neither plan nor measurements were strictly accurate. The mutual boundary was adjusted by verbal agreement between the proprietors, and marked by a line of trees planted at their mutual expense. Held that this arrangement, followed by possession in accordance therewith, was binding upon a singular successor without notice. Hetherington v. Galt, June 2, 1905, p. 706.

Title to Heritage—Statutory Title—Ruinous Buildings—Sale by order of Sheriff—Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, secs. 196, 197, 200.
3. Ruinous buildings sold under the Burgh Police Act, 1892, were situate on ground let on a building lease for 999 years. After the purchaser had completed his title by recording the Sheriff's decree and had disponed the subjects, an action was raised against the disponee for payment of rent due under the long lease, the pursuer contending that the purchaser had acquired the property tantum et tale as it stood in the lessee. The defender founded on the recorded decree as giving him an unqualified statutory title to the land. The Court sustained the defence. Young's Trustees v. Grainger, Dec. 8, 1904, p. 233.

Designation of Glebe—Excambion of Glebe—Effect of Decree of Presbytery sanctioning excambion of Glebe.
4. Where a glebe is excambed the title to the new glebe flows from the excamber, and the decree of the Presbytery completing the title is not a judicial determination, but merely gives the sanction of the Presbytery to the transaction, and impresses the land given to the minister with the character and status of a glebe. Cadell v. Allan, March 17, 1905, p. 606.

PROPERTY—Continued.

Title to Heritage—Construction—Servitude—Right of Access—Prescriptive Possession.

5. Before 1830 a self-contained house in Glasgow, bounded on the south by Bath Street, from which it entered, and on the west by Wellington Street, was divided into two houses, one containing the ground floor and the other the upper floor. An annex containing a stair to the upper floor was added to the north end of the house with a door to Wellington Street. In 1830 the proprietor conveyed the upper floor to A, "with access thereto by a street door from Wellington Street," and in 1831 conveyed the remainder of the property to B. After the division of the property the stair was used solely by the proprietors of the upper storey. In 1904 X, who was in right of the property conveyed to B, brought a declarator that the staircase was his property, and that the proprietor of the upper storey, and successor in title to A, had no right to make structural alterations on it. The Court (rev. judgment of Lord Kincairney) granted decree, holding (1) that by the disposition of 1831 the property in the staircase was conveyed to B; (2) that A only obtained a servitude of access over it; and (3) that the prescriptive possession by him and his successors could not turn a right of access into a right of property. Robertson's Trustees v. Bruce, March 14, 1905, p. 580.

See Superior and Vassal—River, Loch, Sea,

PROVING THE TENOR. See Process, 27.

PUBLIC AUTHORITY. See Limitation of action.

PUBLIC HEALTH. Offensive Trade—Licence—Sanction of Local Authority subject to conditions—Claim to reduce sanction quoad condition only—Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, sec. 32.

1. A firm of glue manufacturers who proposed to start the business of glue making, in a district where that business had been duly declared to be an offensive business under section 32 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, obtained the sanction of the Local Authority under that section, but subject to the condition that the products of the business should be manufactured "from hide clippings only." The firm thereupon brought an action, in which they maintained that the insertion of this condition in the sanction was ultra vires of the Local Authority, and concluded for reduction of the order granting the sanction in so far as it imposed the condition, and for declarator that the sanction should be valid and effectual to the pursuers as if the condition had not been inserted. Held that, whether the insertion of the condition was or was not ultra vires of the Local Authority, the action was incompetent, the condition being an inseparable part of the sanction as granted by the authority which alone had power to grant it. John Darney & Son v. Calder District Committee, Dec. 9, 1904, p. 239.

Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, secs. 18 and 21, and Schedule—Analyst's Certificate—Statement of Weight—Article liable to decomposition—Butter—Margarine—Statement as to change in Constitution.

2. In the schedule form of analyst's certificate given in the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, a space is left for the weight of the sample analysed, but it is provided that "when the article cannot be conveniently weighed this passage may be erased or the blank may be left unfilled." It is also provided that "in the case of a certificate regarding . . . butter . . . the analyst shall specially report whether any change had taken place in the constitution of the article that would interfere with the analysis." In a suspension of a conviction under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, sec. 6, for selling butter containing 92 per cent of foreign ingredients, held (1) that it was not a valid objection to the analyst's certificate appended to the complaint that the space for the weight of the sample was left blank without any statement that the article could not be conveniently weighed; but (2) that the certificate was invalid in respect that the analyst did not report whether any change had taken place in the constitution of the article, the direction in the schedule so to report being imperative in the case of butter, and that, the article having been sent for analysis as butter, the failure to comply with the direction was not excused by the article having proved on analysis to be margarine; and bill of suspension sustained and conviction quashed. Hunter v. Wintrup, Dec. 17, 1904 (J. C.), p. 22.

PUBLIC HEALTH—Continued.

PUBLIC-HOUSE. Licensing Court—Certificate—Refusal to renew certificate—Discretion of Licensing Authority—Grounds on which reduction of the deliverance of a Licensing Court will be granted—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 11.

1. A licence-holder, who had been refused a renewal of her certificate, raised an action for the reduction of the deliverance of the Licensing Court on the ground that their proceedings had been illegal, unjudicial, and oppressive. She averred that she had received no notice of any objection to the renewal of her certificate, and that no complaint had been made as to the conduct of her business or the sanitary condition of her premises; that at the Licensing Court formal objection having been taken to the renewal on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested, she was heard through her agent, and offered to carry out any recommendations the Court might make in regard to the sanitary arrangements of the premises; that thereupon the Court, without hearing evidence in support of the objections, refused to renew the certificate on the ground that the premises were insanitary and the district congested. She further averred that the Magistrates who formed the Court had prejudged the question by having come to a resolution prior to the sitting of the Court to reduce the number of licensed premises in the district. Held (1) that the Court cannot interfere with the discretion of the licensing authority exercised within the limits of its statutory jurisdiction, unless it has failed to give a judicial consideration to the application before it; (2) that the averments set forth disclosed no case of the licensing authority having exceeded their statutory jurisdiction or having failed to give a judicial consideration to the pursuer's application. Walsh v. Magistrates of Pollokshaws, July 19, 1905, p. 1009.

Justice of Peace—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction in Police Burgh—Licensing Offences—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 91.

2. Held that the Justices of the Peace of a county have concurrent jurisdiction along with the Magistrates of a police burgh situated within the county to try offences under the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, where such offences are committed within burgh by persons residing therein. Tasker v. Simpson, Dec. 21, 1904 (J. C.), p. 33.

Breach of Certificate—Licence-holder drunk on premises after hour of closing—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, Sixth Schedule.

3. The form of certificate for public-houses set forth in the Sixth Schedule to the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, provides that the licence-holder shall be empowered to sell exciseable liquor on condition, inter alia, that "he do not himself be in a state of intoxication on the premises." Held that this condition applied at all hours, and not merely during the hours when the public-house was open to the public, and consequently that a publican who was found drunk in his public-house at 3 A.M. had committed a breach of his certificate. Kessack v. Smith, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 75.

Breach of Certificate—Knowingly permitting drunkenness within licensed premises—Proof—Onus—Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, sec. 98.

4. The holder of a public-house certificate was charged with knowingly permitting drunkenness within the licensed premises in breach of his certificate, by allowing R. S. to remain in the premises when in a state of intoxication. It was proved that the accused and R. S., who were friends, were both found in the licensed premises at 3 A.M., asleep, and intoxicated. Held that the accused had failed to discharge the onus imposed on him by sec. 98 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903, and consequently that he had rightly been convicted of the breach of certificate charged. Kessack v. Smith, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 75.

PUBLIC-HOUSE—Continued.
See Heritable and Moveable—Reparation, 12.

PUBLIC OFFICER. Town-clerk—Munus publicum—Salary—Extension of burgh—Discretion of Town-Council as to fixing salary.
1. A royal burgh having been extended by the inclusion of a neighbouring burgh, the town-council raised the town-clerk's salary from £100 to £120. The town-clerk brought an action against the town-council for declarator that the defenders were bound to pay him a reasonable and suitable salary as fixed by the Court. The pursuer averred that the increased salary as fixed by the town-council after the extension was quite inadequate looking to the increase of the town-clerk's duties. The Court assoilzied the defenders, holding that the question of an increase in the amount of the salary of a town-clerk was a matter for the discretion of the town-council, with the bona fide exercise of which the Court would not interfere. Sutherland v. Magistrates of Wick, Jan. 11, 1905, p. 374.
County Assessor—Remuneration.
2. Held that under sec. 67 of the Town-Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900, a burgh was liable only for the actual outlay of the assessor in preparing the municipal register of voters, and not for anything by way of remuneration to the assessor for his personal services. Maxtone v. Magistrates of Dunoon, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 276.
See Public Records.

PUBLIC RECORDS. Burgh Register of Sasines—Authentication of Minutes — Omission of former Town-clerk to authenticate Minutes.
Authority granted to the town-clerk of a royal burgh to authenticate and subscribe minutes in the minute-books of the Burgh Register of Sasines which had not been authenticated by his predecessors, and to record the petition and warrant in the Burgh Register of Sasines. Hepburn, Feb. 3, 1905, p. 484.

RAGGED SCHOOL. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 4.

RAILWAY. Minerals under Line—Right of Railway Company to minerals on paying compensation—Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, sec. 71.
Held that a railway company, which has given notice to a landowner under section 71 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, requiring him to leave unworked certain minerals lying under or near the railway line, is not entitled, on payment to the landowner of the compensation due to him for leaving the minerals unworked, to demand a conveyance of these minerals. Duke of Hamilton's Trustees v. Caledonian Railway Co., June 27, 1905, p. 847.
See Mines and Minerals, 3, 4.

REPARATION. Wrongs and their Remedies—Foreign—Lex loci delicti.
1. In order to maintain an action ex delicto in Scotland, when the wrong is committed in another country, the wrong must be one for which an action can be maintained both by the law of Scotland and by the law of the country in which it is said to have been done. Evans & Sons v. Stein & Co., Nov. 17, 1904, p. 65.

REPARATION—Continued.

Liability of Master for Servant—Slander.

2. A master is liable for a slander uttered by his servant while acting within the scope of his employment, although without special instructions. So held where the master was a voluntary association. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Liability of Master for Servant—Slander—Issue.

3. Where the pursuer in an action of slander alleged that a letter containing defamatory expressions had been written by the defenders' secretary in the course of their business, the Court approved of an issue "whether the defenders by their general secretary and manager wrote and dispatched" the letter complained of. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

4. Liability of Master for Servant—Crown—Volunteer Regiment—Officer Commanding Volunteer Regiment. Wilson v. 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 168.

Seduction—Issue.

5. In an action of damages for seduction the method of seduction alleged to have been employed must be set forth in the issue. Cathcart v. Brown, July 12, 1905, p. 951.

Malicious Prosecution—Facts and circumstances inferring malice.

6. In an action of damages against the Corporation of Glasgow, proprietors of the tramways, the pursuer made the following averments:—On 14th April two of the tramway inspectors employed by the defenders charged the pursuer, then a passenger in one of their cars, with having on 10th April contravened one of the statutory bye-laws by spitting on a car. On 21st April the inspectors reported the matter to the police, and on 22d April a complaint was served on the pursuer. The case was called in the Police Court on 26th April, when the pursuer was in attendance with his witnesses. The prosecutor then deserted the diet pro loco et tempore. The pursuer further averred that the charge and the report by the inspectors to the police were made falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause. Held (1) that, the inspectors having been appointed to carry out the provisions of an Act of Parliament, it was necessary for the pursuer to aver facts and circumstances inferring malice; and (2) that the action was irrelevant in respect that no such facts and circumstances were averred. Buchanan v. Corporation of Glasgow, July 19, 1905, p. 1001.

Slander—Publication of Slander—Foreign—Lex loci delicti.

7. In an action of damages for slander brought by a firm in England against a firm in Scotland, the pursuers averred that the slander was contained in two letters and a telegram, sent from Scotland, by the defenders to the pursuers, and that the slander had been published in the sense of English law, in respect that the letters had been dictated to and typewritten by the defenders' clerks, and that the telegram had passed through the hands of post-office clerks. The names of the defenders' clerks and of the post-office clerks were not given. The Court dismissed the action, holding (1) that there was no relevant averment of publication of defamatory matter to persons other than the pursuers; (2) that the defamatory statement to the pursuers was made in England; (3) that it was admitted that by the law of England the statement to the pursuers themselves was not an injury to reputation and was not an actionable wrong; and (4) that the action could not be maintained in respect that the statement was not an actionable wrong by the law of England. Evans & Sons v. Stein & Co., Nov. 17, 1904, p. 65.

Slander—Written Slander—Production of writing complained of.

8. It is not necessary as a condition of an issue being allowed in an action for written slander that the writing complained of should be produced by the pursuer. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

REPARATION—Continued.

9. Slander—Slander by Servant—Liability of Master—Association—Issue. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Slander—Innuendo.

10. In an action for slander the pursuer complained of the circulation of a pamphlet by the defenders (a free labour association), in which it was stated that the pursuer had been dismissed by the defenders for, inter alia, "withholding moneys belonging to the" defenders "contrary to the bye-laws" of the association. The pursuer proposed an issue in which he innuendoed this expression as representing "that pursuer had been guilty of dishonestly appropriating money." Held that the expression complained of could not reasonably bear the innuendo proposed, and issue disallowed. Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, May 12, 1905, p. 629.

Slander—Innuendo—Newspaper—Criticism of Management of Hospital Funds—Action of damages by Secretary.

11. A newspaper published in Wick contained an anonymous letter to the editor to the following effect:—"Is there any way by which the public can ascertain how the money is spent in the management of the B. Hospital? So long as Sir A. B. was paying the whole bill himself some people argued that he had a perfect right to squander a lot of it on the retainers who form his Bridge Street bodyguard. . . . The position is now somewhat different. The public are now being appealed to for assistance. . . . Appeals have been made by the secretary to all the churches in town and county. . . . As there has been such a very strong flavour of jobbery about the institution . . . would it not be fair . . . that a statement should be produced shewing how the money is being spent on the hospital? How are the church collections being disposed of?" Sir A. B., mentioned in the letter, was member for the Northern Burghs, of which Wick was one. He had founded the B. Hospital, and had for a time supported it entirely out of his own means. The secretary and treasurer of the hospital was G., a solicitor in Wick, who was also Sir A. B.'s political agent, with an office in Bridge Street, Wick. G. brought an action against the publishers of the newspaper for damages for slander alleged to be contained in the letter. He innuendoed the letter to mean that he was guilty of dishonest conduct in the application of the funds of the hospital, and was a person unfit to be entrusted with the management of public funds. Held that the letter would not support the innuendo, and issue disallowed. Green v. Reid & Co., July 1, 1905, p. 891.

Slander—Innuendo—Newspaper—Shebeening.

12. A newspaper contained a letter to the editor in which the writer, after criticising the action of the licensing authorities of the district in taking away a licence in B., a small town, on account of supplying liquor to an intoxicated person, continued—"Again, I should like to ask, if authorities are determined to be so rigorous, why, after convicting another licence-holder in B. of shebeening and fining him £10, they did not think it necessary to withdraw his licence? Surely shebeening was more heinous in the sight of the law; and I should like to ask if this was the first conviction against the same party." A publican in B. brought an action of damages for slander against the publishers of the newspaper. The pursuer averred that he had once been convicted of shebeening, that he was the only person in B. who had ever been convicted of shebeening, and that the letter falsely represented that he had been more than once convicted of shebeening. Held that the pursuer was entitled to an issue whether the letter falsely represented that the pursuer had been more than once convicted of shebeening. Lumsden v. West Lothian Printing and Publishing Co., Limited, July 19, 1905, p. 1006.

REPARATION—Continued.

Slander—Statement affecting credit of solicitor.

13. In an action of damages for slander the pursuer, a solicitor in a county town holding several public appointments of trust, averred that the defender had stated that the pursuer had been "cleaned out and lost his all," and that in consequence the pursuer had suffered in his reputation and business. Held that the pursuer was entitled to an issue on the ground that it was not unreasonable to suppose that the statement might have injured his reputation and credit. A B v. C D, Nov. 1, 1904, p. 22.

Slander—Summons—Competency—Joint and Several.

14. Held that an action of damages for slander was incompetent in respect that it concluded for a lump sum as damages for separate slanders, one uttered by a wife and the other by her husband, without any averment of conspiracy or complicity. Hook v. M'Callum, Feb. 25, 1905, p. 528.

Slander—Privilege—Privilege of witness—Privilege in precognition.

15. Held (rev. judgment of Second Division) that the privilege of a witness in giving evidence extends to statements made by a person on precognition with a view to his giving evidence. Watson v. M'Ewan, July 28, 1905 (H. L.), p. 109.

Negligence—Duty to Public—Colonel Commanding Volunteer Regiment—Volunteer Regiment—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1.

16. In an action for damages against a regiment of volunteers and against the officer commanding the regiment, as representing the regiment and as an individual, by the father of a child who was killed on the public street by an ammunition waggon, the horses of which had bolted, the pursuer averred that the accident had been caused by the fault of the commanding officer in not seeing that quiet horses were used, that competent drivers were employed, that the waggons were driven according to military regulations, and that a competent commissioned officer was present to superintend the parade. The action was not raised within six months after the date of the accident. The Lord Ordinary dismissed the action as against the regiment and its commanding officer as representing it, on the ground that the funds of the regiment belonged to the Crown, and that the Crown could not be sued for damages caused by the wrongful acts of its officers, and allowed a proof before answer as against the commanding officer as an individual. Held (rev. the judgment on the last point) that the action against the commanding officer, as an individual, was excluded by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1, on the ground that the fault averred against him was neglect of duty in his public capacity as commanding officer. Wilson v. 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 168.

Negligence—Lift in Hotel—Contributory Negligence.

17. In an action of damages by a mother, against hotelkeepers for the death of her son, a commercial traveller, who was killed by stepping into and falling down the well of a lift in the hotel on the night of his arrival, the pursuer averred that the lift was not provided with the usual appliances to prevent persons from entering the well when the lift was not in position, that it was "the universal practice in all lifts to guard the entrance to them by a collapsible lattice door, which can be opened only when the cage is in position to receive passengers. . . . Thus the deceased on the door being opened was entitled to rely on the cage being in position for him to step into with safety"; that the entrance to the lift was not sufficiently lighted; that there was no light in the lift itself; that no warning was given by the waiter when he opened the door of the lift that the lift was not in position; that the deceased stepped through the door and fell into the well. Held (1) that the action contained relevant averments of negligence on the part of the defenders, and (2) that the pursuers' averments did not necessarily infer negligence on the part of the deceased, and that the pursuer was entitled to an issue. Greenlees v. Royal Hotel, Dundee, Limited, Jan. 12, 1905, p. 382.

REPARATION—Continued.

Negligence—Duty to Public—Starting crane without warning and swinging box over horse's head.

18. In an action of damages for personal injuries brought by a carter employed by a firm of contractors against a company of quarrymasters, the pursuer averred that when at the defenders' quarries in charge of a horse and bogie, and while he was spragging his bogie, the defenders' craneman suddenly and without warning started a crane, making a great noise and swinging a box over the horse's head, causing the said horse to jump and rear and draw the bogie on top of the pursuer, and that the accident was caused through the fault of the defenders' servants in not warning the pursuer of their intention to start the crane, as was usual in such operations, and in swinging the box near the horse's head; and that the system adopted by the defenders was dangerous in that, although the craneman could not see the pursuer from the crane, the defenders failed to provide a man at the face of the quarry to give warning to pursuer and other workmen. Held that these averments were irrelevant. Breslin v. Clyde Quarries, Limited, March 10, 1905, p. 557.

Negligence—Duty to Public—Accident to member of the public caused by horse let out on hire—Liability of owner of the horse to the member of the public.

19. A child was run over and killed in a public street by an ammunition waggon belonging to a regiment of volunteer artillery. The waggon was drawn by horses which had been hired out by a firm of carting contractors, two of the volunteers being the drivers. The father of the child brought an action against the contractors. He averred that the horses had run off and got beyond the control of the drivers, who were young members of the volunteer regiment; that the horses were unsuited for the purpose for which they were hired, being young and restive and unaccustomed to drawing ammunition waggons; that they had never previously been driven as a pair; and that the defenders were aware of these defects. Held that the pursuer had not stated a relevant case of fault against the defenders.

Opinion per curiam that it could not be affirmed as an absolute proposition that under no circumstances could a horse-hirer be liable to a member of the public for injuries caused by horses hired out by him. Wilson v. Wordie & Co., July 11, 1905, p. 927.

Negligence—Agent and Principal—Patent Agent—Damages for loss of patent—Defence of invalidity of patent.

20. In an action of damages against patent agents, the pursuer averred that the defenders had charge of two patents held by him, and that they had allowed them to lapse by failing to give him notice that certain payments were necessary to keep them in force. The defenders pleaded that there was no loss, as the patents were invalid by reason of anticipation by prior patents specified. Held that the defence was irrelevant. Alexander Turnbull & Co., Limited, v. Cruickshank & Fairweather, June 23, 1905, p. 791.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Common Law—Ship in course of repair—Open and Unlighted Hatch.

21. A workman, who was accustomed to take chipping and scaling jobs, was engaged to execute chipping work on a ship which was undergoing extensive repairs in a shipbuilding yard. In going to the place on board the ship where his work was to be done he fell into an open hatchway on the middle deck and was injured. In an action of damages at common law raised by him against the shipbuilders, on the ground that the accident was due to their negligence in not having the hatchway covered or sufficiently lighted or fenced, it was proved that the pursuer had gone from broad daylight to the middle deck, where the light was dim, but sufficient to enable the pursuer to see the hatchway if he had proceeded cautiously. Held that the accident was not due to negligence on the part of the defenders, but was due to want of care on the part of the pursuer. Burns v. Henderson & Co., Limited, June 2, 1905, p. 697.

REPARATION—Continued.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Common Law—Statutory Duty—Common Employment—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 49, Rule 21.

22. A miner who had been injured by the fall of shale from the roof of a roadway in a mine raised an action of damages at common law against his employers, the mineowners, who were a limited company, and obtained an issue, "Whether . . . the pursuer was injured through the fault of the defenders?" It was proved that about eight days before the accident there had been an extensive fall of shale from the roof at the place of the accident, and that nothing had been done prior to the accident to support the roof at this place. The jury found for the pursuer, and awarded damages. The defenders sought to set aside the verdict on the ground (1) that there was no fault on the part of the defenders, as they were proved to have appointed a competent manager, and (2) that, if there was fault on the part of the manager it was the fault of a person in common employment with the pursuer. Held (1) that there was fault on the part of the Company in not having the roof made secure as required by the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, sec. 49, Rule 21, and (2) that there being a duty imposed by statute on the mineowners to have the roof made secure, the defence of common employment was not available to them. Bett v. Dalmeny Oil Co., Limited, June 17, 1905, p. 787.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Employers Liability Act, 1880, secs. 4 and 7—Notice of Injury.

23. In an action of damages under the Employers Liability Act against a limited company at the instance of a workman in its employment, held that a notice of injury addressed to the company, enclosed in an envelope directed to A B, who was the company's cashier, and was in charge at one of the offices of the company, and delivered at that office, was duly served on the company in accordance with the provisions of sec. 7 of the Act.

Per cur. (after consultation with the Judges of the Second Division) —When a question of want of notice under the Employers Liability Act is raised, it should be dealt with by the Sheriff as a prejudicial plea, and a proof should be allowed on this prejudicial plea before a proof is allowed on the merits. If, on proof being allowed on the prejudicial plea, one of the parties appeals to the Court of Session for jury trial, the case will be sent back to the Sheriff to have this prejudicial plea disposed of. Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, July 15, 1905, p. 958.

Negligence—Master and Servant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, sec. 1, subsec. 2 (b)—Action for reparation by person found not entitled to compensation.

24. Held that a claimant who had been refused compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, on the ground that she was not a dependant of the deceased workman, was not thereby barred under sec. 1 (2) (b) of that Act from raising an action of reparation at common law, or under the Employers Liability Act, 1880, against the deceased's employer. M'Donald v. James Dunlop & Co. (1900), Limited, Feb. 25, 1905, p. 533.

REPARATION—Continued.

See Contract, 4 to 8—Interdict, 1—Limitation of Actions—Master and Servant—Process, 2, 4, 5, 17 to 24—River, Loch, Sea, 1—Ship, 1 to 5—Trust, 4.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR. Proof, 1.

REVENUE. Estate-duty—Deductions allowable as Debts—Marriage-Contract Provisions—Interim Aliment to Widow—Finance Act, 1894, sec. 7.

1. Held that an obligation by a husband in a marriage-contract to make certain payments to his marriage-contract trustees for behoof of his wife and children, as the counterpart of similar obligations by his wife, could not be regarded on his death as a debt incurred by him "for full consideration in money or money's worth wholly for the deceased's own use and benefit," in the sense of the Finance Act, 1894, sec. 7 (1) (a), and did not form a proper deduction in determining the value of his estate for the purposes of estate-duty.

Held also that a similar obligation by a father in his son's marriage-contract, as the counterpart of an obligation by the son's wife and her father, could not be deducted as a debt. Inland Revenue v. Alexander's Trustees, Jan. 10, 1905, p. 367.

Estate-duty—Property passing on death—Cesser of Annuity—Value of benefit accruing—Finance Act, 1894, secs. 1, 2 (1), b, and 7 (7).

2. Held, in the case of the cesser of an annuity payable out of heritable property, that the value of the benefit accruing from the cesser of the annuity fell, under sec. 7 (7) of the Finance Act, 1894, to be determined by capitalising the amount of the annuity on the basis of the number of years' purchase applicable to the class of property out of which it was paid, and without taking into consideration the amount of the bonds by which the heritable property might be affected. Lord Advocate v. Henderson's Trustees, July 15, 1905, p. 963.

Estate-duty—Entail—Property passing on death of heir of entail—"Competent to dispose"—Estate-duty paid by deceased heir of entail and not charged on entailed estates—Finance Act, 1894, secs. 2, 9, and 22.

3. An heir of entail who had paid estate-duty due on the death of his predecessor died without having applied for a certificate or taken any steps to charge the sum so paid on the entailed estate. The Crown having claimed estate-duty on the sum so paid from his trustees, held (rev. judgment of First Division) that under sec. 9, subsec. 6, of the Finance Act, 1894, the heir of entail, being a person having a limited interest who had paid the estate-duty, had by the statute the same charge on the estate as if he held a mortgage over the estate for the amount of the duty, and that the charge being a vested transmissible interest belonging to the deceased at the time of his death, his trustees were liable for the duty. Lord Advocate v. Earl of Moray's Trustees, Aug. 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 116.

Income-Tax—"Residing in the United Kingdom"—Income-Tax Act, 1853, sec. 2, Schedule D—Income-Tax Act, 1842, sec. 39.

4. A British merchant carried on business in Madras, and usually resided there, but his wife, with the children, lived for a number of years in the United Kingdom, occupying latterly a house belonging to her and purchased with his and her money, and he resided with them for months at a time when he came to the United Kingdom, as he did nearly every year. In the year of assessment ending 5th April 1903 he was never in the United Kingdom. In a question as to his liability to be assessed for income-tax for that year, held that he was not a person "residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the Income-Tax Act, 1853, and therefore not liable to assessment. Turnbull v. Inland Revenue, Oct. 25, 1904, p. 1.

REVENUE—Continued.

5. An American citizen, having his ordinary residence, and practising his profession, in New York, held for some years a lease of a furnished shooting-lodge and shootings in Scotland. He resided at the shooting-lodge for two months in each year, and the lodge was ready for his use at any time. His residence in New York was also kept open for his use at any time. Held that he was a person "residing in the United Kingdom" within the meaning of section 2, Schedule D, of the Income-Tax Act, 1853, and was therefore liable to assessment for income-tax, and that he did not fall within the exemption in sec. 39 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842, of a person in Great Britain "for some temporary purpose only, and not with any view or intent of establishing his residence therein." Inland Revenue v. Cadwalader, Nov. 25, 1904, p. 146.

Income-Tax—Penalties—Modification—Income-Tax Act, 1842, sec. 166—Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707, sec. 23 or sec. 15—Public Revenue (Scotland) Act, 1833, secs. 1, 4, and 8—Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1856, sec. 1.

6. Held on a construction of the above statutes that the Court of Session as the Court of Exchequer in Scotland has no jurisdiction to modify the penalties exigible under sec. 166 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren, July 18, 1905, p. 984.

Income-Tax—Abatement—Untruly declaring income—Penalties—Amount—Income-Tax Act, 1842, sec. 166.

7. Held (1) that a person found guilty under section 166 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842, of untruly declaring his income was liable in the forfeiture therein provided, although no exemption or abatement had in fact been allowed, and (2) that the amount upon which the treble duty was to be calculated was his whole income, including income upon which duty had been already deducted or paid.

Observed, per Lord Kinnear, that, to involve liability for the penalties under the section, the declaration must be not merely inaccurate but false and untruthful. Lord Advocate v. M'Laren, July 18, 1905, p. 984.

Income-tax — Exemption — Unincorporated Society — Income-Tax Act, 1842, secs. 40, 163, 192.

8. An unincorporated society, whose aggregate annual income is less than £160, is entitled to claim exemption from income-tax under sec. 163 of the Income-Tax Act, 1842, as extended by the Finance Act, 1894. Inland Revenue v. Old Monkland Conservative Association, Nov. 22, 1904, p. 119.

Income-Tax—Deduction of Income-Tax from interest on loans—Liability for Income-Tax not deducted—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, sec. 24, subsec. (3).

9. Held that a municipal corporation, which was bound to deduct Income-tax from interest on loans but had failed to do so, was liable in payment to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount that should have been deducted. Lord Advocate v. Corporation of Edinburgh, July 15, 1905, p. 972.

Inhabited House Duty—Two houses belonging to different owners connected so as to form one dwelling-house—Inhabited House Duty Act, 1808, Schedule B, Rule 14.

10. A and B, two adjoining dwelling-houses belonging to different proprietors, were connected by an open doorway on the ground floor. The proprietor of A, and his son, the tenant of B, occupied the two houses thus:—The son, who was a physician, occupied the public rooms in B for his practice, one bedroom in B was occupied by himself, and another by a sister. The father and the other members of the family had bedrooms in A. The whole family took their meals in A. The only kitchen used was in A. There was only one servant. Held that there was such internal communication between these two houses that they could not be regarded as "different tenements" in the sense of Schedule B, Rule 14, of the Inhabited House Duty Act, 1808; that the two houses formed one dwelling-house in the joint occupation of father and son; and therefore that the father and son were jointly liable to inhabited house duty for the whole premises. Murdochs v. Inland Revenue, Nov. 22, 1904, p. 111.

REVENUE—Continued.

RIGHT IN SECURITY. Securities over heritable property—Power to Sell—Sale by heritable creditor—Advertisement—Time—Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 119.

1. The holder of a bond and disposition in security exposed the subjects under the power of sale on 23d March 1904. The first advertisement had appeared on the morning of 10th February 1904. Held that as forty-two days had elapsed between the morning of the first advertisement and the morning of the exposure the provisions of sec. 119 of the Titles to Land Consolidation Act, 1868, in regard to advertisement had been complied with.

Opinion that if an advertisement appeared once in each of six consecutive weeks it was not necessary that forty-two days should have elapsed between the day of the first advertisement and the day of the exposure. Roscoe v. Mackersy, June 8, 1905, p. 761.

Securities over heritable property—Power to sell—Sale by heritable creditor—Consignation of surplus—Bank—Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 122.

2. The Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868, sec. 122, enacts that the creditor shall upon receipt of the price consign the surplus which may remain after deducting the debt secured and expenses in a bank, "and the particular bank in which such consignation is to be made shall be specified in the articles of roup." Held that the omission to specify the bank in the articles of roup did not infer the nullity of the sale where there was in fact no surplus. Roscoe v. Mackersy, June 8, 1905, p. 761.

Securities over heritable property—Right to eject proprietor—Bond and Assignation in Security by liferentrix—Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, sec. 5.

3. The creditors in a bond and assignation in security, granted by a liferentrix by constitution over her liferent interest in certain lands and a mansion-house, brought an action in the Sheriff Court under sec. 5 of the Heritable Securities Act, 1894, for the summary ejection of the liferentrix from the mansion-house, of which she was in personal occupation. Held that the liferentrix was not a "proprietor" in the sense of sec. 5 of the Act, and that therefore the summary remedy of ejection was incompetent. Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. Smeaton, Dec. 1, 1904, p. 174.

Security over Moveables—Pledge—Sale on Approbation—Goods pawned by retail dealer—Title of pawnbroker—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 18, Rule 4 (a).

4. Ehrmann, a wholesale jeweller, was in the habit of sending goods to Anderson, a retail jeweller, with the wholesale prices marked, with power to sell and deliver on his own account and for his own profit any articles he might sell, Anderson being liable only for the wholesale price. At the same time Ehrmann sent a printed notice headed "approbation note," stating that the goods were to remain the property of the sender till invoiced by him to Anderson. Anderson having retained a diamond necklace for several months, Ehrmann in April 1903 urged Anderson to purchase the necklace himself, and offered to take bills for the price. Anderson agreed to do so, and the necklace was invoiced to him, and the bills were granted by him. Anderson having subsequently become bankrupt, Bryce, a pawnbroker, with whom Anderson had in December 1902, without Ehrmann's knowledge, pledged the necklace, raised an action of multiplepoinding to determine the right thereto. Claims were lodged by Ehrmann, by Bryce, and by Anderson's trustee, but the claim by the last was not insisted in. Held (1) that as in December 1902 Anderson had been put by Ehrmann in a position to give a good title to a purchaser, he could validly pledge the necklace, and had validly pledged it to Bryce; (2) that as Anderson's trustee did not insist in his claim Ehrmann was entitled to delivery of the necklace after satisfying Bryce's claim. Bryce v. Ehrmann, Oct. 28, 1904, p. 5.

Security over Moveables—Pledge—Custody of security subject—Constructive Delivery—Transference of document of title for valuable consideration and in good faith—Illegal Preference—New security granted in substitution for prior invalid security—Act 1696, c. 5—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 47.

5. In June 1903, Neilson lent £3000 to M'Dowall & Company, and in security took from M'Dowall & Company delivery-orders for timber belonging to them stored in Connal & Company's timber-yard. The orders were in favour of Neilson, and were addressed to Haggart & Company, licensed timber-measurers, employed by M'Dowall & Company to measure and store the timber. The orders were intimated by Neilson to Haggart & Company, who replied acknowledging that they held the goods to his order. The duties of Haggart & Company in regard to storing timber were to measure it, to stack it in the yard selected by their employers, by whom they were paid, and to arrange for its removal when sold. The yard belonged to Connal & Company, by whose servants it was watched, and by whom books were kept in which were noted the quantities of the timber stored and the names of the owners, who paid rent for storage. According to the practice of the timber trade in Glasgow, the measurers were allowed by the proprietors of the yard to have practically complete control over timber stored by them. They could remove the timber as and when they chose, and delivery-orders for the removal of timber were addressed to them. On 23d September 1903, Neilson at the request of M'Dowall & Company granted delivery-orders signed by him and addressed to Haggart & Company in favour of M'Dowall & Company for the timber in exchange for the bills of lading of a cargo of timber purchased by M'Dowall & Company from Dobell, Beckett, & Company, then on its way to Glasgow. On the arrival of the cargo at Glasgow four days later, it was stopped in transitu by Dobell, Beckett, & Company. On 1st October M'Dowall & Company were sequestrated. In a question between Dobell, Beckett, & Company, and Neilson, held (1) that the delivery-order addressed to Haggart & Company by M'Dowall & Company, and duly intimated to them by Neilson, did not operate as constructive delivery of the timber to Neilson, Haggart & Company being the servants of the granters of the order and not independent custodiers of the timber; (2) that Neilson therefore had not a valid security at the date when the bills of lading were transferred to him, and that the transfer was struck at by the Act 1696, c. 5.

Held further that the undertaking by Haggart & Company to hold to Neilson's order, surrendered by him when he received the bills of lading, not being an obligation granted by Haggart & Company personally, but only as the servants of M'Dowall & Company, was of no value and was not "valuable consideration" in the sense of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 47, and that the stoppage in transitu was not affected by the transference of the bills of lading to Neilson. Dobell, Beckett, & Co. v. Neilson, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 281.

RIGHT IN SECURITY—Continued.

RIVER, LOCH, SEA. River—Pollution—Water supply for a town—Compensation water to riparian owners—Quality of compensation water—Reparation—Neglect of statutory duty.

1. The water supply system of the Edinburgh and District Water Trustees included the Glencorse Reservoir in the Pentland Hills. This reservoir, which was constructed under statutory authority, was both a supply reservoir and a compensation reservoir, the trustees being by statute bound to allow to flow out of the reservoir down the Glencorse Burn 220 cubic feet of water per minute, as full compensation for the right conferred on them to stop, dam up, and store the water of the burn. The summer and autumn of 1902 were exceptionally dry, and in consequence the Glencorse Reservoir became so much depleted of water that the silt or mud which had accumulated at the bottom of the reservoir became exposed to the air in the shallower portions, with the result that in the following winter, owing to the action of frost, rain, and wind on the exposed silt, the water of the reservoir became contaminated with large quantities of very fine sand, which took a long time to settle. In consequence the compensation water passed down the Glencorse Burn in a very discoloured condition, which made it unfit for use in the manufacture of paper. This state of matters lasted for about three months. In April 1903 the owners of paper mills on the Glencorse Burn about three miles below the reservoir, who were almost entirely dependent on the water of the burn for their water supply, brought an action against the Water Trustees for damages on account of loss sustained by the pursuers in the manufacture of their paper owing to the discoloured condition of the water. The defenders, who had throughout the drought continued to supply the city of Edinburgh with water from the reservoir, maintained that they were not responsible for the quality of the compensation water, in respect that their duty was to supply Edinburgh with water from the reservoir subject only to the condition of giving off the specified quantity of compensation water—a condition which (it was not disputed) they had fulfilled. Held, after a proof (1) that although the defenders were by the statute entitled to store the water in the reservoir, it was their duty to use the reservoir so that the compensation water should not be unnecessarily polluted; and (2) on the evidence that the defenders had failed to perform this duty, and were liable in damages to the pursuers. Sommerville & Son, Limited, v. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees, July 20, 1905, p. 1060.

Sea—Territorial Waters—Three-mile limit—Fishing—Trawling—Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889, sec. 6, and Schedule.

2. Held that sec. 6 of the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889, prohibiting otter-trawling in, inter alia, the Dornoch Firth as defined by the Act, applied to foreign trawlers. Peters v. Olsen, July 13, 1905 (J. C.), p. 86.

Sea—Foreshore—Rights of owners of foreshore included in harbour—Statute—Construction—Musselburgh Harbour Act, 1840, secs. 2, 49, 76.

3. The Musselburgh Harbour Act, 1840, sec. 2, enacts that the word "harbour" shall be understood to mean the "Harbour of Fisherrow," and shall include the whole precincts thereof as after specified. Sec. 76 enacts that for the purposes of this Act, and for no other purpose whatever, the said harbour shall be deemed to extend "along the shore" from the M. Burn on the west to the R. Burn on the east, and to seaward to the extent of one hundred yards beyond low-water mark opposite the shore between the aforesaid burns. The distance between the two burns was about two miles. Sec. 49 makes it unlawful for "any person to dig or take away from the said harbour or its precincts any sand, gravel, shingle, or stones," except with the authority of the Harbour Commissioners. In an action by the Harbour Commissioners against persons claiming to be the proprietors of part of the foreshore between the two burns, held (aff. judgment of Second Division) (1) that the harbour and its precincts included the whole foreshore between the two burns, rejecting a plea for the defenders that the words "along the shore" in sec. 76 of the Act excluded the foreshore; and (2) that the defenders, although owners of part of the foreshore, were not entitled to remove sand from their part without the authority of the Harbour Commissioners. Musselburgh Real Estate Co. v. Magistrates of Musselburgh, July 31, 1905 (H. L.), p. 113.

RIVER, LOCH, SEA—Continued.

Sea—Foreshore—Boundaries—"Sea-beach."

4. The burgh of Musselburgh, which was a burgh of barony and regality, held the commonty of the burgh under a charter from the lord superior, which gave the burgh right to the foreshore ex adverso on the north. In 1826 the burgh feued a portion of the commonty by a feu-contract, which described the subjects feued as bounded "on the north by the sea-beach." In a question between the burgh and the singular successors of the original feuars, raised in 1902, as to the ownership of the foreshore ex adverso of the ground feued, held, on a construction of the feu-contract and in the circumstances of the case, that the foreshore was not conveyed to the feuars by the feu-contract, but remained the property of the burgh.

Opinions (per the Lord Justice-Clerk and Lord Trayner) that a boundary by the "sea-beach" is not per se equivalent to a boundary by the "sea," and gives no right of property in the foreshore. Opinions contra, per Lord Young, Lord Moncreiff, and Lord Low, Ordinary. Magistrates of Musselburgh v. Musselburgh Real Estate Co., Limited, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 308.

SALE. Sale of Moveables—Constitution of Contract—Sale or Hire—Consensus in idem—Hire-Purchase Agreements.

1. A, a piano merchant, who was in the practice of disposing of his pianos in one of three ways—1st, in sales for cash; 2, in hire-purchase agreements; 3, in letting them for hire—made an oral offer to B of a piano "at the value of £26, payable 15s. per month." B accepted the offer, and after the lapse of a month paid certain instalments. B having subsequently failed to continue the payments, A raised an action in the Sheriff Court for re-delivery of the piano, alleging that it had been let on hire to B. It appeared from a proof that A in making his offer had intended the transaction to be on the hire-purchase system, while B understood it to be a sale for a price payable by instalments. The Sheriff held that as there had been no consensus in idem, there was no valid contract between the parties, and that A was entitled to have the piano restored. In an appeal, held that B understood, and was entitled to understand from the terms of A's offer, that the transaction was an immediate sale for a price payable by instalments, and that a contract of sale had been completed by B's acceptance. Muirhead & Turnbull v. Dickson, June 1, 1905, p. 686.

Sale of Moveables—Misrepresentation—Sham Antiques—Res ipsa loquitur.

2. A wholesale dealer sold certain articles of jewellery, which he had got made to resemble antiques, to a retail dealer. In an action of rescission of the sale on the ground of misrepresentation the buyer gave evidence to the effect that the seller had stated that the articles were the antiques they appeared to be. The evidence of the seller was that he said nothing about them. The Court, preferring the evidence of the buyer, held (aff. judgment of Lord Low) that the pursuer was entitled to rescind the sale. Opinion per Lord Kyllachy, that the offer of articles appearing to be antiques was in itself a misrepresentation, on the principle of res ipsa loquitur, and that the seller was not entitled to leave the articles to speak for themselves, but was bound to displace the inferences which to his knowledge their appearance was calculated to suggest. Patterson v. Landsberg & Son, May 24, 1905, p. 675.

SALE—Continued.

Sale of Moveables—Warranty—Proof of Warranty—Receipt—Pictures.

3. The seller of pictures granted receipts for the price in which the pictures were described as "by" certain artists named. Opinions that these receipts by themselves did not prove a warranty that the pictures were the works of these artists. Observations as to the proof of such a warranty in a sale of pictures. Hyslop v. Shirlaw, June 29, 1905, p. 875.

Sale of Moveables—Disconformity to contract—Right of Rejection—Timeous Rejection—Warranty.

4. In November 1900 a firm of printers ordered from a firm of engineers a Marinoni printing machine. By the contract the sellers undertook to fit the machine in the buyers' works, and leave it in thorough good working condition. The machine was fitted in March 1901, and, by instalments in the following April and August, the price, with the exception of £1, was paid. The buyers used the machine until July 1902, when they intimated rejection of it. During the period from March 1901 to July 1902 they had frequently intimated their dissatisfaction with the working of the machine, and requested the sellers to put it into proper working order, which the latter had unsuccessfully attempted to do. The buyers had made some unimportant alterations in the machine before rejecting it. In an action by the buyers against the sellers, concluding for warrant to remove the machine from their premises, and for repayment of the price so far as paid by them, it was proved that the machine had failed to work properly, and that this was due to its inherent defects, and not to any negligence on the part of the buyers or their workmen. Held that the sellers had failed to fulfil their contract, and that the buyers had timeously exercised their right of rejection. Aird & Coghill v. Pullan & Adams, Dec. 14, 1904, p. 258.

Sale of Moveables—Disconformity to Contract—Right of Rejection—Alternative Remedies—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 11, subsec. 2.

5. An engineer contracted to supply and fit up for an ironfounder two mechanical stokers for two boilers at his works. The stokers were fitted up, and in September 1902 the buyer intimated to the seller his rejection of the machines on the ground that they were not conform to contract, but he continued to use them until the end of 1902. In an action for the price held (1) that the buyer having retained and used the machines for two months after intimating his rejection, he was barred from pleading rejection; and (2) that the buyer after intimating his election to reject the goods was not entitled to fall back on the alternative remedy provided by the Sale of Goods Act of retaining the machines, and claiming damages for the seller's failure to perform a material part of the contract. Croom & Arthur v. Stewart & Co., March 14, 1905, p. 563.

Sale of Moveables—Disconformity to Contract—Right of Rejection—Timeous—Warranty—Pictures—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, secs. 11 (2) and 35.

6. The purchaser of four pictures sold, delivered, and paid for in January and February 1901, continued to possess them without making any complaint until July 1902. Doubts having then for the first time been suggested to him as to the genuineness of the pictures, he took the advice of experts. In consequence of the opinions received he intimated rejection of the pictures, and in October 1902 brought an action for repayment of the price, alleging a warranty of the pictures as the works of certain artists. For the purposes of the action it was ultimately admitted that they were not the works of these artists. Held that, even assuming the pictures to have been warranted as alleged, the buyer's rejection of them was not timeous, and that he was barred from maintaining the action. Hyslop v. Shirlaw, June 29, 1905, p. 875.

SALE—Continued.

Sale of Moveables—Sale on Approbation—Transference of property—Goods pawned by retail dealer—Title of pawnbroker—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 18, Rule 4 (a).

7. Ehrmann, a wholesale jeweller, was in the habit of sending goods to Anderson, a retail jeweller, with the wholesale prices marked, with power to sell and deliver on his own account and for his own profit any articles he might sell, Anderson being liable only for the wholesale price. At the same time Ehrmann sent a printed notice headed "approbation note," stating that the goods were to remain the property of the sender till invoiced by him to Anderson. Anderson having retained a diamond necklace for several months, Ehrmann in April 1903 urged Anderson to purchase the necklace himself, and offered to take bills for the price. Anderson agreed to do so, and the necklace was invoiced to him, and the bills were granted by him. Anderson having subsequently become bankrupt, Bryce, a pawnbroker, with whom Anderson had in December 1902, without Ehrmann's knowledge, pledged the necklace, raised an action of multiplepoinding to determine the right thereto. Claims were lodged by Ehrmann, by Bryce, and by Anderson's trustee, but the claim by the last was not insisted in. Held (1) that as in December 1902 Anderson had been put by Ehrmann in a position to give a good title to a purchaser, he could validly pledge the necklace, and had validly pledged it to Bryce; (2) that as Anderson's trustee did not insist in his claim Ehrmann was entitled to delivery of the necklace after satisfying Bryce's claim. Bryce v. Ehrmann, Oct. 28, 1904, p. 5.

Sale of Moveables—Stoppage in transitu—Duration of transit—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, secs. 44, 45.

8. By c.i.f. contract dated 11th February 1903, J. B. Snowball Company, Limited, Chatham, Miramichi, New Brunswick, sold a quantity of timber to M'Dowall & Neilson, Glasgow, at certain prices "including freight and insurance to Glasgow." The contract bore—"The goods are deliverable in the usual and customary manner at Miramichi with all reasonable despatch, according to the season of the year, and agreeably to the custom of the port during the shipping season 1903." "Should the vessel or vessels fixed for this contract be lost previous to loading, and after the name being declared to the buyer, then sellers to have the option of substituting another vessel or vessels, or cancelling the contract." The timber was shipped at Miramichi by the sellers, and the bill of lading taken in their own name. The bill of lading bore that the cargo was to be delivered in Glasgow to their order or assigns. On the ship's arrival at Glasgow the sellers stopped the goods in transitu. In an action of multiplepoinding brought in name of the shipmaster, the trustee of M'Dowall & Neilson, who had been sequestrated, contended that the place of delivery was Miramichi, and that the transitus there ended. Held on a construction of the contract that the port of delivery was Glasgow, and not Miramichi, and that the goods were in transitu when stopped. M'Dowall & Neilson's Trustee v. J. B. Snowball Co., Limited, Nov. 8, 1904, p. 35.

SALE—Continued.

Sale of Moveables—Stoppage in transitu—Transference of document of title for valuable consideration and in good faith—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 47.

9. In June 1903, Neilson lent £3000 to M'Dowall & Company, and in security took from M'Dowall & Company delivery-orders for timber belonging to them stored in Connal & Company's timber-yard. The orders were addressed to Haggart & Company, licensed timber-measurers, employed by M'Dowall & Company, and were intimated by Neilson to Haggart & Company, who replied acknowledging that they held the goods to his order. According to the practice of the timber trade in Glasgow, the measurers were allowed by the proprietors of the yard to have practically complete control over timber stored by them. They could remove the timber as and when they chose, and delivery-orders for the removal of timber were addressed to them. On 23d September 1903, Neilson at the request of M'Dowall & Company granted delivery-orders signed by him and addressed to Haggart & Company in favour of M'Dowall & Company for the timber in exchange for the bills of lading of a cargo of timber purchased by M'Dowall & Company from Dobell, Beckett, & Company then on its way to Glasgow. On the arrival of the cargo at Glasgow four days later, it was stopped in transitu by Dobell, Beckett, & Company. On 1st October M'Dowall & Company were sequestrated. In a question between Dobell, Beckett, & Company, and Neilson, held that the undertaking by Haggart & Company to hold to Neilson's order, surrendered by him when he received the bills of lading, not being an obligation granted by them personally, but only as the servants of M'Dowall & Company, was of no value, and was not "valuable consideration" in the sense of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, sec. 47, and that the stoppage in transitu was not affected by the transference of the bills of lading to Neilson. Dobell, Beckett, & Co. v. Neilson, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 281.

Sale of Heritage—Objections to Title—Expenses.

10. The purchaser of subjects exposed to public roup under the powers of a bond, who had objected to the title, found liable in the expenses of an action for implement in respect that none of his objections were substantial. Roscoe v. Mackersy, June 8, 1905, p. 761.

See Right in Security, 1, 2.

SCHOOL. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 4, 8, 13—Justiciary Cases, 28—Title to Sue, 3.

SEQUESTRATION. See Bankruptcy.

SEQUESTRATION FOR RENT. See Lease, 2.

SERVITUDE. See Property, 5.

SHERIFF. Jurisdiction — Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sec. 27 — Declarator of patrimonial right in burgh lands by Freemen.

1. Held that section 27 of the Burgh Police Act, 1892, did not give the Sheriff jurisdiction in an action brought by the freemen of a burgh of barony, which had been formed into a police burgh, for declarator that the freemen had a private and patrimonial right in the property of the burgh of barony. Freemen of Prestwick v. Provost, Magistrates, and Councillors of Prestwick, March 17, 1905, p. 602.

Indictment—Indictment in Sheriff Court at instance of private prosecutor with concurrence of Lord Advocate—Competency—Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1887, sec. 2—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, sec. 2 (6).

2. Held that apart from the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, an indictment in the Sheriff Court at the instance of a private prosecutor for his private interest with concurrence of the Lord Advocate was not competent, and that the proviso in sec. 2 (6) of that Act, assuming it to apply to Scotland, does not by implication make such an indictment competent. Dunbar v. Johnston, Dec. 22, 1904 (J. C.), p. 40.

SHERIFF—Continued.

Proof—Proof on Preliminary Plea—Employers Liability Act, 1880, secs. 4 and 7—Notice of Injury.

3. Per cur., after consultation with the Judges of the Second Division,—When a question of want of notice under the Employers Liability Act is raised, it should be dealt with by the Sheriff as a prejudicial plea, and a proof should be allowed on this prejudicial plea before a proof is allowed on the merits. Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., Limited, July 15, 1905, p. 958.

Summary Ejection—Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, sec. 5—Bond and Assignation in Security by liferentrix.

4. The creditors in a bond and assignation in security, granted by a liferentrix by constitution over her liferent interest in certain lands and a mansion-house, brought an action in the Sheriff Court under sec. 5 of the Heritable Securities Act, 1894, for the summary ejection of the liferentrix from the mansion-house, of which she was in personal occupation. Held that the liferentrix was not a "proprietor" in the sense of sec. 5 of the Act, and that therefore the summary remedy of ejection was incompetent. Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. Smeaton, Dec. 1, 1904, p. 174.

Small-Debt Court—Proof—Reference to Oath—Refusal to hear statement by deponent on oath—Appeal—Deviation from statutory enactments—Small-Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837, sec. 31.

5. In an action in the Small-Debt Court the pursuer's claim was referred to the defender's oath. After the defender had made his deposition on oath, his agent proposed to cross-examine him, and, in the hearing of the defender, stated what he expected to prove by the cross-examination. The Sheriff-substitute refused to allow the cross-examination. The defender, who was still in the witness-box, then volunteered to make a statement. The Sheriff-substitute refused to allow the defender to make this statement, and after hearing the parties' agents, gave decree against the defender. In an appeal by the defender under sec. 31 of the Small-Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837, held that the refusal of the Sheriff-substitute to allow the defender to make a statement in supplement to his deposition on oath constituted a "deviation in point of form from the statutory enactments" such as had or might have "prevented substantial justice from being done" within the meaning of sec. 31 of the Act. Appeal therefore sustained and cause remitted to the Sheriff-substitute to rehear the defender in the reference to oath. Paterson v. Cowie's Executor, July 12, 1905 (J. C.), p. 68.

Debts Recovery Court—Citation—Objection to citation by party appearing—"Ordinary Sheriff Court"—Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1876, secs. 2 and 12—Debts Recovery (Scotland) Act, 1867.

6. Held that sec. 12, subsec. (2), of the Sheriff Courts Act, 1876, applied to an action raised by summons under the Debts Recovery (Scotland) Act, 1867, in respect that such an action was "a civil proceeding in the ordinary Sheriff Court." Hamilton v. Kerr, Dec. 3, 1904, p. 182.

Debts Recovery Court—Interlocutor—Necessity for findings in fact and in law—Debts Recovery (Scotland) Act, 1867, secs. 9 and 10.

7. Held that in actions under the Debts Recovery (Scotland) Act, 1867, the Sheriff is not bound to pronounce an interlocutor containing findings in fact and findings in law, unless in cases in which he has taken a note of the evidence upon the requisition of one or both of the parties. Hamilton v. Kerr, Dec. 3, 1904, p. 182.

See Cessio Bonorum—Master and Servant—Process.

SHIP. Collision—Moving and stationary vessels—Onus—Compulsory Pilotage—Liability for defective equipment of ship.

1. When a vessel in motion collides with a vessel at rest the presumption is that the former is in fault, and this presumption will not be over come by proof that the colliding vessel was compulsorily in charge of a pilot, unless it is also proved that the collision was due to the fault of the pilot. Mann, Macneal, & Co. v. Ellerman Lines, Dec. 6, 1904, p. 214.

Collision—Departure from Collision Regulations—Onus—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, Articles 20, 21, 22, 23, and 27—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, secs. 418 and 419 (4).

2. The s.s. "Kyanite," finding herself in dangerous proximity to the "Buccleuch," a ship under sail, whose lights were inadequate, and being unable to tell what the course of the sailing ship was, starboarded her helm in order to turn away from the sailing ship, and continued to go full speed ahead. This brought the "Kyanite" across the course of the "Buccleuch," and, two or three minutes after the "Buccleuch" was first sighted by the "Kyanite," a collision took place, the stem of the "Buccleuch" striking the "Kyanite" on the starboard side, nearly amidships. In cross actions of damages, held (1) that although the "Kyanite" did in fact depart from the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, by crossing the course of the "Buccleuch," she, being wholly unaware of the course of the latter owing to her inadequate lights, was not chargeable with fault in respect of this departure from the regulations; but (2) that the "Kyanite" was to be held at fault in respect that she had infringed article 23 of the regulations by failing to stop and reverse in the short space of time after she sighted the sailing ship, and had failed to discharge the onus which lay on her of shewing that her failure to comply with this article of the regulations was excusable, by proving either that her departure from the regulations was the only chance of escaping a collision, or that the risk of collision would have been increased by obeying the regulations. Windram v. Robertson, May 23, 1905, p. 665.

Collision—Damages—Limitation of Liability—Cross actions of damages between the two Shipowners—Decree in favour of one of the Shipowners—Petition for limitation of liability at the instance of the other Shipowner—Competency of reopening the question of damages at the instance of cargo owners—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, secs. 503 and 504.

3. A collision between the s.s. "Anglia" and the s.s. "Olga" resulted in the sinking of the "Anglia" and in the "Olga" being slightly damaged. In cross actions of damages between the owners of the "Anglia" and the owners of the "Olga," both vessels were found to be in fault, and the owners of the "Anglia" obtained decree against the owners of the "Olga" for £7149, 14s. 7d., being one-half of the value of the "Anglia" under deduction of one-half of the damage to the "Olga." The owners of the "Olga" then presented a petition under sections 503 and 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for limitation of their liability to £6215, 4s., being £8 per ton on a tonnage of 776·90, the tonnage of the "Olga." The owners of the "Anglia" lodged a claim in the petition claiming to be ranked on the sum of £6215, 4s. for £7149, 4s. 7d., the sum in the decree obtained by them in the cross actions of damages. The owners of the cargo of the "Anglia" also lodged a claim in which besides claiming to be ranked in respect of the value of the cargo, they maintained that the decree for £7149, 4s. 7d. was not binding on them; that the value of the "Anglia," on the basis of which that decree was reached, was a gross over-estimate of her true value; that the owners of the "Olga" had no interest to contest, and had not in fact contested, the question of the value of the "Anglia," in respect that, once it was decided that both vessels were to blame, the question of exact values became immaterial to the owners of the "Olga," whose limit of £8 per ton was reached by the finding that both vessels were to blame. The cargo owners of the "Anglia" did not aver that the decree for £7149, 4s. 7d., had been obtained collusively or of consent or by way of compromise. Held that the claim of the owners of the "Anglia" having been duly constituted against the debtor by a decree in foro, must be taken at the amount fixed in the decree. Owners of the "Olga" v. Owners of the "Anglia," June 6, 1905, p. 739.

SHIP—Continued.

Collision—Damages—Limitation of Liability—Interest—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, sec. 503.

4. Held that in addition to £8 per ton of her tonnage the owners of a ship liable in damages for collision were liable in payment of interest at 4 per cent from the date of the collision until payment or consignation of the damages. Owners of the "Olga" v. Owners of the "Anglia," June 6, 1905, p. 739.

Collision—Damages—Limitation of Liability—Ascertainment of Tonnage—Deduction for Crew Space—Certificate of Board of Trade Surveyor—Foreign Vessel—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, secs. 84, 503, and Schedule VI. (3)—Order in Council, 21*st November* 1895.

5. An Order in Council of 21st November 1895, issued under section 84 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, decrees "that the merchant ships of the kingdom of Denmark, the measurement whereof shall . . . have been ascertained and denoted in the certificates of registry or other national papers of such ships, shall be deemed to be of the tonnage denoted in their certificates of registry or other national papers, in the same manner, to the same extent, and for the same purposes as the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of a British ship is deemed to be the tonnage of that ship." Held that the owners of a Danish vessel with a Danish certificate setting forth her measurements, including the tonnage taken up by crew space, were not entitled, in ascertaining the tonnage of the vessel for the purposes of section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to deduct the tonnage set forth in the certificate as taken up by crew space, in respect that the space so set forth had not been certified by one of the surveyors under the Act as required by Schedule VI. Owners of the "Olga" v. Owners of the "Anglia," June 6, 1905, p. 739.

Charter-Party—Lay-Days—"Working Day of twenty-four consecutive hours."

6. A charter-party provided that the ship was to be loaded and discharged "at the rate of 500 tons per working day of twenty-four consecutive hours (weather permitting), Sundays and holidays always excepted." Held that a "working day of twenty-four consecutive hours" meant a period of twenty-four actually consecutive hours (i.e., including the hours of night, and not an artificial period made up of twenty-four working hours, i.e., excluding the hours of night. Turnbull, Scott, & Co. v. Cruickshank & Co., Dec. 15, 1904, p. 265.

Charter-Party—Demurrage—Exceptions—"Stoppage of trains or any cause beyond the personal control" of charterers—Delivery of cargo "as customary."

7. By a charter-party the ship was bound to deliver the cargo consisting of iron ore "as customary" at the port of discharge where and as directed by the consignees. The charterers were exempt from liability for demurrage in case of delay, inter alia, through "stoppage of trains or any cause beyond the personal control" of the charterers. The time taken for loading and discharging having exceeded the lay-days, the shipowners brought an action for demurrage against the charterers, who pleaded the exemption clause. It was proved that the customary mode of discharging iron ore at Ardrossan, the port of discharge, when the cargo had been sold (as the cargo in question had been), was direct into railway waggons, although in special circumstances the harbour authorities might give permission for part of a cargo being discharged on the quay. It was also proved that delay in discharging the cargo had been caused by the railway company failing to supply a sufficient number of waggons per day. The charter-party took the ship bound to work at night if requested, but the charterers did not request the harbour authorities for permission to work at night. Held (1) that the customary mode at Ardrossan of discharging a cargo of iron ore which had been sold was into railway waggons direct; (2) that the charterers were not liable for demurrage in respect of ordinary working hours where the delay was caused by want of railway waggons; but (3) that the absence of waggons during the hours of night did not exempt them from demurrage, as the railway company could not be expected to supply waggons at night without notice. Turnbull, Scott, & Co. v. Cruickshank & Co., Dec. 15, 1904, p. 265.

Charter-party—Damages for detention—Charterers' obligation to have cargo ready—Custom of Port.

8. Under a charter-party dated 30th May 1900, which did not fix the time within which the ship was to be loaded, the s.s. "Ardandearg" was bound to proceed to Newcastle, New South Wales, and there load a cargo of Australian coals "in the usual and customary manner, as ordered by the charterers, which they bind themselves to ship (except in the event of riot, strikes, &c. . . . or any other accidents or causes beyond the control of the charterers, which may delay her loading)." By the custom of the port of Newcastle, of which both parties were aware, a loading berth could not be procured until a coaling order from a colliery was produced. These coaling orders were issued in regular turn. There were no facilities for storing coal at the harbour. The charterers ordered a cargo of coal from the Lambton Colliery, in the neighbourhood of Newcastle, ten days after the ship was chartered. On 14th July when the "Ardandearg" arrived, two other ships having coaling orders from the same colliery had arrived before her. In consequence of the colliery having only an output of 350 tons per day, the loading of these ships was not completed till 13*th August. The "Ardandearg," having then obtained a colliery order and a berth, completed her loading on* 23*d August and sailed the following day.* Held (rev. judgment of First Division) that the charterers were liable in damages to the shipowners for the detention of the ship, on the ground that there was an absolute obligation on the charterers to have a cargo ready when the "Ardandearg" arrived, and that no facts had been proved to qualify that obligation. Ardan Steamship Co., Limited, v. Weir & Co., Aug. 4, 1905, (H. L.), p. 126.

Charter-party—Failure to provide Cargo—Measure of damage.

9. Manufacturers of wood pulp at Stocka, Sweden, in January 1900 entered into a charter-party with a British shipowner for the carriage of two cargoes of wood pulp from Stocka to Cardiff, the first to be lifted at Stocka "May (f.o.w.), (first open water) and the second in August/September, owners' option." The ordinary length of the voyage was twenty-two days. In an action by the charterers against the shipowner for damages for an admitted breach of the contract by the failure of the shipowner to send a ship to Stocka for the second cargo before the last day of September, it was proved that the shipment was intended by the charterers for delivery at Cardiff in implement of a contract of sale between the charterers and Owen, Cardiff, which set forth as the "mode and place of delivery—c.i.f., Cardiff. Time of delivery—in two cargoes, first open water, and August/September 1900." The delivery of the first cargo was duly made, but on 29*th September Owen having ascertained that the ship for the second cargo could not sail from Stocka*

SHIP—Continued.

before 12th October, bought in against the charterers the remainder of the wood pulp contracted to be delivered. The charterers paid Owen the loss they had thus sustained, and claimed this sum from the shipowner as the damage sustained by them. The First Division, construing the obligation in the contract of sale, to deliver c.i.f. Cardiff August/September, to import an obligation to make actual delivery of the cargo at Cardiff before the end of September, held that as by the charter-party the ship was not bound to load at Stocka before the end of September the charterers' failure to deliver the goods at Cardiff by that date was not due to non-implement of the charter-party. In an appeal by the charterers, held (rev. the judgment) that when the charterers ascertained that the ship could not leave Stocka before 12th October, they were entitled to buy in, or to allow their purchaser to buy in, other goods to replace those which could not be delivered in terms of the charter-party, and that the measure of damages for the shipowner's breach of contract was the extra cost thus occasioned.

Opinions that the words in the contract of sale,—"Mode and place of delivery—c.i.f., Penarth Dock, Cardiff. Time of delivery—in two cargoes, first open water and August/September 1900"—imported an obligation to ship, not to deliver at Cardiff, both at first open water, and in August or September. Ströms Bruks Aktie Bolag v. Hutchison, Aug. 4, 1905 (H. L.), p. 131.

SLANDER. See Reparation, 7 to 15.

STATUTE. Construction—Headings in Statute—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, sec. 104.

1. Opinions (per the Lord Justice-Clerk and Lord Kyllachy) that a heading in a statute, as distinguished from a marginal rubric, was part of the statute, and was to be taken into account in construing the section. M'Ewen v. Magistrates of Perth, June 2, 1905, p. 714.

Retrospective Effect—Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, First Schedule, Part III.

2. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, gives tenants right to compensation, inter alia, for "laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy." Held that a tenant, whose tenancy terminated less than two years from the date of the Act, was entitled to compensation under this enactment. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, July 20, 1905, p. 1115.

Applicability to Scotland—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, secs. 29 and 107.

3. Held that sec. 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, applies to Scotland, and that in an action for infringement of patent particulars of the breach must be set forth, but that in view of the terms of sec. 107, which provides that nothing in the Act shall affect the forms of process of the Courts in Scotland, the particulars fell to be set forth in the condescendence, and not in a separate statement. Mica Insulator Co., Limited, v. Bruce Peebles & Co., Limited, July 11, 1905, p. 944.

Applicability to Scotland—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, sec. 1 (1), (3).

4. Opinion, per Lord Ordinary, that the provisions of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, are applicable to Scotland, in so far as they deal with the case of companies which are being wound up under the Companies Acts. Liquidators of Scottish Drug Depot, Limited, v. Fraser, May 16, 1905, p. 646.

Applicability to Scotland—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, sec. 2 (6).

5. Question, whether the proviso in sec. 2 (6) of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, that a person charged before a Court of summary jurisdiction shall be informed of his right to be tried on indictment, applies to Scotland. Dunbar v. Johnston, Dec. 22, 1904 (J. C.), p. 40.

STATUTE—Continued.

STATUTES.
1587, cap. 91. See Justiciary Cases, 15.
1696, cap. 5. See Bankruptcy, 1.
6 Anne, cap. 53 (Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1707). See Revenue, 6.
48 Geo. III. cap. 55 (Inhabited House Duty Act, 1808). See Revenue, 10.
48 Geo. III. cap. 151 (Court of Session Act, 1808). See Appeal, 1—Process, 11.
1 and 2 Geo. IV. cap. 38 (Court of Session Act, 1821). See Administration of Justice, 1.
6 Geo. IV. cap. 120 (Judicature Act, 1825). See Process, 18 to 22.
2 and 3 Will. IV. cap. 65 (Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1832). See Election Law, 1.
2 and 3 Will. IV. cap. 68 (Game (Scotland) Act, 1832). See Justiciary Cases, 10.
3 and 4 Will. IV. cap. 13 (Public Revenue (Scotland) Act, 1833). See Revenue, 6.
3 Will. IV. cap. lxiv. (Glasgow Faculty of Procurators Widows Fund Act, 1833). See Insurance, 2.
1 Vict. cap. 41 (Small-Debt (Scotland) Act, 1837). See Sheriff, 5.
3 Vict. cap. xxiii. (Musselburgh Harbour Act, 1840). See Harbour.
4 and 5 Vict. cap. 38 (School Sites Act, 1841). See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 8.
5 and 6 Vict. cap. 35 (Income-Tax Act, 1842). See Revenue, 4 to 8.
8 and 9 Vict. cap. 33 (Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845). See Railway.
8 and 9 Vict. cap. 83 (Poor-Law (Scotland) Act, 1845). See Poor, 4.
15 and 16 Vict. cap. 27 (Evidence (Scotland) Act, 1852). See Justiciary Cases, 21.
16 and 17 Vict. cap. 34 (Income-Tax Act, 1853). See Revenue, 4, 5.
19 and 20 Vict. cap. 56 (Exchequer Court (Scotland) Act, 1856). See Revenue, 6.
19 and 20 Vict. cap. 79 (Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856). See Bankruptcy.
19 and 20 Vict. cap. 113 (Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856). See Process, 16.
20 and 21 Vict. cap. 71 (Lunacy (Scotland) Act, 1857). See Poor, 3.
24 and 25 Vict. cap. 109 (Salmon Fisheries (England) Amendment Act, 1861). See Justiciary Cases, 12.
25 and 26 Vict. cap. 89 (Companies Act, 1862). See Company.
25 and 26 Vict. cap. 97 (Salmon-Fisheries (Scotland) Act, 1862). See Justiciary Cases, 12, 13.
27 and 28 Vict. cap. 53 (Summary Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1864). See Justiciary Cases, 2, 3, 22, 25, 26.
29 and 30 Vict. cap. 118 (Industrial Schools Act, 1866). See Justiciary Cases, 28.
29 and 30 Vict. cap. cclxxiii. (Glasgow Police Act, 1866). See Police, 4.
31 and 32 Vict. cap. 48 (Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, 1868). See Election Law, 1, 2, 3.
31 and 32 Vict. cap. 96 (Debts Recovery (Scotland) Act, 1867). See Sheriff, 6, 7.
31 and 32 Vict. cap. 100 (Court of Session Act, 1868). See Process, 7, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.
31 and 32 Vict. cap. 101 (Titles to Land Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1868). See Right in Security, 1.
37 and 38 Vict. cap. 94 (Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874). See Superior and Vassal, 3, 4, 5, 6.

STATUTES—Continued.
38 and 39 Vict. cap. 62 (Summary Prosecutions Appeals (Scotland) Act, 1875). See Justiciary Cases, 3.
38 and 39 Vict. cap. 63 (Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875). See Public Health, 2.
38 Vict. cap. vi. (Glasgow Faculty of Procurators Act, 1875). See Insurance, 2.
39 and 40 Vict. cap. 70 (Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1876). See Sheriff, 6.
43 and 44 Vict. cap. 42 (Employers Liability Act, 1880). See Proof 17, 21, 22—Reparation, 23.
44 and 45 Vict. cap. 21 (Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881). See Succession, 2.
44 and 45 Vict. cap. 33 (Summary Jurisdiction (Scotland) Act, 1881). See Justiciary Cases, 3.
45 and 46 Vict. cap. 61 (Bills of Exchange Act, 1882). See Bills of Exchange, 2.
46 and 47 Vict. cap. 57 (Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883). See Patent, 2, 3.
46 and 47 Vict. cap. 62 (Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883). See Lease, 6.
48 and 49 Vict. cap. 3 (Representation of the People Act, 1884). See Election Law, 2.
48 and 49 Vict. cap. 16 (Registration Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1885). See Election Law, 3.
49 and 50 Vict. cap. 29 (Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886). See Crofter.
50 and 51 Vict. cap. 25 (First Offenders Act, 1887). See Justiciary Cases, 16.
50 and 51 Vict. cap. 28 (Merchandise Marks Act, 1887). See Justiciary Cases, 14, 20.
50 and 51 Vict. cap. 35 (Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act, 1887). See Justiciary Cases, 14.
50 and 51 Vict. cap. 58 (Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887). See Justiciary Cases, 9—Master and Servant, 10, 11—Reparation, 22.
51 and 52 Vict. cap. 8 (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888). See Revenue, 9.
51 and 52 Vict. cap. 62 (Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888). See Company, 8.
52 and 53 Vict. cap. 23 (Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889). See Justiciary Cases, 1.
52 and 53 Vict. cap. 50 (Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889). See Local Government.
54 and 55 Vict. cap. 3 (Custody of Children Act, 1891). See Minor and Pupil, 2.
55 and 56 Vict. cap. 55 (Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892). See Justiciary Cases, 5, 6, 7, 8—Police, 1, 7—Sheriff, 1.
56 and 57 Vict. cap. 61 (Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893). See Limitation of Action.
56 and 57 Vict. cap. 71 (Sale of Goods Act, 1893). See Sale, 5 to 9.
57 and 58 Vict. cap. 30 (Finance Act, 1894). See Revenue, 1, 2, 3.
57 and 58 Vict. cap. 44 (Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894). See Right in Security, 3.
57 and 58 Vict. cap. 56 (Statute Law Revision Act, 1894). See Justiciary Cases, 3.
57 and 58 Vict. cap. 60 (Merchant Shipping Act, 1894). See Ship, 2, 3, 4, 5.
58 and 59 Vict. cap. 37 (Factory and Workshop Act, 1895). See Master and Servant, 7.

STATUTES—Continued.
60 and 61 Vict. cap. 37 (Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897). See Master and Servant.
60 and 61 Vict. cap. 38 (Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897). See Public Health, 1.
63 and 64 Vict. cap. 49 (Town-Councils (Scotland) Act, 1900). See Burgh, 6.
63 and 64 Vict. cap. 50 (Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900). See Lease, 3, 4, 5.
63 and 64 Vict. cap. xxviii. (Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900). See Burgh, 2.
63 and 64 Vict. cap. cl. (Glasgow Building Regulations Act, 1900). See Police, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.
1 Edw. VII. cap. 22 (Factory and Workshop Act, 1901). See Master and Servant, 8, 9.
2 Edw. VII. cap. 25 (Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1902). See Valuation Acts, 6.
3 Edw. VII. cap. 25 (Licensing (Scotland) Act, 1903). See Public-House.
3 Edw. VII. cap. 36 (Motor Car Act, 1903). See Justiciary Cases, 17.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. See Sale, 8, 9.

STREET. See Police.

SUCCESSION. Terce—Jus relictæ—Goodwill of Public-House.
1. Circumstances in which held, in a question as to a widow's legal rights, that the value of the goodwill of two public-houses, one of which was occupied by the deceased as tenant, while the other belonged to him as proprietor, was heritable estate. Muirhead's Trustees v. Muirhead, Feb. 17, 1905, p. 496.

Legitim—Discharge—Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881, secs. 7 and 8.
2. An antenuptial marriage-contract, executed in 1848, declared that the provisions therein made for the child or children of the marriage should be in full satisfaction "of all bairns' part of gear, executry, and everything else which they could respectively claim or demand by and through the decease of" their mother. The mother having died in 1899, a son, who had taken his provision under the marriage-contract, claimed also, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1881, legitim from such part of his mother's moveable estate as did not fall under the marriage-contract, and which she had disposed of by will. Held (aff. judgment of First Division) that the son's claim to legitim from his mother's estate was excluded by the above clause in the marriage-contract. Dunbar Dunbar v. Dunbar Dunbar, April 11, 1905 (H. L.), p. 92.

Conversion—Judicial Factor—Sale of heritage to maintain ward.
3. The curator bonis of a lunatic expended the whole moveable estate of the ward on her maintenance, and thereafter, on the advice of the Accountant of Court, and by the authority of the Sheriff, sold the ward's heritable property, the income of which was not sufficient to maintain her. Held that the balance of the ward's estate remaining at her death was moveable quoad succession, on the ground that in order to maintain the ward it was necessary for the curator to sell her heritable estate. M'Adam's Executor v. Souters, Dec. 2, 1904, p. 179.

Testament—Pencil alterations on holograph will.
4. Held that unauthenticated holograph pencil alterations on a holograph will written in ink had no effect. Currie's Trustees v. Currie, Dec. 24, 1904, p. 364.

Testament—Revocation—Special Destination of Heritage—Subsequent General Disposition.
5. In 1898 and 1902 A purchased with moneys belonging to himself certain heritable properties, taking the titles (which were registered), "to and in favour of the said A and B, wife of and residing with the said A, and to the survivor of them, and to their heirs and assignees whomsoever." A died in July 1904 leaving a trust-disposition and settlement, dated April 1904, by which he conveyed to trustees his whole estate, heritable and moveable, including all means and estate over which he had power of disposal by will or otherwise. The purposes were to pay the liferent of the whole residue to his widow, burdened with an obligation to maintain and educate the children, and the fee to the children on the liferenter's death. Power was given to the trustees (1) to encroach upon capital if the income was insufficient for the maintenance of the widow and children, and (2) to sell and burden heritage. At his death the testator had personal estate of the value of £3337. The heritable properties above mentioned were valued at £4900. The testator had no other heritable property. He was survived by a widow and by eight children, two in pupilarity and four in minority. Held that the settlement, read in the light of the circumstances, shewed the testator's intention to evacuate the special destinations of the heritable properties, and that the settlement had this effect. Morrison's Trustees v. Morrison, June 23, 1905, p. 810.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

Construction of Testamentary Writings—Will made in Foreign Country—Words importing gift of heritage—"Effects."

6. A native of British Guiana who had been resident in Scotland for some years died in 1903 possessed of heritage in Scotland, leaving a will which had been executed in British Guiana in 1891. The will bore that the testator was about to leave the colony, and that in order to prevent disputes arising after his demise "as to the disposition of my effects in or out of the colony. . . . I now order as follows . . . I will and bequeath to . . . all my effects to be divided equally between the three . . ." The will concluded with a nomination of executors. Held (1) that the question whether the will carried the Scottish heritage was a question for the Scottish Court; (2) that as the will was expressed in ordinary language, and as there was no relevant averment that it contained any technical term—or that it fell to be construed in accordance with any technical canon of construction—peculiar to the colony, it was not necessary for the Court to resort to any foreign Court for aid in its interpretation; and (3) that the will did not convey the testator's heritable estate in Scotland. Griffith's Judicial Factor v. Griffith's Executors, Jan. 31, 1905, p. 470.

Construction of Testamentary Writings — Conditions — Restrictions on Vested Right—Bequest to "A for behoof of his family."

7. A testator by his holograph will bequeathed one-fifth share of residue to his brother A "for behoof of his family." Held (1) that this expression was equivalent to "in trust for his children," and that the beneficial right was in the children only; and (2) that the children being of full age were entitled to immediate payment. Michie's Executors v. Michie, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 509.

Construction of Testamentary Writings—Bequest to Executors—Certain persons or "the successor of each" appointed executors—Right of successors to share in bequest.

8. A testator directed certain of his books to "be parted among" his executors. He appointed as his executors, inter alios, his brothers A and B and his sister C, "or their representatives, namely, the successor of each as representing their respective families." B predeceased the testator. C declined to accept office, and her eldest son was assumed as an executor. Held that B's eldest son being an executor as the successor and representative of his father was entitled to share in the bequest, but that C's eldest son was not so entitled. Michie's Executors v. Michie, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 509.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

Construction of Testamentary Writings—"Survivors or survivor" held to mean "others or other."

9. In a mortis causa disposition and settlement the granter disponed certain heritable subjects to A, his youngest son, "and the heirs whomsoever of his body, whom failing to the heirs of the bodies of" B, C, D, and E, his other children, one-fourth to each, "and in case of the death of any of the said B, C, D, and E without issue, or that the children of any of them should fail, then to the heirs of the bodies of the survivors or survivor of the said B, C, D, and E, and their heirs, successors, and assignees whomsoever." Held that the words "survivors or survivor" fell to be read as "others or other." Smith's Trustees v. Smith's Trustees, June 23, 1905, p. 815.

Specific Legacy—Power to sell specific subject held in trust for liferenter and fiars.

10. A testator, inter alia, directed her trustees "to hold in their own name my shares of the G. C. Railway Company, and pay the dividends or annual income thereof to" her nephew George "during his lifetime, and immediately after the decease of the said" George "I direct my said trustees to realise the said shares and to pay the price or value thereof" to George's children, whom failing to his heirs, executors, or successors whomsoever. The truster empowered her trustees "to sell and realise . . . the whole or any part of my estate, heritable or moveable, in so far as may be necessary or proper in their discretion." In 1905, as the shares were yielding no income, George requested the trustees to sell them and to reinvest the proceeds. In a special case presented by the trustees held that the trustees had power to sell the shares. Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees, July 11, 1905, p. 931.

Destination—Substitution or Conditional Institution—Date at which heirs to be sought.

11. By a marriage-contract certain heritable subjects belonging to the wife were disponed in fee "to the children of said intended marriage equally among them, share and share alike, whom failing to the heirs and assignees" of the wife. The wife died survived by one child, who died in pupilarity. Held that the last clause of the destination was a substitution and not a conditional institution merely; and that the heirs of the wife were to be sought as at the date of the child's death. Smith's Trustees v. Smith's Trustees, June 23, 1905, p. 815.

Legacy to a class—Direction "to hold"—Period of distribution.

12. A testator directed his trustees "to hold" a fund in trust for all the children of A who, being sons, should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. During A's lifetime, certain of his children who had attained majority claimed payment of their shares. Held that as the class of beneficiaries could not be ascertained till after the death of A, no child was entitled to payment of a share before that event. Hope Johnstone v. Sinclair's Trustees, Nov. 1, 1904, p. 25.

Fee or Liferent—Vesting—Repugnancy.

13. A trust-disposition and settlement contained the following clauses:—"(Sixth) I leave and bequeath the residue of my estate, means, and effects, heritable and moveable, for behoof of all my children equally, and direct my trustees to pay over to each of my sons, as soon as conveniently may be after my death, the share of said residue falling to him: . . . And my trustees shall hold the shares of my daughters during their respective lives, and on the death of each shall pay her share to such person or persons as she may appoint by any revocable deed executed by her after she has attained the age of twenty-one years, and failing such appointment, then to her own nearest heirs"; but with power to the trustees to encroach on the share of which a daughter "may be receiving the income" to an extent not exceeding £200 to provide her with an outfit on marriage. There followed a declaration that "the whole of the said provisions, whether of capital or income, so far as conceived in favour of or devolving upon females, shall be for their own sole and separate use, shall not be assignable by them or attachable for their debts or obligations, and shall be exclusive of the jus mariti and right of administration of any husband or husbands they may marry, and shall not be subject to the debts of such husbands or the diligence of their creditors." Held that on a sound construction of the above provisions the daughters had not a right of fee, but merely a liferent with a power to test on the capital of their shares. Forrest's Trustees v. Reid, Nov. 25, 1904, p. 142.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

14. A testator by the third purpose of his trust-disposition and settlement directed his trustees to divide the residue of his estate into four equal shares, "which several shares shall continue to be held by my said trustees, or paid, applied, or disposed of by them in manner hereinafter directed." In the fifth purpose the testator directed the trustees to hold and invest in their own names one share for behoof of his second son. The trustees were further directed to pay to the son during his survivance the free income of the share, with power to them to make advances, not exceeding £2000, out of capital "in the event of the marriage of my said son to the satisfaction of my said trustees, or if for any other reason they may judge it expedient and prudent to make such advances." Power was also given to the son to provide, with consent of the trustees, an annuity for his widow out of the income of the share, and to apportion "by deed, inter vivos, or by testament, to take effect upon his decease," the share among his children. The testator further provided that in the event of the son "dying unmarried" the share should "be divided equally among his surviving nearest of kin per stirpes." The son survived the testator, and married and obtained an advance of £2000 from the trustees. In a special case the son maintained that he was entitled to payment of the share. Held that the son was not entitled to payment, and that the trustees were bound to hold the share for his behoof during his lifetime. Anderson's Trustees v. Anderson, Dec. 7, 1904, p. 224.

Vesting—Express provision as to vesting—Vesting on youngest child attaining twenty-five—Claim by sole surviving child at age of twenty-three.

15. A testator directed his trustees to hold the residue for behoof of his children equally, payable on the youngest attaining the age of twenty-five, the lawful issue of children dying before that period being entitled to the share which their parent would have taken, and the share of children dying without issue being divisible among the survivors jointly with the issue of predeceasers. He also directed that until the period of division the income of each child's share should be applied for its education and to paying their mother for their maintenance between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. It was declared that the period of vesting should be as at the date when the youngest child should attain twenty-five. The testator was predeceased by his wife, but survived by two children, one of whom died without issue before the period of payment. The surviving child when twenty-three years of age demanded payment of the residue from the trustees. Held that on a true construction of the settlement the clause of vesting was still applicable although only one child survived, and that consequently the residue had not yet vested in him. Lawrie's Trustees v. Lawrie, July 6, 1905, p. 910.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

Condition—Conditions impossible of fulfilment.

16. A testator directed his trustees to expend two sums of £20,000 each upon the erection of two Roman Catholic churches, or "such smaller sum or sums as may be necessary . . . my intention being merely to have such church . . . completed although it may be at a less cost than £20,000 each"; any unexpended balance to revert to the residue of his estate. Except for a provision of £10,000 for the endowment of one of the two churches, the trust-disposition and settlement contained no provision for endowment. Upon the completion of the buildings the trustees were directed to convey them, on certain specified conditions, to trustees to be appointed respectively by the Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese in which the churches were to be situated. In a multiplepoinding raised after the death of the testator the Bishops stated they were unable to accept the bequests under the conditions specified, on the ground that owing to want of endowment the conditions could not be implemented. They proposed that the testamentary trustees should either accumulate the funds till they amounted to a sum sufficient to build and endow the churches or that the fund should be applied in accordance with a scheme to be approved by the Court. Held that either proposal was contrary to the truster's intention, and that the bequests having lapsed owing to the refusal of the Bishops to accept them on the conditions specified by the testator the sums in question fell into residue. Marquess of Bute's Trustees v. Marquess of Bute, Nov. 16, 1904, p. 49.

Faculties and Powers—Validity of Exercise of Power—Whether power exercised or not—Partial Invalidity—Exercise by General Settlement—Power to appoint among issue—Appointment to daughter in liferent, with fee to her issue as she should appoint—Power to daughter to give liferent to husband.

17. In a deed of settlement by way of indenture between A, a married woman, and trustees, it was, inter alia, agreed that the trustees should hold the trust funds in trust for A's issue, at such ages or times not earlier than twenty-one or marriage, in such shares, and in such manner, as she should appoint. In a hotchpot clause reference was made to any "child who or any of whose issue shall take under such appointment." By her will A bequeathed to other trustees the whole residue of her estate, "including all property over which I have power of appointment," upon trust, after payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, to hold for her two children (a son and daughter), or such one of them as should attain twenty-four, or die under that age leaving lawful issue, the daughter's share to be retained and the income paid to her during life, and the capital after her death to be held for her issue, "whether children or remoter descendants," in such manner as she should appoint, with power to her to appoint to her husband, if he survived her, not more than a moiety of the income during his life. Held (1) that A by her will intended to exercise, and had exercised, the power of appointment reserved in the settlement; (2) that the exercise of the power was not invalid in respect of its taking the form of a conveyance to other trustees who held other funds, and, inter alia, for purposes which could not be satisfied out of the funds which were the subject of the power; (3) that the expression "issue" in the settlement included remoter descendants than children, and that consequently the daughter's issue were objects of the power; (4) that the testatrix had validly exercised the power by giving a liferent to her daughter with a power of appointment of the fee among her issue, and the fee to her daughter's issue as the daughter should appoint; (5) that the daughter's husband not being an object of the power the will was not a valid exercise of the power in so far as it gave the daughter right to provide a liferent to her husband, but that this provision was to be held pro non scripto, and did not affect the validity of the exercise of the power otherwise.

SUCCESSION—Continued.

A had also under her father's will a power to appoint among her issue "born or to be born during" her life, "or within twenty-one years after her death," with such future or other trusts for their benefit as she should appoint. Held that A had also validly exercised this power by her will except in so far as she gave right to her daughter to provide a liferent to her husband, and in particular, that the exercise of the power was not necessarily invalidated owing to A having given her daughter power to appoint to issue, whether children or remoter descendants, without any restriction to issue born within twenty-one years of A's death. Dalziel v. Dalziel's Trustees—Dalziel v. Henderson's Trustees, March 9, 1905, p. 545.

See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts—Fee and Liferent—Marriage-Contract,—Trust.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL. Subject feued—Description—Boundaries.

1. The burgh of Musselburgh, which was a burgh of barony and regality, held the commonty of the burgh under a charter from the lord superior, which gave the burgh right to the foreshore ex adverso on the north. In 1826 the burgh feued a portion of the commonty by a feu-contract, which described the subjects feued as bounded "on the north by the sea-beach." In a question between the burgh and the singular successors of the original feuars, raised in 1902, as to the ownership of the foreshore ex adverso of the ground feued, held, on a construction of the feu-contract and in the circumstances of the case, that the foreshore was not conveyed to the feuars by the feu-contract, but remained the property of the burgh. Magistrates of Musselburgh v. Musselburgh Real Estate Co., Limited, Dec. 21, 1904, p. 308.

Charter of Novodamus—Glebe—Minerals—Foreshore.

2. In exchange for an old glebe, a new glebe bounded by the sea was acquired by excambion in 1817. The new glebe had originally formed part of a portion of the barony of Grange, known as the 24 acres. In 1613 the 24 acres bounded by the sea had been feued by the proprietor of Grange to Bruce, the coal being reserved by the granter. In 1643 the granter obtained a Crown charter of resignation which contained a grant of the coal in the foreshore as a separate estate. In 1673 the proprietor of Grange, in consideration of a money payment, granted a charter of novodamus conveying the 24 acres (without reservation of the coal) to Bruce's successor, who in the same year took infeftment upon a precept contained in the charter. In 1904 the right of the minister to the coal in the foreshore ex adverso of the glebe was challenged by the proprietor of Grange in a process of interdict brought by him against the minister's mineral tenants. The complainer founded on the Crown charter of resignation of 1643, which contained a grant of the minerals in the 24 acres as a separate tenement, and contended that the charter of novodamus of 1673 merely gave of new what was given in the feu-contract of 1613. The mineral tenants in answer founded on the novodamus of 1673 as conveying the coal in the 24 acres from the proprietor of Grange to Bruce's successor. Held that the charter of novodamus of 1673 included the coal, and contained a valid grant by the proprietor of Grange of the 24 acres, without reservation, and that therefore the proprietor of Grange had no title to challenge the minister's right to the coal in the foreshore ex adverso of the glebe. Cadell v. Allan, March 17, 1905, p. 606.

Casualty—Entry—Implied Entry—Duplicand on entry of each heir and singular successor—Last vassal entered still alive—Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 4.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL—Continued.

3. By the tenendas clause of a feu-charter, dated in 1825, the vassal and his heirs and assignees whomsoever were taken bound to pay a certain feu-duty, "doubling the said feu-duty at the entry of each heir and singular successor." Subinfeudation and holding otherwise than of the granters and their successors were prohibited, and it was provided that all disponees of the vassals after the grantee taking infeftment should be obliged to enter within six months of the dispositions in their favour, and to pay the duplicand for such entry although their author might be then in life, "and in case of their failing or refusing to enter as aforesaid, then the right of the said purchasers or disponees . . . shall be held and considered still to remain with the former vassals, and the said area . . . shall be subject and liable to his debts and deeds notwithstanding the dispositions . . . granted by him." Held that the superiors had a contractual right to recover a duplicand from a singular successor of the vassal holding under and in terms of the feu-charter, and impliedly entered under a disposition recorded in 1903, although the last vassal who had paid a duplicand was still alive. Church of Scotland v. Watson, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 395.

4. A feu-disposition granted in 1831, provided that the lands were to be holden of and under the superior and his heirs and successors for the yearly payment of a certain feu-duty, "paying two years' feu-duty for the entry of each heir and singular successor (or one year's feu-duty in the event of the vassal last entered with the superior being then alive), over and above the duty for the year." It was declared that the vassal and his heirs and assignees should not be entitled to sell, let, or dispose of the subjects "to be held of themselves or of any interjected superior, but only of and under the superior and his foresaids," and that if the vassal or his heirs and assignees should "act contrary to any of the conditions above expressed," an irritancy should be incurred. Held that the superiors were entitled to recover a duplicand from a singular successor of the vassal holding under and in terms of the feu-charter, and impliedly entered under a disposition recorded in 1895, although the last vassal who had paid a casualty was still alive. Church of Scotland v. Watson, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 395.

Casualty—Entry—Statutory Action for Declarator and Payment of Casualty—Competency—Effect of Implied Entry when fee empty—Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 4, subsecs. 2, 3, 4.

5. A feu-charter granted in 1835 stipulated for payment of a certain feu-duty and for payment the first year of entry of each heir or singular successor of double the feu-duty "in name of entry," and subinfeudation was prohibited. These conditions were fenced with an irritant and a resolutive clause. The original vassal A died infeft in 1842, and the lands remained in non-entry until 1903, when his heirs were impliedly entered by recording in the Register of Sasines an extract of a decree pronounced in their favour by the Sheriff of Chancery, but they did not pay a casualty. In the same year they disponed part of the subjects to B, a purchaser, who was impliedly entered by recording the disposition in his favour. In an action against B by the superior for declarator and payment of the casualty, raised in the statutory form provided by the Conveyancing Act of 1874, the defenders pleaded that the action was incompetent in this form, and that the only action that could be competently raised against him was an ordinary petitory action founded on the contractual obligations in the feu-charter. The Court held that, as there was no vassal in life who had paid a casualty on entry, and as by the law prior to

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL—Continued.

1874 a declarator of non-entry could, in these circumstances, have been brought, the present action, as the statutory equivalent of a declarator of non-entry, was competent. Christie's Trustees v. M'Dougall, June 8, 1905, p. 756.

Casualty — Composition — Lands held by trustees — Duplicand payable on each sale or transfer — Obligation of relief — Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874, sec. 5.

6. The title to certain lands provided that a duplicand of feu-duty should be payable to the superior, "the first year of the entry of every heir and singular successor," and contained clauses binding each heir and singular successor to enter and record his title within six months of his succession or purchase, with an irritancy, in the option of the superior, of all conveyances inconsistent with these provisions. In 1874 these lands were disponed to Gordon's trustees, who in 1885 paid a duplicand. In 1903 Macdonald's trustees, who were singular successors, with a title ex facie absolute, but in reality in security, disponed the lands to Tough's trustees, with an obligation to relieve them "of all feu-duties, casualties, and public burdens, due from or on account of the said subjects prior to the term of entry." No duplicand had been demanded since 1885, but in 1903 the superior demanded and received a duplicand from Tough's trustees. In an action of relief by Tough's trustees against Macdonald's trustees founded on the above-quoted clause of relief, held that the pursuers were entitled to decree, in respect (1) that the title to the feu made a duplicand payable on the occasion of each sale or transfer as well as on the death of each vassal, within the meaning of section 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1874; (2) that consequently the duplicand paid in 1903 had become payable in 1900, i.e., fifteen years after the last payment in 1885, and fell within the terms of the obligation of relief; and (3) that as the action was laid on an express obligation of relief, it was immaterial that the duplicand, although due in 1900, had not actually been demanded. Tough v. Macdonald, Jan. 17, 1905, p. 443.

Building Restriction — Contravention by other feuars — Acquiescence.

7. The disposition of the upper storey of a tenement, dated in 1830, conveyed a piece of ground at the back, subject to the restriction that no building of any kind in the back-ground should be higher than 12 feet. In 1904 the owner of the said upper storey proposed to build on the piece of ground a building exceeding 12 feet in height, and the owner of the remaining portion of the tenement objected. It was proved that the other back-greens in the street, which were all held from the same superior and subject to the same restriction, had been built over without objection, and that the objector had expressly assented to a similar building on the back-green of the house next door. Held that the restriction was no longer binding. Robertson's Trustees v. Bruce, March 14, 1905, p. 580.

See Mines and Minerals, 1, 2—Property.

SUPPORT, RIGHT OF. See Mines and Minerals, 1, 2.

TIME. See Advertisement—Burgh, 2.

TITLE TO HERITAGE. See Expenses, 6—Property—Superior and Vassal—Writ, 1.

TITLE TO SUE AND DEFEND. Trustees of deceased shareholder in Company —Liquidation—Contributories but not Members of Company—Companies Act, 1862, sec. 76.

1. Testamentary trustees were, under sec. 76 of the Companies Act, 1862, contributories but not members of a company in which the deceased held shares at the time of his death. Held that the trustees had a good title to challenge the validity, on the ground of non-compliance with the articles of association, of a special resolution of the Company for voluntary liquidation and the appointment of a liquidator. Howling's Trustees v. Smith, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 390.

TITLE TO SUE AND DEFEND—Continued.

Title to defend—Collector of Poor-Rates—Company—Winding-up—Poor-Law (Scotland) Act, 1845, sec. 88.

2. In a note by the liquidators of a company for authority, inter alia, to take credit for their remuneration, as fixed by the Court, and to pay the law expenses, and to pay the preferable claims as set forth in a schedule, among which was included a claim for poor-rates due by the Company, answers were lodged by a collector of poor-rates, who maintained that the liquidators should be ordained to pay the claim for poor-rates preferably to the liquidators' remuneration and their law expenses. The liquidators stated that their accounts shewed a balance in their hands more than sufficient to pay in full all the preferable claims, after payment of the liquidators' remuneration and law expenses, and that the respondent had been informed of this before he lodged answers. Held that, in respect the liquidators had admitted the claim for poor-rates to a preferential ranking and tendered payment thereof in full, there was no proper question presented to the Court for adjudication on the answers, and note remitted to the Lord Ordinary to proceed. Liquidators of Scottish Drug Depot, Limited, v. Fraser, May 16, 1905, p. 646.

Title to defend—School Board and Inhabitants—Statutory Irritancy—Failure of trust purposes—School Sites Act, 1841.

3. In 1858, by disposition bearing to be granted under the authority of the School Sites Act, 1841, H., a fee-simple proprietor, conveyed to certain persons as trustees four acres of land "to be applied as a site for a school for the district of . . . for children of the labouring, manufacturing, and other poorer classes . . . and for a residence for the teacher or teachers, and for no other purposes whatever." A school was erected. In 1903 the trustees closed the school, and intimated that they were no longer able to maintain it. The heir of H. brought an action against them, concluding for declarator that the site had reverted to him under the provisions of the School Sites Act. The trustees did not defend the action, but (1) the local School Board, and (2) certain residents in the locality, parents of children of the class for which the school was intended, were allowed to lodge defences, and they maintained that the school should be conveyed to the School Board. Opinions that the School Board had no title to intervene in the action. Opinions that the individual residents had a title to intervene, but no interest to oppose the decree, in respect that their only interest in the matter was to secure free education for their children, and that such education was provided by statute. Opinion (per Lord Young) that they had no title to intervene. Houldsworth v. School Board of Cambusnethan, Dec. 16, 1904, p. 291.

TOWN-CLERK. See Burgh, 3.

TRADE CIRCULAR. See Interdict, 1.

TRUST. Constitution—Spouses a majority of trustees—Power to trustees to advance trust funds to spouses.

1. An antenuptial marriage-contract appointed the spouses and the wife's father the sole trustees, and the trustees were empowered at the joint request of the spouses to advance such portion of the trust-estate to the husband as the trustees might think right. Under the marriage-contract the wife had a liferent allenarly, which was declared not to be affectable by her own or her husband's debts or deeds or the diligence of their creditors. Held that as the spouses were a majority of the trustees, and might consequently lend any part of the trust funds to the husband, the marriage-contract was not effectual to protect the wife's liferent. M'Callum v. M'Culloch's Trustees, Dec. 22, 1904, p. 337.

TRUST—Continued.

Termination—Funds held by trustees under an inter vivos settlement, for issue subject to power of appointment—Power exercised by will—Whether settlement or testamentary trustees to hold fund.

2. Where under an inter vivos settlement trustees were directed to stand possessed of trust funds for the issue of the settlor, as she should appoint, and this power of appointment was validly exercised by the settlor in her will, by which she directed the whole residue of her estate to be held by her testamentary trustees for certain purposes, held that the settlement trustees were in the circumstances bound to pay over the settlement trust funds to the testamentary trustees. Dalziel v. Dalziel's Trustees—Dalziel v. Henderson's Trustees, March 9, 1905, p. 545.

Removal of Trustee.

3. A, one of two trustees, who were law-agents, wrote to B, his co-trustee, who was law-agent in the trust, making a claim for half fees on all business to be done by B for the trust, and added that on this condition being agreed to he would consider the question of investing the trust funds. B refused to agree to this arrangement. A thereafter refused to approve of an investment suggested by B, assigning no reason for his refusal. He also refused to assume new trustees, or to resign. On a petition by the beneficiaries the Court removed A from the office of trustee, but continued the petition until B had lodged a minute of assumption of two new trustees. Stewart v. Chalmers, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 163.

Administration—Personal Liability of Trustees—Rebuilding Heritable Property—No express power to rebuild—Investment of Trust-Funds.

4. Circumstances in which held that trustees who had expended trust funds in rebuilding and improving heritable subjects belonging to the estate, which twenty-one years after the rebuilding realised £100 less than the sum expended upon them, had not acted imprudently or negligently, and that loss had not been caused by their fault. Armstrong v. Wilson's Trustees, Dec. 22, 1904, p. 353.

Expenses—Expenses of "this trust"—Estate-Duty—Legacy-Duty.

5. A testator directed the residue after payment of debts to be divided into five shares, and after disposing of three and three-fourths of these shares directed that the remaining one and one-fourth share should be devoted to certain purposes, and inter alia, "discharging the necessary expenses connected with this trust." Held that the whole expenses of administering the will were chargeable against the one and one-fourth share, but that such expenses did not include estate-duty and legacy-duty. Michie's Executors v. Michie, Feb. 21, 1905, p. 509.

Administration—Power to sell—Power to sell specific subject held in trust for liferenter and fiars.

6. A testator, inter alia, directed her trustees "to hold in their own name my shares of the G. C. Railway Company, and pay the dividends or annual income thereof to" her nephew George "during his lifetime, and immediately after the decease of the said" George "I direct my said trustees to realise the said shares and to pay the price or value thereof" to George's children, whom failing to his heirs, executors, or successors whomsoever. The truster empowered her trustees "to sell and realise . . . the whole or any part of my estate, heritable or moveable, in so far as may be necessary or proper in their discretion." In 1905, as the shares were yielding no income, George requested the trustees to sell them and to reinvest the proceeds. In a special case presented by the trustees held that the trustees had power to sell the shares. Galloway v. Campbell's Trustees, July 11, 1905, p. 931.

TRUST—Continued.

Actions—Multiplepoinding—Competency—Double Distress.

7. Where a testator left legacies to various persons, and a question arose as to the construction of one of these bequests, the trustees, before making payment of certain of the legacies as to which there was no dispute, raised an action of multiplepoinding for distribution of the balance in their hands and for exoneration. Held that the action was incompetent in so far as it submitted for adjudication the legacies other than the one in dispute. MacGillivray's Trustees v. Dallas, June 6, 1905, p. 733.

Law-Agent—Expenses—Liability of trust-estate to law-agents for expense of unsuccessfully defending an action.

8. In an action against the sole trustee under a testamentary trust, the final interlocutor decerned against the trustee for payment of a sum of money, and found "that in all questions with the pursuer in this action the defender is not entitled to deduct the expenses which he has incurred in the action from the trust-estate." The trust-estate having subsequently been sequestrated on the petition of the successful pursuer of the action, the law-agents who had acted for the testamentary trustee claimed to be ranked on the sequestrated estate for their expenses. Held that as the law-agents for the trustee were presumably acquainted with the whole circumstances of the trust, they were not entitled to rank for their account. Ferme, Ferme, & Williamson v. Stephenson's Trustee, July 6, 1905, p. 902.

See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts—Church, 3—Mines and Minerals, 1—Succession.

ULTRA VIRES. See Burgh, 2—Police—Public Health, 1.

UNIVERSITY. See Charitable and Educational Bequests and Trusts, 2, 3, 5, 12.

VALUATION ACTS. Subjects—Salmon-Fishings.

1. Sum paid by upper proprietors to lower proprietor for abstention from netting. Assessor for Elginshire v. Duke of Richmond and Gordon, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 424.

Value—Subjects unlet.

2. Houses in occupation of owner's workmen—Criterion of value—Rent of similar house belonging to same owner let to a tenant—Local knowledge of Valuation Committee. Cadzow Coal Co., Limited, v. Assessor for Hamilton, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 413.

Value—Subjects unlet—Principle of valuation—Sanatorium.

3. A sanatorium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases was erected in 1901, and was sold to a company for £53,000. The Assessor entered the sanatorium at the yearly value of £1300, proceeding either on the principle of taking a percentage on the cost of construction, or on the principle of taking the profits earned by the company, as the basis of valuation—the two methods in the particular case bringing out substantially the same result. The company appealed, and maintained that the value should be reached by comparison with other sanatoria and with hydropathics, and should be £500. The Judges held that, having regard to all the circumstances, the valuation should be reduced to £800. Nordrach-on-Dee Sanatorium, Limited, v. Assessor for Kincardineshire, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 419.

Value—Subjects unlet—Gas works belonging to private company—Tenant's capital—Meters—Cooking Stoves—Deductions—Income-tax.

4. Gas works belonging to and in the occupation of a private company were entered in the Valuation-roll at an annual value brought out on the principle of taking the income of the company and deducting (1) the annual expenditure; (2) 5 per cent on a sum in name of tenant's capital for carrying on the business; and (3) a sum for tenant's profits, estimated at 20 per cent on the net income after deducting expenditure and the percentage on tenant's capital. Held that the value of gas meters, owned by the company and hired out to customers, was to be regarded as tenant's capital, such meters being necessary for carrying on the business; but (2) that the value of cooking stoves, owned by the company and hired out to customers, was not to be regarded as tenant's capital, the hiring out of cooking stoves being a branch of business which a hypothetical tenant might or might not find it expedient to carry on. Held further that a deduction from the net income did not fall to be made in respect of income-tax on tenant's profits. Kirkcaldy Gas Light Co., Limited, v. Assessor for Kirkcaldy, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 430.

Value—Subjects unlet—Railway Hotel.

5. The North British Railway Company's Hotel in Edinburgh was entered in the Valuation-roll at the yearly rent or value of £11,950. The Assessor reached this sum by taking the floor space and applying thereto varying rates per square foot, and comparing the accommodation with that of other hotels in the city. The Railway Company maintained that the basis of valuation should be the profits of the hotel business, or alternatively the number of lettable bedrooms. Held that no single method of valuation was reliable, and in the whole circumstances that the valuation should be reduced to £7000. North British Railway Co. v. Assessor for Edinburgh, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 435.

Value—Subjects unlet—Oil works in occupation of owners—Former valuation fixed by the Judges—Necessity for revaluation—Depreciation—Additions to plant—Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1902, sec. 1.

6. Oil works for the distillation of shale oil, belonging to and in the occupation of an oil company, were for the year 1901-2 directed by the Valuation Appeal Judges to be entered at the yearly value of £4264. This sum was reached by taking 10½ per cent on the capital value of the works and adding thereto feu-duty, insurance, and landlord's taxes. The 10½ per cent consisted of 4½ per cent as reasonable interest on the capital value and 6 per cent as being the average sum which the owners, if the works were let, would require to spend annually in order to fulfil the landlord's obligation to keep the works in an efficient state of renewal, such works being subject to rapid deterioration. In 1904 the Company added largely to the number of the retorts in their works, and the Assessor in consequence raised the valuation to £6700. The Assessor reached this sum by taking the value as fixed for 1901-2 by the Judges, and adding thereto a sum to cover the value of the new retorts. The Company appealed, and maintained that the value should be £3000, in respect (a) that the original works having depreciated in value they ought to be revalued; (b) that the Assessor had much over-estimated the value of the new retorts; and (c) that portions of the plant included in the valuation fell to be excluded under the Lands Valuation (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1902. The Valuation Committee adopted the principle on which the Assessor had proceeded, but reduced the valuation to £5800. The Committee found that the works had been kept in a not less efficient state than they were in 1901. In an appeal by the Company the Judges held that the Valuation Committee were right, in respect that the original works having been kept in an efficient state of renewal, there was no necessity for a revaluation; that the sum fixed by the Committee as the value of the new retorts was reasonable; and that there was not sufficient evidence to shew what, if any, portions of the works fell to be excluded under the Act of 1902. Pumpherston Oil Co., Limited, v. Assessor for Linlithgowshire, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 438.

VALUATION ACTS—Continued.

Value—Subjects let—Consideration other than the rent—Obligation by tenant of public-house to carry out at his own expense alterations required by licensing authority.

7. The lease of a public-house took the tenant bound "to carry out any alterations or improvements which the licensing authority may from time to time require to be made upon the premises" at his own expense. Held that this obligation constituted a consideration other than the rent incapable of being estimated in money value; and consequently that the Valuation Committee were justified in disregarding the rent stipulated in the lease altogether, and in fixing the annual value according to their personal knowledge of the lettable value of such property in the locality. Angus v. Assessor for Lanarkshire, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 411.

Value—Subjects let.

8. Consideration other than the rent—Alterations by tenant. Liverpool, China, and India Tea Co., Limited, v. Assessor for Edinburgh, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 415.

Value—Subjects let.

9. Consideration other than the rent—Agreement by tenant of farm to erect farmhouse. Davidson v. Assessor for Peeblesshire, Jan. 14, 1905, p. 422.

See Burgh, 6.

VESTING. See Marriage-Contract, 4—Succession, 13, 14, 15.

VOLUNTEER FORCE. Colonel Commanding Volunteer Regiment—Volunteer Regiment—Funds—Liability for Negligence—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1.

In an action for damages against a regiment of volunteers and against the officer commanding the regiment, as representing the regiment, and as an individual, by the father of a child, who was killed on the public street by an ammunition waggon, the horses of which had bolted, the pursuer averred that the accident had been caused by the fault of the commanding officer in not seeing that quiet horses were used, that competent drivers were employed, that the waggons were driven according to military regulations, and that a competent commissioned officer was present to superintend the parade. The action was not raised within six months after the date of the accident. The Lord Ordinary (Kyllachy) dismissed the action as against the regiment and its commanding officer as representing it, on the ground that the funds of the regiment belonged to the Crown, and that the Crown could not be sued for damages caused by the wrongful acts of its officers, and allowed a proof before answer as against the commanding officer as an individual. Held (rev. judgment of Lord Kyllachy on the last point) that the action against the commanding officer, as an individual, was excluded by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, sec. 1, on the ground that the fault averred against him was neglect of duty in his public capacity as commanding officer. Wilson v. 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, Nov. 30, 1904, p. 168.

WAIVER. See Personal Exception, 3.

WAREHOUSE. See Master and Servant, 8, 9.

WARRANT TO OPEN LOCKFAST PLACES. See Diligence.

WATER SUPPLY. See River, Loch, Sea, 1.

WIDOWS' FUND. See Insurance, 2.

WITNESS. See Justiciary Cases, 15, 16—Process, 14, 15, 16—Proof, 2—Reparation, 15.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACTS. See Master and Servant.

WRIT. Blank in feu-charter.

1. Question as to the competency of filling in by inference from the context a blank in the description of the subjects disponed under a feu-charter. Magistrates of Musselburgh v. Musselburgh Real Estate Co., Limited Dec. 21, 1904, p. 308.

Pencil alterations on holograph will.

2. Held that unauthenticated holograph pencil alterations on a holograph will written in ink had no effect. Currie's Trustees v. Currie, Dec. 24, 1904, p. 364.

See Loan.

CASES REFERRED TO JUDICIALLY IN THE PRESENT VOLUME.

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| A B v. C D | 1851, 14 D. 177 | 79 |
| Accountant of Court v. Baird | 1858, 20 D. 1176 | 1042 |
| Adams v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. | 1858, 5 C. B. (N. S.), 492 | H. L. 129 |
| Advocate, Lord, v. Clyde Trustees | 1891, 19 R. 174 | J. C. 94 |
| Advocate, Lord, v. Sidgwick | 1877, 4 R. 815 | 370 |
| Advocate, Lord, v. Stewart | 1899, 6 S. L. T. 405 | 989 |
| Aktiebolaget Separator Co. v. Dairy Outfit Co. | 1898, 15 Pat. Cas. 327 | 102 |
| Anderson v. M'Call | 1866, 4 Macph. 765 | 289 |
| Andrews v. Partington | 1791, 3 Br., Ch. Cas. 401 | 30 |
| Argyle, Duke of, v. Campbell | 1891, 18 R. 1094 | 622 |
| Attorney-General v. Coote | 1817, 4 Price, 183 | 152 |
| Attorney-General v. Pearson | 1817, 3 Mer. 353 | H. L. 25 |
| Bain v. Seafield | 1887, 14 R. 939 | 626 |
| Baird v. Officer | 1830, 8 S. 893 | 661 |
| Barr v. Neilsons | 1868, 6 Macph. 651 | 532 |
| Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank | 1867, L. R., 2 Ex. 259 | 633 |
| Beaton v. Ivory | 1887, 14 R. 1057 | 1003 |
| Beattie v. Arbuckle | 1875, 2 R. 330 | 213 |
| Bell's Trustees v. Bell | 1884, 12 R. 85 | 356 |
| "Benares," The | 1883, L. R., 9 P. D. 16 | 671 |
| Bendy, In re | [1895], 1 Ch. 109 | H. L. 96 |
| Bennets v. Bennet | 1903, 5 F. 376 | 1125 |
| Berry v. Holden | 1840, 3 D. 205 | 323 |
| Bethune v. Denham | 1886, 13 R. 882 | 663 |
| Birkmyre | 1881, 8 R. 477 | 933 |
| Blain v. Greenock Foundry Co. | 1903, 5 F. 893 | 535 |
| Board of Supervision v. Parochial Board of Old Monkland | 1880, 7 R. 469 | 378 |
| Bontine's Curator | 1870, 8 Macph. 976 | 1042 |
| Borries v. Hutchinson | 1865, 18 C. B. (N. S.) 445 | 2 H. L. 133 |
| Boucher v. Crawford | Nov. 30, 1814, F. C. | 322 |
| Bowman v. Bowman | 1899, 1 F., H. L., 69 | 252 |
| Bowman v. Wright | 1877, 4 R. 322 | 920 |
| Bouch v. Sproule | 1887, L. R., 12 App. Cas. 385 | 805 |
| Boyd's Trustees v. Boyd | 1877, 4 R. 1082 | H. L. 96 |
| Braid v. Swan & Sons, Limited | 1903, 5 F. 579 | 65 |
| Braybrooke, Lord, v. Attorney-General | 1860, 9 H. L. C. 150 | H. L. 120 |
| Briggs v. White | 1848, 22 Beav. 176 n. | H. L. 96 |
| Brodie v. North British Railway Co. | 1900, 3 F. 75 | 732 |
| Brown v. Marr | 1880, 7 R. 427 | 10 |
| Buchanan's Trustees v. Buchanan | 1877, 4 R. 754 | 27 |
| Buchanan v. Duke of Hamilton | 1878, 5 R., H. L., 69 | 696 |
| "Bywell Castle," The | 1879, L. R., 4 P. D. 219 | 671 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Calder v. Aitchison | 1831, 5 W. and S. 410. | 44 |
| Calder v. Wood | Jan. 19, 1798, F. C.; M. 2250 | 922 |
| Caldwell v. Dempster | 1883, 10 R. 1263. | 889 |
| Caledonian Railway Co. v. Henderson | 1876, 4 R. 140 | 852 |
| Caledonian Railway Co. v. Morrison | 1898, 25 R. 1001 | 1125 |
| Campbell v. Brown | Nov. 18, 1813, F. C. | 322 |
| Campbell v. Campbell | 1846, 9 D. 135 | 662 |
| Campbell v. Clydesdale Bank | 1868, 6 Macph. 943 | 589 |
| Campbell v. Inland Revenue | 1880, 7 R. 579 | 114 |
| Campbell v. M'Lachlan | 1898, 1 F. 212 | 162 |
| Canadian Pacific Railway v. Parke | [1899], A. C. 535. | 1078 |
| Cassaboglou v. Gibbs | 1883, L. R., 11 Q. B. D. 797 . . . H. L. | 102 |
| "Cathay," The | 1904, 9 Asp. Mar. Ca. 100 | 746 |
| Caton v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron and Coal Co., Limited | 1902, 4 F. 989 | 192, 732 |
| Cattanach's Trustees v. Cattanach | 1901, 4 F. 205 | 554 |
| Chandler v. Smith | [1899], 2 Q. B. 506 | 979 |
| Chisholm v. Marshall | 1874, 1 R. 388 | 662 |
| Church of Scotland v. Watson | 1905, present vol. p. 395 | 759 |
| Citizens' Life Assurance Co. v. Brown | [1904], A. C. 423. | 632 |
| Clark Bursary Fund (Mile End) Trustees | 1903, 5 F. 433 | 861 |
| Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. | 1872, L. R., 8 Ch. 125. | 1078 |
| Clutterbuck's Settlement | [1905], 1 Ch. 200. H. L. | 97 |
| Cochrane v. Ewing | 1883, 10 R. 1279. | 663 |
| Collen v. Wright | 1857, 8 E. and B. 647 . H. L. | 101 |
| Colleson v. Mitchell | 1897, 24 R., J. C., 52 . J. C. | 61 |
| Colquhoun v. Brooks | 1889, L. R., 14 A. C. 493 | 150 |
| Colquhoun v. Walker | 1867, 5 Macph. 773 | 409 |
| Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, v. Muir | 1897, 25 R. 219 | 736 |
| Consolidated Car Heating Co. v. Came | [1903], A. C. 516 | 101 |
| Conway v. Fenton | 1888, 40 Ch. 512. | 358 |
| Cooper & Crane v. Wright | [1902], A. C. 302 | 873 |
| Corstorphine v. Kasten | 1898, 1 F. 287 | 923 |
| Cosens v. Stevenson | 1873, 11 Macph. 761 | 340 |
| Couper v. Burn | 1859, 22 D. 120 . H. L. | 75 |
| Cowan's Trustees v. Ferrie's Curator Bonis | 1897, 24 R. 590 | 1042 |
| Crabbe v. White | 1891, 18 R. 1065. | 1042 |
| Craig v. Greig | 1863, 1 Macph. 1172 | 889 |
| Craigdallie v. Aikman | 1813, 1 Dow, 1 . H. L. | 5 |
| Craigie v. Marshall (Kirkintilloch Case) | 1850, 12 D. 523 . H. L. | 6 |
| "Crathie," The | [1897], P. 178 | 744 |
| Crawfurd v. Bethune | 1821, 1 S. 115 | 620 |
| Crawfurd v. Durham | 1826, 4 S. 665 | 620 |
| Cruttwell v. Lye | 1810, 17 Ves. 335 | 501 |
| Culross v. Dundonald | 1769, M. 12,810 | 322 |
| Culross v. Geddes, | 1809, Hume's Dec., 554 | 322 |
| Cunningham v. M'Gregor & Co. | 1901, 3 F. 775 | 118 |
| Curtis v. Platt | 1863, L. R., 3 Ch. Div. 135 | 102 |
| Dalhousie's Tutors v. Minister of Lochlee | 1891, 18 R., H. L., 72 . | 619 |
| Dalrymple v. Dalrymple | 1811, 2 Hag. 54 | 94 |
| Davidson v. Mackenzie | 1856, 19 D. 226 | 796 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Davidson v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron and Coal Co., Limited | 1903, 5 F. 991 | 463 |
| Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby | 1875, L. R., 7 Eng., and Ir. App. 744 | 79 |
| Dennistoun v. Rainey & Knox | 1871, 9 Macph. 739 | 662 |
| Dick Lauder v. Thornton | 1890, 17 R. 320 . 408, | 447, 759 |
| Dickie v. Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society, Limited | 1903, 6 F. 112 | 663 |
| Diggens v. Gordon | 1867, 5 Macph., H. L., 75 | H. L. 95 |
| Dill v. Watson | 1836, 2 Jones Rep. (Ir. Ex.), 48 | H. L. 7 |
| Di Sora, Duchess, v. Phillips | 1863, 10 H. L. C. 624 | 475 |
| Dixon v. Baldwen | 1804, 5 East, 175 | 41 |
| Dixon v. Caledonian Railway Co. | 1880, 7 R., H. L., 116 | 851 |
| Don v. Lippmann | 1837, 2 Sh. and M'L. 724 | 71 |
| Downie v. Magistrates of Annan | 1879, 6 R. 457 | 378 |
| Downie | 1879, 6 R. 1013 | 934 |
| Drake v. Trefusis | 1875, L. R., 10 Ch. 364 | 358 |
| Dudgeon v. Thomson & Donaldson | 1877, 4 R., H. L., 88 | 102 |
| Dundee, Magistrates of, v. Kerr | 1833, 12 S. 173 | 378 |
| Dunlop v. Corbet | June 20, 1801, F. C. | 1091 |
| Dunlop v. Duke of Hamilton | 1885, 12 R., H. L., 65 | 621 |
| Dunlop v. Higgins | 1846, 1 H. L. C. 381 | H. L. 133 |
| Dunn v. Chambers | 1897, 25 R. 247 | 1043 |
| Dysart Peerage Case | 1881, L. R., 6 App. Cas. 489 | 94 |
| Edmond v. Edmond | 1873, 11 Macph. 348 | 472 |
| Electric Construction Company, Limited, v. Hurry & Young | 1897, 24 R. 312 | 567 |
| Elphinstone, Lord, v. Monkland Iron and Coal Co., Limited | 1886, 13 R., H. L., 98 | H. L. 81 |
| Emmet v. Emmet | 1880, L. R., 13 Ch. Div. 484 | 27 |
| Errington v. Metropolitan District Railway Co. | 1881, L. R., 19 C. D. 559 | 851 |
| Evans v. Justices of Conway | [1900], 2 Q. B. 224 | 1119 |
| Falkirk v. Falkirk Gas Co., Limited | 1883, 10 R. 651 | 434 |
| Farish v. Magistrates of Annan | 1837, 2 S. and M'L. 930 | 378 |
| Farquharson v. Caledonian Railway Co. | 1899, 2 F. 141 | 452 |
| Fenn v. Miller | [1900], 1 Q. B. 788 | 732 |
| Ferguson v. Barclay | 1902, 5 F. 105 | 732 |
| Ferguson v. Colquhoun | 1862, 24 D. 1428, | 78 |
| Ferguson v. Murray | 1853, 15 D. 682 | 1040 |
| Ferrier v. Gourlay Brothers & Co. | 1902, 4 F. 711 | 979 |
| Finlay v. Darling | [1897], 1 Ch. 719 | H. L. 97 |
| Finnie & Son v. Duncan | 1904, present vol. p. 254 | 467 |
| Fleeming v. Howden | 1868, 6 Macph. 782 | 625 |
| Fleming v. Corbett | 1859, 21 D. 1034 | 95 |
| Floyer v. Bankes | 1863, 3 De G. J. and S. 306 | 370 |
| Forbes v. Eden | 1867, 5 Macph., H. L., 36 | H. L. 54 |
| Forbes v. Luckie | 1838, 16 S. 374 | 579 |
| Forbes v. Livingstone | 1827, 3 Ross' Leading Cases, 409 | 620 |
| Forbes v. Wilson | 1868, 6 Macph. 770 | 953 |
| Ford v. Cotesworth | 1868, L. R., 4 Q. B. 127 | H. L. 129 |
| Fordyce v. Bridges | 1842, 4 D. 1334, | 600 |
| Forrest & Barr v. Henderson & Co. | 1869, 8 Macph. 187, 193 | H. L. 82 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Forrest s.s. Co. v. Iberian Ore Co. | 1899, 16 T. L. R. 59 | 273 |
| Forrest's Trustees v. Reid | 1904, present vol. p. 142 | 230 |
| Forsyth v. Ramage & Ferguson | 1890, 18 R. 21 | 702 |
| "Franconia," The | 1878, L. R., 3 P. D. 164 | 746 |
| Fraser v. Downie | 1877, 4 R. 942 | 589 |
| Fraser v. Mackintosh | 1867, 6 Macph. 170, | 186 |
| Fraser v. Robertson | 1791, unreported, | 618 |
| Free Church of Scotland v. Lord Overtoun | 1904, present vol., H. L., p. 1 | 202, 522 |
| Freeland v. Macfarlane, Lang, & Co. | 1900, 2 F. 832 | 979 |
| Galbraith v. Smith (Campbelton case) | 1837, 15 S. 808, 1843, 5 D. 665 | H. L. 27 |
| Gardiner v. Macfarlane | 1893, 20 R. 414, | H. L. 129 |
| Geddes v. Quistorp | 1899, 17 R. 278 | 774 |
| Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Proprietors | 1878, L. R., 3 App. Cas. 430, | 1077 |
| Glasgow Barrhead and Neilston Railway Co. v. Nitshill Coal Co. | 1848, 11 D. 327 | 852 |
| Glasgow City Bank, Liquidators of, v. Assets Co. | 1883, 10 R. 676 | H. L. 107 |
| Glasgow, Yoker, and Clydebank Railway Co. v. Lidgerwood | 1895, 23 R. 196, | 1125 |
| Goodman v. London and North-Western Railway Co. | 1877, 14 S. L. R. 449 | 66 |
| Graham v. Graham's Trustees | 1904, 6 F. 1015 | 502 |
| Grainger's Curator | 1876, 3 R. 479, | 1043 |
| Gray v. Stewart | 1741, M. 11,986 | 528 |
| Gray v. Brown | 1878, 5 R. 971 | 953 |
| Great Northern Railway Co. v. Inland Revenue | [1901], 1 K. B. 416, 425 | 851 |
| Green v. Britten | [1904], 1 K. B. 350 | 723 |
| Green v. Donaldson | 1901, 4 F. 245, | 155 |
| Greenlees' Trustees v. Greenlees | 1894, 22 R. 136 | 145 |
| Groves v. Lord Wimborne | [1898], 2 Q. B. 402 | 790 |
| Guild v. Glasgow Educational Endowment Board | 1887, 14 R. 944, | 1042 |
| Gunnis' Trustees v. Gunnis | 1903, 6 F. 104 | 805 |
| Haldane v. Speirs | 1872, 10 Macph. 537 | 847 |
| Halkerston v. Wedderburn | 1781, M. 10,495, | 710 |
| Hamilton v. Chassels | 1902, 4 F. 494 | 409, 447 |
| Hamilton's Trustees v. Hamilton | 1901, 4 F. 266 | 365 |
| Hammersmith Railway Co. v. Brand | 1868, L. R., 4 E. and I. App. 171 | 719, 1078 |
| Harrington v. Richardson | 1854, 16 D. 368, | 661 |
| Harris v. Dreesman | 1854, L. J. Exchq. 210 | H. L. 129 |
| Hassan v. Paterson | 1885, 12 R. 1164 | 78 |
| Hawkins v. Wedderburn | 1842, 4 D. 924 | 600 |
| Hay v. Thomson | 1856, 18 D. 510 | 889 |
| Helby v. Mathews | [1895], A. C. 471 | 691 |
| Heriot's Hospital Trustees v. Caledonian Insurance Company | 1904, 6 F. 442 | 452 |
| Heriot's Hospital v. Drumsheugh Baths | 1890, 17 R. 937 | 408 |
| Hine Brothers v. Clyde Trustees | 1888, 15 R. 498 | 671 |
| Hope v. Macdougall | 1893, 21 R. 49 | 49 |
| Houlder Line, Limited, v. Griffin | [1905], A. C. 220 | 726 |
| Houston v. Calico Printers Association, Limited | 1903, 10 S. L. T. 532 | 1113 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Howell v. Vivian | 1901, 18 T. L. R. 36 | 909 |
| Hudson v. Bridge | 1903, 19 T. L. R. 369 | J. C. 25 |
| Hughes v. Assessor for Stirling | 1892, 19 R. 840 | 499 |
| Hunter v. Lord Advocate | 1869, 7 Macph. 899 | 322 |
| Hutton v. Annan | 1898, 25 R., H. L., 23 | 1040 |
| Imrie v. Imrie | 1891, 19 R. 185 | 94 |
| Income-Tax Special Commissioners v. Pemsel | [1891], A. C. 531 | H. L. 118 |
| Inglis v. Robertson & Baxter | 1898, 25 R., H. L., 70 | 719 |
| Inland Revenue v. Stewart's Trustees | 1899, 1 F. 416 | 371 |
| International Exhibition, 1890, v. Bapty | 1891, 18 R. 843 | 923 |
| Inverkeithing, Magistrates of, v. Ross | 1874, 2 R. 48 | 623 |
| "Iona," The | 1867, L. R., 1 P. C. App. 426 | 220 |
| Ireland v. Livingstone | 1871, L. R., 5 H. L. 395 | H. L. 137 |
| Irons v. Davis & Timmins, Limited | [1899], 2 Q. B. 330 | 979 |
| Jamieson v. Russel & Co. | 1892, 19 R. 898 | 702 |
| Johnston v. Walker Trustees | 1897, 24 R. 1061 | 589 |
| Johnstone v. Hughan | 1894, 21 R. 777 | 663 |
| Jones v. Mayor of Carmarthen, | 1841, 8 M. & W. 605 | 278 |
| Keith v. Outram & Co. | 1877, 4 R. 958 | 915 |
| Kello v. Taylor | 1787, 3 Pat. App. 56 | 95 |
| Kelly v. Glebe Sugar Company | 1893, 20 R. 833 | 791 |
| Kendrick v. Burnett | 1897, 25 R. 82 | 66 |
| Kermick v. Watson | 1871, 9 Macph. 984 | 479 |
| "Khedive," The | 1880, L. R., 5 A. C. 876 | 671 |
| Kirkwood v. Keeling | 1842, 4 D. 878 | 818 |
| Knapp v. Vassall, | [1895], 1 Ch. 91 | 27 |
| Laidlaw v. Wilson and Armstrong | 1874, 2 R. 148 | 662 |
| Lamont's Trustees v. Magistrates of Glasgow | 1887, 14 R. 603 | 365 |
| Laurie | 1898, 25 R. 636 | H. L. 120 |
| Law v. Newnes | 1894, 21 R. 1027 | 138 |
| Leck v. Chalmers | 1859, 21 D. 408, 31 Scot. Jur. 223 | 588 |
| Lees v. Macdonald | 1893, 20 R., J. C., 55 | J. C. 61 |
| Legget & Sons v. Burke | 1902, 4 F. 693 | 908 |
| Letricheux v. Dunlop | 1891, 19 R. 209 | 275 |
| Lewis v. Madocks | 8 Ves. 149, 17 Ves. 48 | H. L. 96 |
| Liddall v. Duncan | 1898, 25 R. 1199 | 589 |
| Lindsay, | 1848, 11 D. 232 | 1043 |
| Lindsay v. Low & Co. | 1902, 4 F., J. C., 45 | J. C. 67 |
| Linning v. Baillie | 1709, M. 5145 | 626 |
| Linning v. Hamilton | 1748, M. 13,909 | 953 |
| Little v. Stevenson & Co. | 23 R., H. L., 12 | H. L. 127 |
| Lloyd v. Solicitor of Inland Revenue | 1884, 11 R. 687 | 150 |
| Lloyd's Curator, | 1877, 5 R. 289 | 1043 |
| Lockyer v. Sinclair, | 1846, 8 D. 582 | 95 |
| London and Brighton Railway Co. v. Truman | 1885, L. R., 11 App. Cas. 45 | 1078 |
| London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans | [1893], 1 Ch. 16 | H. L. 116 |
| Long v. Bishop of Cape Town | 1863, 1 Moo. P.C. (N.S.) 411 | H. L. 63 |
| Lord Advocate v. Sidgwick | 1877, 4 R. 815 | 370 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Lawrie v. Magistrates of Falkirk | 1890, 18 R. 60 | 101 |
| Lysons v. Knowles & Sons, Limited | [1901], A. C. 79 | 73 |
| MacAdam v. MacAdam | 1813, 1 Dow, 148 | 94 |
| Macalister v. Young | 1904, present vol., H. L., p. 1 | 202, 52 |
| M'Avan v. Boase Spinning Co., Limited | 1901, 3 F. 1048 | 19 |
| Macbeth v. Ashley | 1874, 1 R., H. L., 14 | 24 |
| M'Clarty v. Steele | 1881, 8 R. 435 | 6 |
| Macculloch v. M'Culloch's Trustees | 1903, 6 F., H. L., 3 | 25 |
| MacDonald v. Hall | 1893, 20 R., H. L., 88 | 55 |
| Macdonald v. M'Coll | 1901, 3 F. 1082 | 10 |
| M'Donald v. M'Donald's Trustees | 1875, 2 R., H. L., 125 | 55 |
| Macdonald v. Westren | 1888, 15 R. 988 | 1 |
| M'Dougall v. Nisbet | 1904, present vol. 55 | 64, 10 |
| M'Govern v. Cooper & Co. | 1901, 4 F. 249 | 49 |
| M'Gregor v. Dansken | 1899, 1 F. 536 | 95 |
| M'Innes v. More | 1782, 2 P. App. 598 | 5 |
| M'Intosh v. Weir | 1875, 2 R. 877 | 7 |
| Mackay v. M'Cankie | 1883, 10 R. 537 | 6 |
| Mackay v. Dick & Stevenson | 1881, 8 R., H. L., 37 | 66 |
| Mackie v. Mackie's Trustees | 1885, 12 R. 1230 | 55 |
| M'Leod v. Pirie | 1893, 20 R. 381 | 96 |
| Macmaster v. Stewart | 1834, 12 S. 731 | 60 |
| Main Colliery Co. v. Davies | [1900], A. C. 358 | 38 |
| Maitland's Trustees v. M'Dermaid | 1861, 23 D. 732 | 91 |
| Maloy v. Macadam | 1885, 12 R. 431 | 95 |
| Marshall v. Phyn | 1900, 3 F., J. C., 21 | J. C. 4 |
| Mein v. Ottman (The Lady Palmer) | 1904, 6 F. 276 | 27 |
| Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill | 1881, L. R., 6 App. Cas. 193 | 107 |
| "Memnon," The | 1889, 6 Asp. Mar. Ca. 488 | 67 |
| Miller's Trustees v. Miller | 1890, 18 R. 301 | 230, 91 |
| Milligan v. Mitchell | 1837, 3 My. and Cr. 72 | H. L. 63 |
| Milne v. Henderson | 1889, 7 R. 317 | 21 |
| Milne v. Milne | 1826, 4 S. 679 | 554 |
| Milne v. Ross | 1883, 11 R. 273 | 21 |
| Mitchell v. Cubla | 1848, 10 D. 1297 | 1018 |
| Mitchell v. Heys & Son | 1894, 21 R. 600 | 10 |
| Mitchell v. Sutherland | 1886, 13 R. 882, note | 663 |
| Mitchell v. Urquhart | 1884, 11 R. 553 | 663 |
| Monaghan v. United Collieries, Limited | 1900, 3 F. 149 | 191 |
| Morris v. Tennant | 1855, 27 Scot. Jur. 546 | 145 |
| Morrison & Mason v. Clarkson | 1898, 25 R. 427 | 263 |
| Motherwell v. Manwell | 1903, 5 F. 619 | 450 |
| Mowbray v. Dickson | 1848, 10 D. 1102 | 1018 |
| Murdison v. Scottish Football Union | 1896, 23 R. 449 | 916 |
| Murdoch & Co., Limited, v. Greig | 1889, 16 R. 396 | 695 |
| Murray v. Jones | 1872, 2 Coup. 284 | J. C. 54 |
| Nairn v. Tweedie | 1605, M. 5143 | 618 |
| Neagle v. Nixon's Navigation Co., Limited | [1904], 1 K. B. 339 | 464 |
| Neill's Trustees v. Neill | 1902, 4 F. 636 | 553 |
| Neill's Trustees v. William Dixon, Ltd. | 1880, 7 R. 741 | 1091 |
| Nelson v. M'Phee | 1889, 17 R., J. C., 1 | 719 |
| Nicol v. Picken | 1893, 20 R. 288 | 663 |
| Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co., Limited, v. M'Kay | 1903, 5 F. 1121 | 257, 463 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Nisbet-Hamilton v. North British Railway Co. | 1886, 13 R. 454 | 852 |
| North British Railway Co. v. Dumbarton Harbour Board | 1900, 2 F., J. C., 28 | 65 |
| Northern Heritable Investment Co., Limited, v. Whyte | 1891, 18 R., H. L., 37 | 775 |
| Oakbank Oil Co., Limited, v. Assessor for Midlothian | 1902, 4 F. 520 | 442 |
| Officers of State v. Smith | 1849, 6 Bell's App. 487 | 323 |
| O'Hanlan v. Great Western Railway Co. | 1865, 6 B. and S. 484 . H. L. | 134 |
| Orr v. Mitchell | 1893, 20 R., H. L., 27 | 625 |
| Palmer v. Russell | 1871, 10 Macph. 185 | 210 |
| Paton v. Benhar Coal Co., Limited | 1885, 12 R. 538 . | 560, 657 |
| Paul v. Reid | F. C., Feb. 18, 1814 | 627 |
| Pearce Brothers v. Irons | 1869, 7 Macph. 571 | 262 |
| Pedie v. Grant | 1825, 1 W. and S. 716 | 922 |
| Perth, Earl of, v. Lady Willoughby de Eresby's Trustees | 1877, 5 R., H. L., 26 | 623 |
| Philipps v. Eyre | 1870, L. R., 6 Q. B. 1 | 70 |
| Phillips v. Innes | 1837, 2 Sh. and M'L. 465 H. L. | 89 |
| Philp's Executor v. Philp's Executor | 1894, 21 R. 482 | 499 |
| Pitcairn v. Pitcairn | 1870, 8 Macph. 604 | 472 |
| Postlethwaite v. Freeland | 5 App. Cas. 599 . H. L. | 128 |
| Primrose v. Milne | 1890, 17 R. 512 | 889 |
| Proctor v. Bennis | 1887, L. R., 36 Ch. Div. 740 | 102 |
| Pursell v. Elder | 1865, 3 Macph., H. L., 68 | 145 |
| Queen v. Allday | 1857, 7 E. and B. 799 | 280 |
| Queen v. Governors of the Poor of Kingston-upon-Hull | 1853, 2 E. and B. 182 | 280 |
| Raine v. Jobson, | [1901], A. C. 404 | 725 |
| Ramsay's Trustees v. Ramsay | 1876, 4 R. 243 | 819 |
| Raven v. Justices of Southampton | [1904], 1 K. B. 430 | 1019 |
| Reid v. Morison | 1893, 20 R. 510 | 253 |
| Reid v. P. R. Fleming & Co. | 1901, 3 F. 1000 | 685 |
| Rees v. Penrikyber Navigation Collieries Co. | [1903], 1 K. B. 259 | 117 |
| Reliance Mutual Life Assurance Society v. Halkett's Factor | 1891, 18 R. 615 | 338 |
| Rice v. Baxendale | 1861, 7 H. and N. 96 H. L. | 134 |
| Robertson v. Henderson | 1904, 6 F. 770 | 782 |
| Robertson v. Stewart | 1875, 2 R., H. L., 80 | 95 |
| Rogers v. Inland Revenue | 1879, 6 R. 1109 | 150 |
| Rogerson's Trustees v. Rogersons | 1865, 3 Macph. 684 | 579 |
| Rose v. Grant | 1868, 7 Macph. 309 | 162 |
| Rose v. M'Leod | 1824, 3 S. 79 | 634 |
| Rosevear China Clay Co. | 1879, L. R., Ch. D. 560 | 42 |
| Ross v. Dunlop | 1878, 5 R. 833 | 30 |
| Rossi v. Magistrates of Edinburgh | present vol., H. L., p. 85 | 245 |
| Rothesay, Magistrates of, v. Carse | 1903, 5 F. 383 | 378 |
| Rouse v. Dixon | [1904], 2 K. B. 628 | 536 |
| Roy's Trustee v. Colville & Drysdale | 1903, 5 F. 769 | 285 |
| Russell v. Sprot | 1845, 2 Broun, 385 . J. C. | 16 |
| Russell's Trustees | 1887, 14 R., 849 | 579 |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Salton, Lord, v. Advocate-General | 1860, 3 Macq. 659 | H.L. |
| Sands v. Meffan | 1829, 7 S. 290 | 6 |
| Scholfield v. Spooner | 1884, L. R., 26 Ch. D. 94 | H.L. |
| Seaman v. Netherclift | 1876, L. R., 2 C. P. D. 53 | |
| Sharp v. Wakefield | [1891], A. C. 173 | 101 |
| Sharples v. Yuill & Co. | 1905, present vol. p. 657 | 77 |
| Shepherd v. Henderson | 1881, 9 R., H. L., 1 | 66 |
| Simpson v. Corporation of Glasgow | 1902, 4 F. 611 | |
| Simpson v. Reid | 1902, 4 F., J. C., 62 | J.C. |
| Simpson v. Tod | 1824, 3 S. 150 | |
| Sinclair v. Clyne's Trustee | 1887, 15 R. 185 | |
| Skinner v. Adamson | 1842, 1 Broun, 67 | J.C. |
| Smart v. Magistrates of Dundee | 1797, 3 Pat. App. 606 | |
| Smith v. Galbraith | 1837, 15 S. 808, 1843, 5 D. 665 | H.L. |
| Sneddon v. Addie & Co. | 1904, 6 F. 992 | |
| Sprot's Trustees v. Sprot | 1830, 8 S. 712 | 35 |
| St Cuthberts v. Cramond | 1873, 1 R. 174 | |
| Standard Property Investment Co. v. Cowe | 1877, 4 R. 695 | 34 |
| Starkey v. Bank of England | [1903], A. C. 114 | H. L. |
| Steedman v. Steedman | 1887, 14 R. 682 | 35 |
| Steel v. Steel | 1888, 15 R. 896 | 91 |
| Stephen v. Paterson | 1865, 3 Macph. 571 | 63 |
| Stewart v. Agnew | 1823, 1 Sh. App. 413 | 20 |
| Stuart v. Moore | 1861, 23 D. 902 | 29 |
| Studd v. Cook | 1883, 10 R., H. L., 53 | 42 |
| Stewart v. Bunten | 1878, 5 R. 1108 | 59 |
| Stewart v. Lord Glenlyon | 1835, 13 S. 787 | 61 |
| Stirling v. Lang | 1830, 8 S. 638 | 84 |
| Stiven v. Watson | 1874, 1 R. 412 | 796 |
| Straiton Estate Co., Limited, v. Stephens | 1880, 8 R. 299 | 452 |
| Strang v. Steuart | 1866, 4 Macph., H. L., 5 | 710 |
| Strannigan v. Baird & Company | 1904, 6 F. 784 | 463 |
| Tancred, Arrol, & Co. v. Steel Co. of Scotland, Limited | 1890, 17 R., H. L., 31 | 44 585 |
| Taylor v. Dunlop | 1872, 11 Macph. 25 | 102 |
| Thomson v. Moore | 1890, 7 Pat. Cas. 325 | 476 |
| Thomson's Trustees v. Alexander | 1851, 14 D. 217 | 323 |
| Todd v. Dunlop | 2 Robinson's Appeals, 333 | 873 |
| Topping v. Rhind | 1904, 6 F. 666 | 960 |
| Trail v. Kelman & Co. | 1887, 15 R. 4 | 501 |
| Trego v. Hunt | [1896], A. C. 7 | 476 |
| Trotter v. Trotter | 1829, 3 W. and S. 407 | |
| Turnbull v. The Lambton Collieries, Limited | 1900, 16 Times Law Rep. 369 | 191 |
| Udny v. Udny | 1869, 7 Macph., H. L., 89 | 920 |
| United Horse Shoe and Nail Co. v. Stewart & Co. | 1888, 15 R., H. L., 45 | 104 939 |
| Unwin, William, re | 1882, 72 L. T. (O. S.) 388 | |
| Vincent v. Earl of Buchan | 1889, 16 R. 637 | 918 |
| Wallace v. Caldwell | 1894, 22 R. 43 | 889 |
| Wardlaw v. Wardlaw's Trustees | 1880, 7 R. 1066 | 579 |

| | | Page |
|---|---|---|
| Watson v. Earl of Seafield | 1870, 7 S. L. R. 327 | 662 |
| Watt's Trustees v. More | 1890, 17 R. 318 | 326 |
| Waygood v. Bennie | 1885, 12 R. 651 | 479 |
| Weir v. Pirie & Co. | 1898, 3 Com. Cases, 263 | 998 |
| White's Trustees v. Whyte | 1877, 4 R. 786 | 344 |
| Whyte v. Murray | 1888, 16 R. 95 | 774 |
| Williams v. Reynolds | 1865, 6 B. and S. 502 | H. L. 133 |
| Williamson v. Thomson | 1858, 3 Irv. 295 | J. C. 21 |
| Williamson v. Umphray | 1890, 17 R. 905 | 79 |
| Willison v. Petherbridge | 1893, 20 R. 976 | 663 |
| Wilmott v. Paton | [1902], 1 K. B. 237 | 723 |
| Wilson v. Merry & Cuninghame | 1868, 6 Macph., H L., 84 | 791 |
| Wink v. Speirs | 1868, 6 Macph. 657 | 846 |
| Wrigley v. Whittaker | [1902], A. C. 299 | 684 |
| Wright | 1701, M. 7429 | 1042 |
| Wright v. Smith | 1903, 6 F., J. C., 18 | J. C. 6 |
| Young v. Inland Revenue | 1875, 2 R. 925 | 150 |
| Young v. Gow | 1877, 4 R. 448 | 213 |
| Young v. Magistrates of Glasgow | 1891, 18 R. 825 | 1003 |
| Young v. North British Railway Co. | 1889, 14 R., H. L., 53 | 620 |
| Young's Trustees v. Young | 1892, 20 R. 22 | H. L. 97 |
| Yuill's Trustees v. Thomson | 1902, 4 F. 815 | 230 |

GEORGE ROBB & CO., THISTLE STREET, EDINBURGH.

13

14

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 062 687 053